Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I do not wish to consume the time of the House by discussing this bill. I will simply state the facts in this case, and then if the House chooses to reject the bill it can do so. The bill refers to certain compound-interest notes which were sent to New Orleans by mail. A record was taken of the numbers, and each note verified and certified to. There is no dispute in regard to the numbers.

There was a difference of opinion in the committee as to whether any relief should be granted under the circumstances or not. The bill, however, simply preserves the evidence in the case, and the Treasury Department, on the maturing of the compound-interest notes, the numbers all being preserved, will pay the notes to these parties. The bill simply preserves the evidence; and that being done, these parties may raise money upon the notes in advance of their payment. They would lose some sixty thousand dollars unless some such provision as this were made. There may be some doubt, and I confess I had doubts myself, whether, in the case of any of these short compound-interest notes—seven-thirties—which mature in three years, where, if the party losing them, can make out his evidence to the Department, he can collect the notes, we should furnish relief; but a majority of the committee were in favor of furnishing relief in this case.

All the bill amounts to is this, that six months after the maturity of these compound-interest notes the Government may pay them; as it would do without the bill; only the parties think that the passage of this bill will enable them to raise money in advance.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, in the first place, what is the amount involved in this bill?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The amount of the compound-interest notes shown to have been lost is $60,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. On what ground is the Government asked to pay for them? Is it because they were in the United States mail?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Simply because the evidence shows these notes were lost.

Mr. BINGHAM. How?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. In the United States mail.

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly; because they were transmitted in the United States mail.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is it proposed by this bill to establish the principle of making the Government of the United States the insurer for every dollar that is transmitted through the mail?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Not at all. The Government must pay these notes in two years; and the simple question is whether Congress shall furnish any present aid and relief. We do not propose that the Government shall pay these notes any sooner than if the bill should not pass.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think it is due to myself as well as to the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN,] to say that it is far from my purpose to insist here on what are known among lawyers as technicalities. But I want to know if the passage of this bill is to imply that the Government of the United States is to pay for every lost security of the Government in the absence of legal proof of the fact of its existence, in the first place, and in the second place of its ownership. I want to know if that is what is involved in this bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Before the Committee of Claims took any action in this case we went to the Treasury Department and submitted the evidence which had been laid before us, and they said that with that evidence they would be compelled to pay the notes when they should mature. They decided that question. Then the difficulty with the committee was whether, as the Department would pay these notes in a little more than two years, we should furnish any present relief. Some of the committee thought not, because the time was so short.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. I wish the House to pay a little attention to this matter of dollars and cents. In my opinion these notes are good in the hands of the holder. Should an innocent party present these notes at any time prior or subsequent to the date of their maturity, they would be good against the Government. Now, if the Government establishes by the passage of this bill the precedent of paying these notes because they have been lost, it will subject itself to the liability of paying them twice over, and there will be no remedy.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Such a precedent would ruin any Government.

Mr. PRICE. I know it is said that these parties propose, by the terms of this bill, to give security to indemnify the Government against loss. But I need not say to the gentlemen who compose this House that security these days amounts to just nothing at all; that a bond of security to pay twelve months after date, nine times out of ten amounts to nothing. Business men all understand this, and none better than the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] who reports this bill. Again, if we establish this precedent we are liable to have bills presented here to pay every man, woman, and child who may have sent or who may send a five-dollar note or a fifty-dollar note through the mail, and it is lost, and there is no reason in the world why we should not pass all those bills as well as this one. And if so, where will the matter end? I hope that for the safety of the Government this bill will either be withdrawn or voted down.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Personally I have no objection to this bill being voted down. But the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is mistaken in one thing; these notes are not a part of the circulation of the country.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. They read "pay the bearer."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. They are not a part of the circulating medium of the country. The Committee of Claims have decided that no compensation shall be made for the loss of any portion of the circulating medium of the country. Every one of these notes is on record, and no one can present any of them for payment without the Government being aware of it.

Mr. PRICE. That is true; but at the same time they are good in the hands of the holder. And they are also a part of the circulating medium of the country; whether so intended or not when issued, is another question. The fact is that they pass from hand to hand, payable to bearer, and are part of the circulation of the country.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. It is not a question of any very great importance. I want a vote on it, and therefore I call the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] to withdraw his call for the previous question, and let this bill be recommitted to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Very well. I have no objection to that. I withdraw the call for the previous question, and move that the bill be printed, and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT TO WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill to pay and discharge certain debts and expenditures to the corporation of the city of Washington.

The bill, which was read, proposes that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to pay to the proper authorities of the city of Washington the sum of $31,971 84, in full for all claims which the city of Washington now has against the United States, on account of moneys expended in improving the streets, avenues, alleys, and public grounds in the city of Washington, and for repairing any of the bridges crossing the Potomac river prior to May 5, 1864; provided that before payment of the sum appropriated the mayor of Washington city shall present to the Commissioner of Public Buildings an account embracing each item of charge which the city has against the United States for the expenditures referred to, which account the Commissioner shall certify to be correct and just.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to the point of order that this bill contains an appropriation, and must therefore be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

WILLIAM G. LEE.

Mr. McKEE, from the Committee of Claims, reported back House bill No. 629, for the benefit of William G. Lee, with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill, which was read, proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William G. Lee the sum of $28,428 80, in full payment of his claim against the United States on account of corn purchased by him in the department of Kentucky as agent of the quartermaster's department, under agreement made by him with Captain John A. Morris in 1864, which corn spoiled on his hands by reason of the Government failing to furnish transportation.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I raise the point of order that this bill contains an appropriation, and must, under the rule, go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order; and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. McKEE. I move, then, that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. By the order of the House, the regular business of the morning hour cannot be interrupted by any other business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SMITH, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate bills of the following titles:

An act (S. No. 180) for the relief of A. J. Gray;

An act (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repairs on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois;

An act (S. No. 275) for the relief of Cornelius Crowley; and

An act (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Mrs. Amarilla Cook.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 249) to establish a land office in the Territory of Idaho; and

An act (H. R. No. 342) in amendment of an act to promote the progress of the useful arts and the acts in amendment of and in addition thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a House bill of the following title, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 145) granting land to A. M. Jess, of Josephine county, Oregon.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 110) to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State.

ARMISTED T. M. FILLER.

Mr. McKEE, from the Committee of Claims, submitted an adverse report upon the petition of Armisted T. M. Filler; which was laid on the table.

FULLER AND FISHER.

Mr. THORNTON, from the Committee of Claims, reported a joint resolution to audit and pay the claim of Fuller & Fisher, of Missouri; which was read a first and second time.

The preamble of the resolution recites that the horses, coaches, stage property, and means of transportation of Messrs. Owen Fuller and Ulysses E. Fisher, mail contractors on mail route No. 106048, between Rolla and Springfield, in the State of Missouri, were impressed into the military service of the United States, and taken possession of and used by competent military authority, by reason of which a large amount of their property was captured by the enemy and lost to them.

The resolution authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Treasury to have the claim of Fuller & Fisher audited, and to pay them the amount that shall be found due for such losses, not exceeding the sum of $12,500.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The bill contains an appropriation, and under the rule must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. R. BECKLEY.

Mr. THORNTON, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim of J. R. Beckley; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The joint resolution makes an appropriation, and under the rule must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does not the rule require all bills and resolutions making appropriations to be referred by the Chair to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the question is raised. Such has been the uniform practice.

JAMES FITZGIBBON.

Mr. THORNTON, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of James Fitzgibbon; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. Speaker, I will state for the benefit of my colleague, that this is an appropriation of some five or six hundred dollars for the purpose of paying a chaplain whose commission was given on the 1st of March by Mr. Lincoln, and is among the papers, but by some mistake of the President's Private Secretary the commission did not reach him until the 1st of August. It was sent to Springfield, Missouri, instead of Springfield, Illinois, where he was on duty at Camp Butler. He has been paid only from the 1st of August, and this is to pay him from March to August, during which time he was doing duty.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. THORNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER stated the morning hour had expired.

KOONTZ VERSUS COFFROTH.

Mr. DAWES presented papers in the case of Koontz vs. Coffroth; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A POST ROUTE.

Mr. DEFREES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to establish a post route from Fort Wayne to Auburn, De Kalb county, Indiana; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

DUTY ON COPPER.

Mr. DRIGGS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means:

At a meeting of the House Committee on Mines and Mining held on Friday, June 22, 1866, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this committee respectfully recommend to the Committee of Ways and Means the necessity which in their opinion exists for an increased duty on foreign copper, with a view of securing to the home production fair and just protection, at least equal to that which was afforded previous to the war of the rebellion; and that in their opinion a duty of at least six cents per pound should be imposed upon foreign ingot copper, and not less than three cents per pound on the pure copper in foreign ores.

Attest: J. H. RILEY,
Clerk of Committee on Mines and Mining.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

Mr. MERCUR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company;" which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

DEATH OF HON. JAMES HUMPHREY.

Mr. DARLING. Mr. Speaker, the mournful duty of announcing to this House the decease of JAMES HUMPHREY, late Representative from the third district of the State of New York, has been assigned to me by my colleagues. He was my chosen friend and companion, and my friendship and respect for him led to the most intimate and cherished associations. With this great and sudden affliction resting upon my heart, I feel how utterly inadequate any words of mine will be to properly portray the ability he displayed as a statesman, his talents as a lawyer, or his virtues as a Christian gentleman. Although I had long since marked with approbation his public career, my personal acquaintance with him commenced only with our election as members of this Congress. I learned to love him as I learned to know him; and now, as I look around and miss his cordial greeting and friendly smile, I realize how great a void is here.

A few brief hours have elapsed since I stood at his open grave and assisted in paying the last tribute of respect to all that remained of him on earth. From his home, replete with all the evidences of his cultivated taste and refinement, where sat a noble-hearted woman bowed down with a grief no human power can heal, two daughters and a son mourning a departed father, we bore him to the church of which he was a conspicuous and consistent member. There the talent, the wealth, and the representative men of two great cities were assembled to do honor to his memory and to mingle their tears with those of thousands from the humbler walks of life who had been cheered by his smile, counseled by his wisdom, and aided by his benevolence.

JAMES HUMPHREY was a nobleman, titled by his Creator; he bore his patent upon his open, manly face; he upheld it by his honorable, consistent record and his pure and spotless life. He was a martyr, too, and died, like a knight of old, with his armor girded for the fight, and struggling for the supremacy of those principles which were dearer to him than life itself.

Although enfeebled by disease of many years' duration, and daily suffering patiently without repining, he sought oblivion of personal afflictions in his devotion to his public duties. The gentleness of his character, the courtesy of his deportment, the clearness of his analytical mind, the polish of his manners, the ready attention he gave to all who approached him, the absence of the peevishness which often accompanies illness, were evident to all who were brought in contact with him, even when suffering most. If there was a negation of self in his life, there was also a spirit of self-immolation in his death. Feeble in health, and debilitated by the effects of the climate, he had sat here the long, weary months of a session which, when future history is written, will be looked back to as not the least, if not the most, important of the American Congress; rarely claiming the attention of this House as a speaker, but when he did so, commanding its respect by the elegance of his diction and the soundness of his thought.

His modesty and small appreciation of his own abilities prevented a more extensive claim upon the attention of the House. It was his friends only who were aware that with less diffidence and a more powerful physique he would have taken a prominent part in the debates of the session. Constant in his place in the House and on important committees, he was faithful and diligent in attention to his duties, and his vote was ever recorded on the side of freedom and the largest humanity. His devotion to his country throughout the rebellion, as a Representative and a citizen, were proverbial; when it was suppressed, his efforts were given to restore an enduring peace and prosperity. During the pendency of an important question, upon which he desired to record his vote with the majority of this House, although his physical condition would have precluded attention to private interests, he hastened to Washington to participate in the final vote.

On Wednesday, the 18th of this month, he left his residence for this Capitol, which he was destined never again to behold. On his route he was seized with a paroxysm of pain more agonizing and intense than anything he had ever before experienced. At Wilmington, in Delaware, unable to proceed further, he stopped to obtain relief. After a night of intense suffering he made the attempt to resume his journey. His enfeebled frame refused to respond to the promptings of his mind. Still hopeful of resuming his seat here, unwilling to return, and yet more unwilling to alarm his family by communicating his condition, he lingered at Wilmington until Friday morning, the 15th instant, surrounded by strangers, with no familiar hand to administer to his sufferings. Finally, anticipating a fatal termination of the attack, he procured the assistance of an attendant and retraced his steps toward home; to that home, now desolate, so soon to be left for a nobler and happier mansion.

That he was firmly impressed with a conviction that he was on his final journey and that the scenes of earth were as soon to pass from before his fading eye-sight as the landscape that was flitting by the window of the car in which he rode, was evident from the fact that he repeatedly impressed upon his attendant the importance of remembering his name and his residence.

He reached his home as the setting sun was gilding spire and dome of that beautiful city which had known him so long and honored him so often. His family physician being summoned expressed no immediate apprehension. At eight o'clock he had so far rallied as to reach his bedroom and prepare himself for rest.

To his devoted wife who watched over him he expressed his conviction that death was near, and said that to him it had no terrors, it was only a sleep, and that he was but a passenger on that train in which those he loved soon would follow to be reunited at the termination of life's journey. Shortly after midnight he raised himself on his pillow and vainly sought to recognize his wife faithfully sitting at his side; after a brief interval, again raising himself he exclaimed, "I faint," "I faint;" and without a struggle or a groan the gentle, manly spirit of JAMES HUMPHREY was wafted into the presence of his Maker.

Mr. Speaker, as an evidence of our appreciation of the loss this House and the country has sustained in the death of this upright Representative and pure and excellent man, I offer the following resolutions, and move their adoption:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has learned with sincere sorrow of the decease of Hon. JAMES HUMPHREY, of the city of Brooklyn, and a member of this House from the third congressional district of the State of New York.

Resolved, That the sympathies of this House be, and they are hereby, tendered to the widow, family, and relatives of the deceased in our mutual affliction and bereavement.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be instructed to communicate a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as an appropriate expression of respect for the memory and character of the deceased the members of the House will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty, a painful and melancholy one, of making a few remarks on the unexpected death of my late lamented colleague, JAMES HUMPHREY. If in these remarks I should happen to touch upon some of the points which have been so eloquently and feelingly portrayed by the honorable gentleman who has preceded me, I hope you will pardon repetition. When, on the 15th instant, I attended the funeral of Hon. Moses F. Odell, his predecessor from the third district of New York, a gentleman honored and respected throughout this land for his many virtues and for his services in this body during the most trying period of our national existence, little did I think that his successor was then on the confines of eternity, and that in the brief space of five days I would again deem it my duty to visit the chambers of the dead and be present at the performance of the last sad rites which we pay to the departed.

Thus two men, a predecessor and a successor to seats in this Hall, have been stricken down in the prime of their lives, in their days of usefulness, and we are left to mourn their loss. It is a reminder to us of the uncertainty of life, of the certainty of death, and of the necessity of being always prepared, for who can tell which of our number will be the next victim of the fell destroyer.

JAMES HUMPHREY, a son of Rev. Herman Humphrey, president of Amherst College, was born at Fairfield, Connecticut, in 1811, and was therefore at the time of his death in his fifty-fifth year. He graduated at the college over which his father presided when only twenty years old, and after preparing himself in the study of law at Yale College, he took up his residence in Louisville, Kentucky, where he practiced his profession for two years. In 1838 he left that city and removed to Brooklyn, where he has since resided, opening a law office in New York.

An oration which he delivered shortly after arriving in Brooklyn was the means of first directing public attention to his ability. In politics Mr. HUMPHREY was an old-line Whig, and he made his first entrée in public life as alderman in the first ward of the city of his chosen residence. He was afterward sent to the Legislature, and finally selected by his party as the legal adviser of the city. In 1858 he was elected in what was then known as the second district of New York as a Representative in Congress, and was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and of the committee of thirty-three on the rebellious States. In 1860, 1862, and 1864, he was the candidate of his party for the same position, but in the first two named elections he was defeated by Mr. Odell, but was successful in the last, Mr. Odell having declined a renomination.

Mr. HUMPHREY's nominations and elections show how highly his worth and abilities were appreciated by the people among whom he resided and to whom he was best known. They deeply feel his loss, which has occurred at a period when he was in the highest vigor of his intellect, and when from his experience he was calculated to become more and more useful to the public and to attain a higher and nobler destiny for himself. He was debarré in consequence of long-continued ill health, although his abilities were of a high order, from taking a very prominent part in congressional business. His honesty and integrity were of the highest order; he was a high-toned gentleman, affable and courteous to all with whom he came in contact, and commanded the respect not only of those with whom he agreed in political opinions, but also of those with whom he differed.

Finally, in all the relations of life, as a husband, father, Christian, citizen, and legislator, he has left an example worthy of imitation, and no man in the community in which he was known will go to his final rest more respected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I first made the acquaintance of Hon. JAMES HUMPHREY at the opening of the Thirty-Sixth Congress, in the month of December, 1859. That Congress has become historic, not only from the protracted and turbulent struggle for the election of a Speaker, but from the other fact that so many of its members, with treason on their lips and in their hearts, left our Halls with insult and defiance to wage war upon a Government they had sworn to protect and defend. Mr. HUMPHREY's first election was to the Thirty-Sixth Congress. Though a new member, he was placed upon one of the foremost committees of the House, the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This committee was composed of men well known in the history of the country, and four of whom have so soon passed away. That distinguished statesman and orator of Ohio, the late Thomas Corwin, was the chairman. Mr. Barlingame, our present minister to China, and Mr. Joy Morris, our present minister resident at Constantinople, were members of the committee. Barksdale, of Mississippi, and Branch, of North Carolina, afterward rebel generals, who fell on the field of battle fighting against their country, were members. Mr. Porcher Miles, of South Carolina, late one of the most prominent members of the rebel congress, was on the committee, and whose career has been in marked contrast to another member of it, Hon. Joshua Hill, of Georgia, who, with courageous patriotism, kept his honor and faithful among the faithless, remained true to his country and his flag. Mr. Royce, of Vermont, an able man and a worthy son of the Green Mountain State, completed the number of members that made up that distinguished committee.

At the opening of the second session of the Congress he was appointed the member from the State of New York on the celebrated committee of thirty-three, being one from each State on the "perilous condition of the country." His appointment on a committee of so much importance to represent the Empire State was a well-merited compliment to his high character, his firmness, and his patriotism. His speech during that session on the state of the country is well remembered by all of the old members of the House as an effort of remarkable power and eloquence, and it at once placed him in the front rank of the able men of the House.

Retiring to private life at the close of the Thirty-Sixth Congress, Mr. HUMPHREY was in the fall of 1864 elected to the present Congress, and it was my good fortune to be associated with him on the Committee on Commerce of this House. He brought to the discharge of his duties on that committee great intelligence and ability and a thorough practical knowledge of the commercial questions coming before us. As the session wore on it became painfully evident to his associates on the committee that an insidious and treacherous disease had marked him for its victim, though he kept unimpaired the vigor of his intellect, his cheerful disposition, and his kind temper. While his health was such as to inspire the gravest apprehensions on the part of his friends, I did not anticipate that he was in any immediate danger, and hence during my recent absence from the House I learned with surprise and grief of his sudden death.

My acquaintance with Mr. HUMPHREY led me to esteem him most highly. He was a man of the purest and most exemplary character. Of his beautiful and blameless private life his colleagues have fitly spoken. To a cultivated intellect and scholarly attainments he united the manners and deportment of a most polished gentleman. As a lawyer, he was able, upright, and conscientious; as a legislator, he was intelligent, incorruptible, and vigilant; and his patriotism and love of country challenged the respect of all loyal hearts. Recognizing his genuine virtues, his great qualities of mind and heart, his services to his country and his State, I am glad to have this opportunity to pay a humble tribute to the memory of a good citizen, a faithful public servant, and an honest man.

Mr. DAVIS. I have known my colleague, Mr. Speaker, for nearly thirty years, or since the time of his connection with the eminent law firm of Butler, Barney & Humphrey, of the city of New York. I knew his father. His father and my own were warm personal friends. I felt, from the time of my acquaintance with the son, an attachment which may have been warmer, perhaps, in consequence of the friendship which existed between my father and his. His father, Rev. Dr. Humphrey, was a man of eminent intellectual ability and culture, and it might have been expected that the son should inherit the qualities which that father possessed, and trained under such a father should exhibit in life that degree of culture which he was capable of inspiring.

But it will be my purpose to speak of Mr. HUMPHREY in respect to the traits of character by which he was distinguished and for which he was beloved rather than of the incidents of his life.

As might be anticipated from the peculiar advantages of education to which I have alluded, our departed friend, gifted by nature with fine intellectual abilities, was remarkable not only for classic attainment but for refined literary taste. His acquaintance with the languages, with the productions of poets, philosophers, and writers on varied subjects, was so accurate that he was often referred to as the arbiter for the settlement of questions of authorship. I am confident, that had his life been devoted to literature rather than to law, he would have taken high rank in a department where failure is far more frequent than success.

In giving expression to this opinion, I am by no means insensible to his conceded merit in the legal profession. He possessed many of the qualifications essential to a legal adviser and practitioner. First and foremost he was proverbially an honest man, desirous of knowing the right, and then of doing it. He believed that law was instituted in the interests of justice, and that those who were practitioners at its bar were bound, so far as human infirmity would permit, to prevent its perversion to the purposes of oppression or wrong. He regarded the law as a wise agency for the enforcement of rights and the redress of injuries, and while he felt it to be a duty to guard carefully and well the just rights of his client, he discarded in toto that miserable fallacy which has too often brought reproach upon the profession, that a lawyer was bound to do everything for a client which the technicalities of the law might permit; but was guided by the nobler and higher principle that his relations to his client bound him to no act and no service which, in his own behalf, he might not perform without dishonor or self-reproach. With this sentiment controlling his professional career from its opening to its close, giving color to his counsels as well as direction to his action, it may reasonably as well as truthfully be supposed that Mr. HUMPHREY enjoyed the highest personal respect and confidence of those who were his patrons.

But their confidence reposed not on this ground alone. He brought to his professional engagements a rare degree of plain, practical common sense, a power of discriminating between the true and the false, between the plausible only and that which was both plausible and practical, between the interests of his clients and their prejudices, between that which was technically legal, and that which was morally wrong. And beyond this, he gave to the cases with which he was intrusted a patient and careful investigation, applying to the decision of the questions involved the acumen of a sound judgment and a knowledge of legal principles derived from severe studies, continued from early life to the period when failing health required the abandonment of professional labor. There is no profession in which frankness, kindness, a manly bearing, and a courteous deportment contribute more toward success than the profession of the law. The angry collisions of advocates before a jury or of counsel at the bar may be pastime for an audience, but they advance in no degree the dignity of a profession, the interests of clients, or the ends of justice.

Mr. HUMPHREY, so far as I may speak of him from professional intercourse or from professional reputation, always avoided these controversies, and by his calmness and equanimity often gained for his client what another might have lost by indiscretion and passion. It will be needless for me to speak here of the attractive modesty which characterized our friend. It was ever present in his professional efforts, in his social intercourse, and in his public life; and while this quality denied his associates here of the benefit of his counsels publicly expressed, it doubtless added force to the words he uttered in personal intercourse with his friends.

It was my privilege to know Mr. HUMPHREY for many years, not intimately, but sufficiently well to speak of him in terms of the deepest personal respect and regard, and I may add that the most favorable impressions created by our intercourse have been confirmed by the concurrent sentiments of all who knew him. He was a good man. He was a Christian.

Life to him was no unmeaning term. Its high purpose was ever before him. God inspired it, not to be spent in idleness, not to be passed in thoughtless pleasure, not that it might be devoted to selfish gains, or to inordinate ambition. He gave us life that we might perform its duties to Him who gave it, and to those around us, who with us share its blessings and its trials, and to ourselves that we might by the appropriate use of its privileges be prepared for a still nobler existence.

Mr. HUMPHREY was not, in the popular sense, an advocate. He seldom, when it could be avoided, engaged in the trial of jury causes, or in the argument of cases in bench. But whenever he spoke, his efforts were characterized by clearness of thought, by great judgment in the arrangement of his argument, by research in the precedents of the courts, and by eminent fairness and truthfulness in the statement of his facts. His forte was that rather of a judicious and wise counselor, whose opinions, prepared and given in the privacy of his counsel chamber, were almost invariably found reliable.

Our friend lived with the knowledge of life's purposes. No absorbing avarice cursed his gains of honest accumulation; no heartless selfishness bade him forget that the poor and dependent had claims upon his bounty; no pampered pride taught him to thank God that he was better than other men; but recognizing, in humility, his dependence for all things on the great Giver of all good, he sought to minister to the wants of those around him, to aid the oppressed, to comfort the mourner, to bind up the broken heart, to promote peace, order, and virtue; and by his own example to teach to others that duty performed meets reward in this life, and inspires hope and confidence in the life to come. My colleague, who has so well portrayed the last hours of our friend, assured us that the approach of death brought to him no apprehension or alarm. Why should it?

True, human nature, linked by the mysterious organism of bone and muscle, of artery and vein, of nerves and flesh and blood, with that still more mysterious creation, impalpable, intangible, and invisible, that we call soul, may shrink from the physical suffering which oft accompanies the rupture of the tie between these mysteries; it may start back appalled from the deep, dark grave and dread to enter it. Yet what is death but the executor of that eternal law of the Creator which bids the body decay and perish because it is mortal, and bids the soul depart from it because the soul is immortal?

Death is but a process of life, and to the Christian the grave but the portal to a new home, illumined by the presence of the Creator and made happy by His smile.

Who, sir, that, like the friend we mourn, performing through life the Christian's duty with the Christian's faith, might not in dying exclaim with the Apostle, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

It would be alike presumptuous and profane in me to claim perfection for any man, and I doubt not that Mr. HUMPHREY, like all others, was marked by human weakness and infirmity. But we can judge him by no perfect standard. We must compare him as we knew him with other men as we know them; and where, sir, shall we find one who will better bear a comparison with others.

Who in this Hall, claiming for himself the highest rectitude of motive in all his actions, and desiring exemption from all prejudice or passion, dare stand unblushing in this presence and listen to the history of his secret and inner life as truth has graven it upon his own memory.

While, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I know that our friend was afflicted with the infirmities to which all men are in greater or less degree subject, I think I may say that his character presented a rare combination of qualities, so adjusted, so counterbalanced, so symmetrical, so attractive in life, and so beautiful in death, that the blemishes which a cynic scrutiny might reveal, become invisible through the tears which we shed upon his tomb.

Death, sir, has not yet finished his mission in this Hall. He has entered it before; he will enter it again. He asks the assent of no door-keeper. He awaits no "regular order." Alone, he suspends your rules, strikes down his victim, and bears him from your presence. Who next may be touched by that icy finger which freezes the coursing life-blood, God only knows; but from his tomb who so recently went out from our midst to return no more there comes to-day the monition, "Be ye ready."

This duty, enjoined by Revelation, was suggested, in the heathen philosophy of Persia, in the beautiful words addressed by a father to his son:

"On parent knees, a naked new-born child,
Weeping thou sat'st while all around thee smiled;
So live, that sinking in thy last long sleep,
Calm thou mayst smile while all around thee weep."

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at two o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:
By Mr. DONNELLY: The memorial of Commander Benjamin Moore Dove, of the United States Navy, asking that he be restored to his proper rank in the Navy.

By Mr. GOODYEAR: The petition of Horace L. Emery, praying for the passage of a joint resolution authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to receive, and decide upon its merits, an application for the extension of the patent for the endless chain horse-power.

By Mr. MERCUR: The petition of 38 citizens of Esby, Columbia county, Pennsylvania, asking for such a change in the tariff laws as will protect the labor of American citizens.

By Mr. McCLURG: A claim in favor of John Boehm, of Missouri, for $2,153.

By Mr. PAINE: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, in favor of bridging the Mississippi at Winona.

By Mr. WINDOM: The memorial of E. H. Crittendon, and 90 others, for an appropriation for the relief of E. L. Drake.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 25, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. POMEROY presented the petition of S. J. Bowen, C. Storrs, Charles King, and other citizens of Washington, praying that the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia may be authorized to appoint an additional number of notaries public; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON presented the memorial of William H. McGill, of Beaufort, South Carolina, president of Council No. 4, Union League of America, praying that the payment of the direct tax on the confiscated lands of persons who were engaged in the rebellion, may be suspended for the period of one year from the time that the several amounts may become due; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of Norman Wiard, praying for relief for losses sustained by him under a contract with the Navy Department for fifteen-inch guns, which was annulled by the Department, as he alleges, without sufficient cause; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of Norman Wiard, praying for relief for losses sustained by him under a contract with the War Department for semi-steel fifty-pounder guns; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented the memorial of Norman Wiard, praying for compensation for expenses incurred by him in delivering steamers for the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented the memorial of Norman Wiard, praying for compensation for alterations made by him in certain iron-clad steam transports for the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented three petitions of colored citizens of Wilmington, North Carolina, praying for the establishment of a Bureau of Education; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of E. A. Vervalen, of Haverstraw, New York, praying that the Commissioner of Patents may be allowed to examine testimony in relation to the extension of his patent for a brick machine, which was issued June 29, 1852; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Margaret M. Ransom, widow of the late Colonel T. B. Ransom, who was killed at the battle of Chapultepec, in Mexico, in 1847, and mother of the late Major General T. E. G. Ransom, who died in active service during the campaign of Atlanta, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present a memorial from the Governor of the State of Michigan, asking commutation for the Michigan first cavalry, or rather a letter from the Governor, asking me to bring to the notice of Congress the facts connected with the case, and transmitting some papers in relation to it. The Michigan first cavalry reenlisted as a veteran regiment, after having served three years. At the close of the rebellion, instead of being discharged, as they expected to be, they were marched to Utah. A short time since the regiment was assembled and notified that the men might receive their discharge in Utah or be retained a few months longer in service, when they would be marched on foot, across the plains, back to their homes. They were given the option to receive their discharge there in Utah or to remain in the service, and be then marched home when it should suit the convenience of the Government. The men being homesick, having been detained more than a year after they supposed their term of service had expired, and expecting commutation as in other cases should they accept the then muster-out, accepted the muster and were mustered out in Utah, and came home penniless. It cost them some two hundred dollars to obtain their transportation from Utah home. They came home destitute and ragged, after four or five years spent in the military service of the United States. They think and I think that they are justly entitled to a fair commutation for their transportation home. I am requested by the Governor to call the attention of Congress to this matter, and I move that the letter of the Governor and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia; and I trust that the committee will report at an early day favorably on the case.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER subsequently said: Since presenting the papers in the case of the first Michigan cavalry I have received a letter from General Sherman, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF THE MISSISSIPPI,
ST. LOUIS, June 22, 1866.

SIR: General O. B. Wilcox spoke to me in Detroit a few days since of the hardship and seeming injustice experienced by certain Michigan volunteers discharged in Utah, and he now writes that he is satisfied the men have been paid all that the law allows, and that a petition will be made Congress for proper relief, which he wishes me to favor. I will do so with the utmost pleasure, and beg that you will lay this letter before the Military Committee as evidence of my feelings in the matter.

The specific facts of the case do not come to me officially, but I think I know the facts. In Utah, having no cavalry, we retained some horses and equipments to mount infantry in case of need. Therefore the Michigan cavalry could not bring in their horses. The Government does not give to a discharged soldier actual transportation back to his place of enlistment, or mileage, but presumes he will march back at the rate of twenty miles a day. Therefore the paymaster on making final payment computes the time it will take the soldier to march to the place of enlistment and pays him his pay, subsistence, and clothing allowance. Now, to march in from Utah is a very different thing from footing it through a settled country, and instead of simply affording relief in the case in point I would like to see some general rule, suited to the changed state of facts, to be applied to all cases of the kind. I will not venture to suggest any, as my experience is that you gentlemen prefer to make your own laws.

It is often to the interest of our remote Territories that volunteers should be discharged there, as many want to remain as settlers, and to transport them back home for discharge and pay would cost them individually much money and the loss of a whole season.

With much respect, your obedient servant,

W. T. SHERMAN,
Major General.

Hon. Mr. CHANDLER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The letter was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I present the memorial of the president and board of directors of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation chartered several years ago by the State of Texas for the purpose of building a railroad from the eastern line of that State to the Pacific coast, to run as nearly as practicable along the thirty-second parallel of latitude. They represent that Texas, with a high appreciation of the importance and national character of the work, endowed them with a munificent land grant, and guaranteed a loan in money to the amount of $6,000 per mile for every mile to be built in that State, a distance of eight hundred miles. Citizens of more than twenty States are subscribers to its stock, thus attesting the national character and importance of the company. The executive and legislative departments of the Government have examined and admitted the merits of this route, both Houses of Congress having formerly passed a bill largely endowing them with grants of land and money, but owing to a disagreement between the two Houses on some immaterial point of detail, delayed the consummation of the measure into a law, and the rebellion intervening destroyed for the time the hopes of the enterprise. They now pray that Congress may revive and reenact the measures so carefully matured by the Thirty-Sixth Congress in aid of the Southern Pacific railroad, with only such modifications as the changed condition of the country may require.

I move that this memorial be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 680) for the relief of certain officers in the volunteer service who failed to make proper returns of stores and other public property, have instructed me to report it adversely. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 456) to extend the benefits of section four of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866, approved March 3, 1865, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolutions, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 486) for the relief of Catharine Welsh;

A bill (H. R. No. 641) for the relief of Charles M. Stout, late a second lieutenant in company B, seventh regiment Pennsylvania Reserve corps;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) for the relief of Joseph Parkins; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 164) for the relief of Fontaine T. Fox, jr.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 287) to provide for the construction of a wagon road from Boise City, in the Territory of Idaho, to Susanville, in California, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 352) granting to A. Sutro the right of way and granting other privileges to aid in the construction of a draining and exploring tunnel to the Comstock lode, in the State of Nevada, reported it with an amendment.

CHARLES M. BLAKE.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Charles M. Blake, have instructed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage; and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that there be paid to Charles M. Blake six months' salary as chaplain in the Army, in full for the pay of which he was deprived while waiting investigation into charges preferred against him, at the close of which investigation he was restored to his position by the Secretary of War.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARK AND PRESIDENTIAL MANSION.

Mr. POLAND submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to inquire whether a tract of land of not less than three hundred and fifty acres, adjoining, or very near this city, can be obtained for a reasonable price, for a park and site for a presidential mansion, which shall combine convenience of access, healthfulness, good water, and capability of adornment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of Mrs. Eleanor C. Ransom; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 172) for the relief of John M. Broome, and others, the band of twelfth Kentucky infantry.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KIRKWOOD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 391) to aid the development of the mineral and agricultural resources of Montana; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 392) for the relief of the heirs of George Faber; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that leave of absence be granted to Mr. Dixon for the remainder of the session. I desire to state, as his colleague is in the chair, that this leave is asked for on account of sickness; and while I am happy to say that he is convalescent, it is feared that it may not be prudent for him to return this session.

Leave was granted.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 21st instant, the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 57) for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Joshua D. Todd, late of the United States Navy, deceased;

An act (S. No. 127) for the relief of Jonathan W. Gordon, late major in the eleventh regiment of infantry;

An act (S. No. 174) to establish a hydrographic office in the Navy Department;

An act (S. No. 202) for the relief of Elisha W. Dunn, a paymaster in the United States Navy;

An act (S. No. 230) to reimburse the State of West Virginia for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and paying military forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion;

An act (S. No. 278) for the relief of Captain John H. Crowell, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army;

An act (S. No. 307) authorizing the restoration of Commander Charles Hunter to the Navy;

An act (S. No. 360) to regulate the appointment of paymasters in the Navy, and explanatory of an act for the better organization of the pay department of the Navy;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) referring the petition and papers in the case of Joseph Nock to the Court of Claims; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 85) explanatory of and in addition to the act of May 5, 1864, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in Wisconsin."

And on the 22d instant he approved and signed the following act and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 225) for the relief of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 109) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander Richard L. Law, United States Navy, to the active list from the reserved list; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) for the relief of Samuel Norris.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 491) to remove the office of surveyor general of the States of Iowa and Wisconsin to Plattsmouth, Nebraska—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of Mrs. Eleanor C. Ransom—to the Committee on Claims.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 172) for the relief of John M. Broome, and others, the band of twelfth Kentucky infantry—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

PAYMENT FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

Mr. POLAND. I move to take up Senate bill No. 217.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 217) to provide for the payment for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HENDRICKS, to add the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the second and third sections of the act of Congress approved July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," be so amended that all claims of loyal citizens in the States not in rebellion at the date of the passage of the act aforesaid for quartermaster's stores or commissary stores furnished to or taken by the Army of the United States, under and by direction of any officer acting at the time under competent authority, may be submitted to the Quartermaster General and Commissary General, with such proof as each claimant can present of the facts in his case. And it shall be the duty of these officers to cause such claims to be examined, and, after an investigation thereof, to report each case, with their action thereon, to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for final adjudication and settlement. That the provisions of this act shall extend to such persons only as were loyal at the inception of their claims and have so continued to the present time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The amendment which has just been read is one which I was requested to present and which I think is right. It has just two effects. One is to allow claims for property that was taken by an officer having competent authority to do it, but not technically in the commissary or quartermaster's service, as in many cases where a general himself ordered property to be taken. This amendment provides that where it was taken and used by the Army it shall be paid for. The other effect is that these cases shall go to the Third Auditor's office and be examined like any other cases of claims for property against the Treasury. This amendment is confined to the States that were not in rebellion; it does not extend as far as the bill extends in its other provisions.

Mr. POLAND. The first object of this amendment to remedy the acts of the Departments in relation to their construction of the statute of July 4, 1864, as to who was a proper officer, seems to me to be quite unnecessary. This bill is almost in exact words the act of July 4, 1864, providing for payment for quartermaster's stores and subsistence furnished to the Army by loyal persons in loyal States; but this bill extends the provisions of that act over the whole country, including the rebel States as well as the rest of the country, and it makes further alteration. By the act of 1864 claims for supplies that were furnished by persons in the loyal States were to be audited by the Quartermaster General for quartermaster's stores, and by the Commissary General of Subsistence for subsistence stores, and their action was to be reported to the Third Auditor of the Treasury. By the action of the Departments the findings of the Quartermaster General and the Commissary General of Subsistence were treated as conclusive, and the duty of the Third Auditor as merely ministerial. This bill provides that all claims above $500, instead of being presented to the Quartermaster General and the Commissary General of Subsistence, shall go to the Court of Claims. The committee regarded that as a safer tribunal, both for the claimants and for the Government, than that they should be audited by some subordinate in some of the Executive departments.

Now, in reference to the first objection that this amendment is designed to meet, it is true, as I understand, that in the Quartermaster General's office they hold that the language of the law, "taken by a proper officer, or receipted for by a proper officer," means an officer of the quartermaster's department; and they have held that although these supplies may have been taken by a military officer or by his command, still, if he was not an officer of that particular department, he was not a "proper officer," within the meaning of the act. I am very free to say that I think that is an erroneous construction of the law, and that when this bill is passed, if it shall be passed, and these cases for larger amounts are presented to the Court of Claims, an entirely different construction will be put upon it, and it will receive the construction which this amendment proposes to give it, that wherever supplies were taken by virtue of the direction or command of an officer having competent authority to give the order, he will be held to be a "proper officer" within the meaning of the statute.

A word, sir, in reference to the merits of this bill. Its object is simply to pay loyal persons in the rebel States for supplies that have actually been received and used by our Army. I am aware that some gentlemen have expressed fears in reference to this bill, that if it should pass, some disloyal person in the rebel States may get pay for something that he has furnished the Army. Of course it will be necessary that very great caution should be exercised in administering this law. It undoubtedly will be true that persons in the southern States who were really disloyal will attempt to prove that they were loyal and get claims allowed under it. The administration of it will necessarily require strict examination; but it seems to me that this is really no argument against having a law of this kind. The Government certainly should not decline to pay for supplies which our Army have had and used, furnished by persons who were really loyal, and loyal in those States where it was at the peril of their lives to be loyal, and who have been left destitute and in a suffering condition by the war. I think the amendment that has been offered is unnecessary; that the bill will really accomplish all that the honorable Senator from Indiana desires to accomplish by his amendment, without having that adopted; and I fear that the adoption of it would jeopardize the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not press his amendment at the present time. I think we had better pass the bill as it is. I do not know but that an amendment may be needed hereafter, but we are making in some sort an experiment now, and we should be very careful with these claims. I am in favor of the bill as it stands. I am, and have been for a long time, in favor of paying the loyal citizens of the disloyal States who have just claims against the Government. I think the true way of paying them is at the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims has much greater facilities for examining testimony and thoroughly investigating a case than a Department can have, or a committee of Congress can have. If, by and by, when we have gone along for sometime and seen what we can accomplish in this way, there shall be need of further legislation, I have no doubt Congress will be willing to supply it. But there is a little hesitancy now on the part of many Senators and Representatives to go very largely into these claims in the southern States. We had better proceed cautiously. We had better have our construction of the law very strict rather than loose at first, in order to pay the claims that ought to be paid. I think it is better that the bill should pass as it is, and if hereafter the court shall give a wrong construction to it, we can make the proper amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator would propose an amendment to the bill advocated by the Senator from Vermont, I would be entirely satisfied; and that is, to let the cases under $500, which have yet to be examined before the Department, notwithstanding this bill, go directly to the accounting officers. I think it is an error that the Commissary General and the Quartermaster General should become accounting officers. It is not according to the system that we have adopted. The Quartermaster General is not a proper accounting officer of the Government. Where a claim is presented to him, and he rejects it—

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will pardon me, I think it had better go, in the first instance, to the Quartermaster General or the Commissary General for examination, and then go to the accounting officers.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is what I propose. I think they ought to go through the quartermaster's office with a view to such suggestions about allowing them and such information as that department can give; but I do not think the Quartermaster General ought to be the final authority to adjudicate a claim.

Mr. CLARK. I was for fixing the amount at which all claims should go to the Court of Claims at $300. I prefer that; but many Senators thought that would be a little too strict, and that the accounting officers of the Treasury or the proper officers of the Department might settle all claims up to $500. I do not know but that I would be entirely willing, if these claims can go in the first instance and be certified at the quartermaster's or commissary department, then to let them go to the accounting officers of the Treasury and there be finally adjudicated. I have no desire or preference for one tribunal over another, except to have these cases thoroughly examined and allowed only upon strict proof; because there will be so many of them, unless we do make strict proof and be very thorough in our examination, the danger is that they will all be swept away or the Treasury depleted; one of these two things must happen.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I presume there are a great many citizens in the State of Indiana interested in this question, and therefore I am anxious to see it properly disposed of. There was an invasion of our State by a cavalry force under John Morgan, and in the pursuit of that force the proceedings were somewhat irregular, and to support the Army the means of the people were taken to a very considerable extent, and no sufficient provision is made for their payment. The corn, hay, oats, &c., to support the cavalry force in pursuit of John Morgan were sometimes taken without the intervention of a quartermaster's officer or any officer of the commissary department. The man whose corn, oats, and hay went to feed the horses of the Army ought to be paid, but General Meigs will not pay them. I am not willing that he shall be the final authority upon any such question where the people of Indiana are interested.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will see that there is considerable difficulty in the case which he suggests. A great many things might be destroyed that would come under the head, perhaps, of damage. Provender, &c., taken by a proper officer for the support of the Army should be paid for. So far as I am concerned, and perhaps the Senator from Vermont will consent to that course, I think the bill should lie over a little while to allow the Senator from Indiana and the Senator having charge of it to confer a little, and see if something cannot be agreed upon that will be satisfactory to both. It is desirable that only a proper bill should be passed with proper safeguards for the Treasury.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I want to state to the Senator, if he thinks I am in favor of letting any officer adjudicate upon a claim of mere damages; that I am not. I am not in favor of taking that from under the immediate control of Congress.

Mr. CLARK. I did not understand the Senator so to state; but I was pointing out the difficulty there might be in the case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Where there is an implied assumption between the citizens and the Government, whether it is in a regular proceeding or not, I think they ought to be paid; for instance, where provisions have been taken to feed the Army in the field or horses in the field. What I want, and what I think is very important to the rights of these parties, is, to take the adjudication away from the Quartermaster General, so far as he assumes to be the final judge, and give it to the accounting officers of the Treasury. I am willing for the claims to pass through those departments for report, and then let them go to the Auditor, who is the proper accounting officer of the Government. There is much dissatisfaction with the adjudications of the quartermaster's office, and I think justly. I think there is an effort—perhaps I am not justified in saying what I was going to say—but sometimes a reputation for economy is secured by grinding down the citizen in regard to a little bit of a matter when millions of money are squandered in things that bring no good to the public.

Mr. POLAND. I entirely agree with what the honorable Senator from Indiana says in relation to the constructions that have been put upon the existing law by the quartermaster's department. I think it is true that their construction of the language in relation to who is the proper officer is entirely erroneous; and in some other respects there has been a strictness of construction that I think is not warranted by the existing law. The language of the present act is the same as that of the existing law, except that it extends it over a wider portion of country, and gives the jurisdiction in all cases above $500 to the Court of Claims. But, Mr. President, I think the whole thing will be remedied by the passage of this bill just as it stands. All the larger claims will go into the Court of Claims; a proper judicial construction will be given to the act; and, of course, that will be binding upon the Departments; that will settle the practice under it there; and those erroneous interpretations, of which the honorable Senator from Indiana complains, will all be cured in that way. I think that the entire object of his amendment will be met and satisfied by the passage of the bill as it stands.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Upon the suggestion of the Senator, for whom I have so very much respect, I will withdraw my amendment, and we will test it until the next session. If we find the people are still to be ground down as they have been heretofore, we can offer an amendment at the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask the consent of the honorable Senator from Vermont to amend the bill wherever a reference is made to the Quartermaster General or to the Commissary General by changing it to "the Secretary of War." These officers are to cause an examination into the validity and propriety of these accounts. It seems to me that the Secretary of War would be the proper person in whom to concentrate all matters pertaining to his whole Department, rather than to make separate branches of his Department accounting and settling officers, even in matters of this kind. Combinations outside of the Department might have an influence upon the subordinate officers, when that influence would not extend to the head of the Department. It seems to me, therefore, that we should insert in this bill the name of the Secretary of War, who would naturally refer all matters pertaining to the quartermaster's department to the Quartermaster General, and all matters of subsistence to the Commissary General's department, and would receive reports, of course, directly from them on the subject. I hope the honorable Senator will permit the name of the Secretary of War to be introduced, and I will move that amendment. In line eight, of the first section, I move to strike out the words "Quartermaster General of the United States" and insert "Secretary of War," and also in line ten to strike out the words "Quartermaster General" and insert "Secretary of War;" and in the second section, line six, to strike out the words "Commissary General of Subsistence" and insert "Secretary of War;" and also in line eight to strike out the words "Commissary General of Subsistence" and insert "Secretary of War."

Mr. HOWARD. This bill will be very sweeping in its effect; very general. I wish to inquire of the honorable Senator from Vermont if he or any other person has made any estimate of the probable amount of money which this bill, should it become a law, will require to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. POLAND. The committee made no inquiry upon that subject. Indeed, I supposed it was one in regard to which we could get no information; and I do not suppose it makes any difference what the amount may be. Whatever amount loyal people have furnished our Army we ought to pay for or undertake to pay for, whether that amount be great or small. We have no means of ascertaining the exact amount.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the honorable Senator from Vermont, who reported the bill, contemplate that it is to go into operation in the rebel States? By the terms of the bill, I understand that such will be the effect, and that every person throughout the rebel States whose property has been taken, either with or without an official receipt, and who can prove that he was a loyal person, will be entitled to compensation under this bill, if it should become a law.

Mr. POLAND. I understand that to be substantially the meaning of the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, Mr. President, I did not misunderstand the effect of the bill. I am entirely opposed to it as it now stands. It is impossible to foresee or to calculate the amount of money which will be drawn from the Treasury of the United States if this bill shall be passed and become a law. It will enable all persons throughout the rebel States, who by solemn act of Congress have been declared and treated as the enemies of the United States, to present their claims to the proper officer of the Government, to prove their loyalty—not a very difficult thing, by no means a difficult thing—and to obtain such an amount of compensation or indemnification for property taken from them as they shall be able to establish by such proofs as they may be able to offer. In my judgment, if this shall become a law, it will cost the Treasury of the United States at least a billion dollars, and I presume that even that figure would not cover the entire expenditures which would be called for by this bill. And in a matter of so serious import, I object entirely to submitting such questions as will arise under this bill to the adjudication of any one man, any officer of the Government, no matter how high may be his position, or how great may be his talents, or how pure his intention or his honesty. It opens the door to the most enormous impositions upon the Government; and it is impossible to fancy even the amount of fraud and perjury and imposition which will be practiced, and easily practiced, under this bill in the rebel States.

Besides, sir, I hold that we are under no moral obligation to pay for property taken by our armies in the course of their regular operations in the field from rebels or from rebel communities. The seizure of that property was one of the necessary results of the war which they waged upon the Government; and although the effect of that war may be to work hardship and possibly injustice in many cases upon individuals, still it is one of the necessities growing out of the attitude which those rebel communities placed themselves in toward the United States, and they are compelled by the laws of war and the laws of nations to pocket their own losses. Sir, I can never go home to my constituents and tell them that I have voted for an act of Congress which will take out of their pockets so vast an amount of money merely to indemnify rebels and rebel communities for losses accruing necessarily out of the operations of the armies of the United States, of which my constituents constituted a very respectable part. I think it is entirely vain to expect that the loyal people of the United States will ever consent to pay off any portion of the losses which have accrued necessarily to the rebel States in the prosecution of the war for the preservation of the Government; and I object therefore in toto to the whole bill and to the whole scheme as being unjust to the loyal people of the United States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I should object as strenuously as the Senator from Michigan to any bill of the character which he is opposing. I should object in behalf of the loyal people of the United States to paying rebels for anything. But, sir, I do not object to paying the loyal people of the United States for the contributions they have made to put down this rebellion. This is a bill for the loyal people of the United States, not for the disloyal. Does the Senator from Michigan mean to stand up and say that when the Army of the United States through its proper officer has taken the property of a loyal man, loyal at the time, loyal ever since, loyal now, and used it in putting down the rebellion, he will not pay that loyal man for that property?

Mr. HOWARD. What I intended to say—and I think I confined myself carefully to the statement of my proposition—was this: I object to the payment of any man (whether loyal or disloyal) in a rebel State for the taking of his property in the regular prosecution of the war for the preservation of the Union. I have said nothing about the payment of loyal men in loyal States whose property has been taken; and it was not necessary for me to allude to that branch of the subject.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, Mr. President, is a loyal man in a disloyal State, who with treason all around him, at the hazard of his life and everything he had, stood by the Government, not to be paid for his property because he happens to be located there? Sir, I am for encouraging loyalty in the disloyal States; and the man who has been tempted and tried, who with all the community around him engaged in the rebellion, stood out, in the midst of the fiery furnace, for the Union, and furnished property to feed our armies, I am for paying. A great mistake has been made in this Government in not distinguishing between the loyal and disloyal men in the rebellious States. If, at the beginning of this war, we had made it as terrible to the traitor in the disloyal States as the traitors made it to the loyal men, we should have had a loyal party there. If we failed in anything, it was in not protecting our loyal men in the disloyal States.

Now, sir, this bill is not a bill to pay traitors. It is guarded carefully against being used for any such purpose. Most of the claims that arise under this bill will have to go to the Court of Claims—a much safer place to send them, in my judgment, than before any committee of Congress or any board of commissioners. We have organized here a court of five judges, able men, with attorneys whose special duty it is to defend the interests of the Government, who cross-examine witnesses, who subject testimony to legal tests, who do not pass upon a claim simply upon an affidavit ex parte which is brought in, as is the case before the committees of Congress; but before a claim is allowed by that court it undergoes a thorough judicial investigation. We have officers appointed whose duty it is to cross-examine witnesses and introduce new testimony on behalf of the Government, and the Government will be protected there. Hundreds and thousands and millions of dollars will be saved to this Government by compelling parties who claim to be loyal to go before this tribunal and establish their loyalty by legal evidence; establish the fact that their property was taken for the support of the Union Army; that it was taken by the proper officer; that it was actually used by the Union Army; and when they establish these facts, which this bill requires, and that the claimant has been and is loyal, that you took his provisions to feed your Army, that your proper officer took them, I say this Government is bound to pay for them, and sooner or later we will pay for them; and I want to say to the few loyal men all over the rebellious States that, for one, I am ready to pay now.

I hear the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] say there is ruin in the bill. Sir, there is no ruin in the bill. That idea is entirely imaginary. The Senator from Massachusetts undoubtedly knows a great many things; but does he know that this very law has been enforced for two years applying to all the loyal States of the Union, applying to the State of Maryland, applying to the State of West Virginia, applying to the State of Missouri, applying to the State of Kentucky; and what ruin has come upon the country? The whole amount that has been allowed, even through your commissary and quartermaster's departments, without the legal tests of a judicial investigation, is but a few hundred thousand dollars. The whole of it is nothing like a million, although you had large armies in these States all the time. The whole amount of claims established, I think, is not $400,000. We had a statement from the Department on that point.

Mr. POLAND. About three hundred thousand dollars at that time. That was a couple of months ago.

Mr. TRUMBULL. About three hundred thousand dollars two months ago was all that had been allowed, and the law has been in force for two years. It is an unnecessary alarm that is sought to be excited against this bill. I think, sir, that we ought to pass a measure of this kind, and I do not see the distinction which my friend from Michigan makes between the truly loyal man of the South and the truly loyal man of the North. I would pay one as soon as the other.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will pardon me, I will endeavor to manifest the distinction to which I alluded. It seems to me to be very plain. It consists in this: that by several solemn acts of Congress, passed by his votes and mine, the eleven rebel States have been declared to be enemies of the United States, public enemies, with whom we as a Government were at war—a war regulated in all respects upon the recognized principles of public war. Every man, woman, and child within the limits of the rebel States were by law the enemies of the United States. When I say enemies, I do not mean that every one of course was at heart hostile to the Government of the United States; but it was one of the necessary legal results of the condition in which the majority of the people of those States placed the State in each case, to make the whole population enemies. Now, if the honorable Senator from Illinois will inform me what case there is in the whole history of war in which property taken by a belligerent entering the enemy's territory has been paid for by the invaders who have become the successful party, then I shall give up my point. I know of no such principle in the laws of war as requires a belligerent party to pay for property which the invading army takes by way of forage or in any other form for the support and maintenance of the army which he is leading against his enemy.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Michigan refers to various laws with which I am not familiar. I am not familiar with those statutes which declared these people to be public enemies. I am very sure I did not vote for them.

Mr. HOWARD. I am very sorry to hear it. Mr. TRUMBULL. And I do not know where those statutes are. I know that we declared the inhabitants of certain States to be in a state of insurrection, under a proclamation. But the Senator wants to know if I can give him any instance where property was paid for under such circumstances, and he says that if I can he will give it up. Why, sir, our Army paid for property all the while. General Sherman paid for property and General Banks paid for property taken in the rebellious States. Where the officer had the money he paid down at the time. It has been done all through the war.

Mr. HOWARD. Not as the act of the commander-in-chief.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, as the act of the commander; and where he did not have the money he gave a receipt for it; and now, because he did not have the money, you will not pay! This bill provides for paying where your proper officer took the property of a loyal man and gave a receipt for it. If he had had the money he would have paid at the time; but because the officer did not have money to pay down and gave a receipt for the property you will not pay, and you never heard of an instance where anybody did! Certainly such payments have been made all through the war.

Now, that there may be no mistake as to this question of loyalty, I propose to define it a little more strictly, and I think that will obviate some of the objections of my friend from Michigan, and perhaps the objections of others. I shall move at the proper time an amendment to define the question of loyalty, which I will read:

That the claimant must, in proof of his loyalty, establish by evidence that from the time his claim accrued, and ever since, he has firmly and faithfully maintained his adherence and allegiance to the Government of the United States, by defending its cause against the rebellion, government, and forces of the so-called confederate States in all suitable and practicable ways and according to his ability and opportunity.

I am willing to adopt a provision defining loyalty in that way, that it shall not be simply passive, but that the claimant shall be required to prove that he has manifested his loyalty upon all suitable and practicable occasions, according to his ability; that whenever opportunity offered he has shown affirmatively that he was and is loyal; and when he shows that I think he ought to be paid if his property has been taken and receipted for by the proper officer, or, if a receipt was not given, where it was taken and used by the Government.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois tells us that the passage of this bill will save hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars, and that explains the extraordinary zeal he manifests for it. I took occasion to refer to a remark made by a gentleman who for four years has been daily engaged in matters pertaining to the loyalty of these people, and who tells me that under the bill the whole population can prove themselves loyal. The Senator himself confesses its weakness by his proposed amendment. My side remark was not made to him, but he took occasion publicly to comment upon it.

Now, sir, I will say to the Senator that this is a dangerous bill, that there are millions upon millions of dollars involved in it, and this Senate and this Congress ought not to pass it. If we are to legislate at all, if we are to extend the provisions of a law applicable and which have been applicable to loyal States, to the eleven disloyal States in the present condition of the country, and in their present condition, I think the act should be most studiously guarded and carefully worded. If loyal persons, persons who can prove themselves loyal, have received from officers of the Government certificates for supplies furnished the Army, there is some claim in that, but here is a provision in this bill that persons who have received no certificates may make their application. That almost the entire population can prove and will prove themselves loyal people in order to obtain this compensation, I entertain no doubt. There are Departments of this Government where they are doing it now. There are Departments of this Government in Washington where there is evidence to show that a very large portion of the population there always have been loyal. Whenever these money claims are made it is pretty easy to prove the man to have been loyal to the country or never to have given any voluntary support to the rebellion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it is the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of Saturday, being House bill No. 513.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 708) for the relief of Dr. Edward Jarvis; and

A bill (H. R. No. 711) for the relief of James Fitzgibbon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 59) to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statutes of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 243) to extend the time for the reversion to the United States of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of the said road;

A bill (S. No. 180) for the relief of A. J. Gray;

A bill (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Mrs. Amarilla Cook;

A bill (S. No. 275) for the relief of Cornelius Crowley;

A bill (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair at Rock Island, in the State of Illinois;

A bill (S. No. 200) for the relief of Jane Harris;

A bill (S. No. 276) for the relief of Mrs. Jerusha Witter;

A bill (S. No. 298) granting a pension to Jane D. Brent;

A bill (S. No. 326) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker;

A bill (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin;

A bill (S. No. 342) for the benefit of Ira B. Curtis;

A bill (S. No. 375) to amend an act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry;

A bill (S. No. 381) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters," approved April 20, 1866;

A bill (H. R. No. 249) to establish a land office in the Territory of Idaho;

A bill (H. R. No. 342) in amendment of an act to promote the progress of the useful arts, and the acts in amendment of and in addition thereto; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Charles M. Blake.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 144, at the top of the page, in line thirty-three hundred and thirty-four, I move to strike out "this act" and to insert "law;" and in line thirty-three hundred and thirty-six to strike out "hereby" before "imposed," and after "imposed" to insert "by law."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These alterations will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 153, in line thirty-five hundred and seventy-seven, I move to strike out "in this act," and in line thirty-five hundred and eighty, on the same page, to strike out "by virtue of this act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those alterations will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line thirty-five hundred and eighty-two, on the same page, I move to strike out "by virtue of this act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alteration will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line thirty-five hundred and eighty-three, at the top of page 154, I move to strike out "herein" before "provided."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alteration will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line thirty-six hundred and forty, on page 156, I move to strike out "herein."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alteration will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 32, in line five hundred and sixty-four, I move to strike out after "shall" the words "call upon the assessor of the district to," so as to read: "the officer making the distraint shall summon three disinterested householders of the vicinity," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those words will be stricken out, no objection being interposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 42, in lines seven hundred and ninety-two and seven hundred and ninety-three, I move to strike out the words "with the salary, fees, commissions, and charges allowed by law."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those words will be stricken out, no objection being interposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 77, line sixteen hundred and seventy-two, I move to strike out "tobaccoists."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line eighteen hundred and five, on page 82, after the word "sureties," I move to insert the words "or amount."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those words will be added, no objection being interposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 166, in line one hundred and forty-one of section eleven, I move to strike out the word "pumps" before "steam-engines."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to amend the bill on pages 175 and 176 by striking out all of section twenty after the enacting clause and inserting as a substitute what I send to the Chair.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all of section twenty after the enacting clause, in the following words:

That no suit shall be brought against any collector of customs or of internal revenue for any duty, license, special tax, or tax paid, unless such suit is brought within six months from the passage of this act, or within six months after the payment of such duty or tax.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That no suit shall be maintained in any court for the recovery of any tax alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, until appeal shall have been duly made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue according to the provision of law in that regard, and the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury established in pursuance thereof, and a decision of said Commissioner shall be had thereon; nor unless such suit shall be brought within six months from the time of said decision or within six months from the time this act takes effect: Provided, That if said decision shall be delayed more than six months from the date of such appeal, then said suit may be brought at any time within twelve months from the date of such appeal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask the Clerk to turn to page 118, lines twenty-six hundred and ninety-four and twenty-six hundred and ninety-five. How does that provision read now?

The Secretary read the clause, as follows:

And the provisions of law in relation to stamp duties in schedule B of this act shall apply to stamp taxes herein imposed upon sales and contracts of sales made by brokers, banks, or bankers, and others, as aforesaid.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 190, section

[thirty-two] thirty, line thirty-three, I move to strike out the words "one eighth of one per cent." and to insert "such fee as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 192, section [thirty-three] thirty-one, line seven, I move to strike out the words "one quarter of one per cent." and to insert "such fee as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On page 14, lines one hundred and eight and one hundred and nine, I move to strike out the words "special tax or income" and to insert "special or income tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On page 78, line seventeen hundred and ten, I move to strike out the words "in this act levied or provided" and to insert "imposed by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On the same page, line seventeen hundred and twelve, I move to strike out the words "herein specified."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On page 100, line twenty-two hundred and forty-one, at the end of the clause, I move to insert the words "mentioned in this paragraph."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On page 168, line one hundred and eighty-nine, after the word "yeast" I move to insert "and baking;" so as to place "yeast and baking powders" on the free list.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On page 199, section [thirty-seven] thirty-five, line thirty-five, I move to strike out the word "and" and to insert "or," so as to read "distillery or warehouse."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On page 207, line forty-two of section [forty-three] forty-one, I move to insert the word "the" before "execution."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On page 210, section [forty-five] forty-three, line fourteen, I move to strike out the words "right, title, and interest in and to," and to insert "property in."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. On page 195, line sixty, after the word "prescribe," I move to strike out the following words:

Of the number of pounds or gallons of materials used for the purpose of producing spirits.

Mr. President, I never read a bill in my life with so much aversion as I have read the bill under consideration. It is, I suppose, a necessity and a dire necessity that the country should have such a system of internal revenue; but in all its multifarious and complicated details it throws more distrust upon the people upon whom it is to operate and more of degradation and oppression than any measure that it has ever been my fortune to read. The whole bill and all its provisions proceed upon the general idea that all the people that it is to act upon are knaves and plunderers; and the whole machinery of the bill is studded with bonds and oaths and punishments by fine and imprisonment. I presume that those features cannot be obliterated from the bill, and that the bill will have to pass with a large proportion of them in. But, sir, where it is possible to mitigate the bill by striking from it any of these obnoxious regulations I think it ought to be done, and I think that I make a proposition of that character in the amendment which I have submitted to the Senate. The bill requires that all distillers—

Shall from day to day make, or cause to be made, true and exact entry in a book, to be kept in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of the number of pounds or gallons of materials used for the purpose of producing spirits, the number of gallons of spirits distilled, the number of gallons placed in warehouse and the number thereof, and the number of gallons sold, with the proof thereof, and the name and place of business or residence of the person to whom sold.

In a page or two afterwards the bill provides—

That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery establishment as hereinbefore provided, shall erect, in a room or building to be provided and used for that purpose, and for no other, two or more receiving cisterns, each to be at least of sufficient capacity to hold all the spirits distilled during the day of twenty-four hours, into one of which shall be conveyed each day all the spirits manufactured in said distillery during that day; and such cisterns shall be so constructed as to leave an open space of at least three feet between the tops thereof and the floor or roof above, and of not less than eighteen inches between the bottoms thereof and the floor below, and shall be separated in such a manner as will enable the inspector to pass around the same, and shall be connected with the outlet of the stills, boilers, or other vessels used for distilling, by suitable pipes or other apparatus so constructed as always to be exposed to the view of the inspector.

Now, sir, we have all heard of the coffin of Mohammed being suspended, and being sustained upon no foundation. These cisterns are the nearest device to that coffin of Mohammed that I have ever heard of or met with in the course of my reading.

But to the point. The distillers are to report from day to day the produce in liquor of their distillations, and in addition to that, they are to be emptied into these cisterns, so constructed that the inspectors may go all around them, and see whether there are any false vaults below them in which liquor, I suppose, could be emptied. Where is the necessity of the distiller being required to enter upon his day-book, day by day and report three times a month to the collector, the number of pounds or gallons of materials used for the purpose of producing spirits, when he is required inexorably to report the produce of the spirits from day to day, and he is to empty them into a cistern where it would be impossible that the whole quantity distilled should not be deposited, and upon which he would be subject to be taxed according to the rates established by the bill?

I feel a particular hostility to this provision from this consideration: in a county contiguous to my own there were four distillers indicted for a violation of the law, and they were fined in an aggregate of exceeding $14,000. It appeared in the course of the evidence that the distillers had fairly accounted for all the liquor that they had distilled and had paid the tax upon it, not according to the proof measure established by the law, but according to wine measure, and therefore had paid more tax to the Government than they were bound to pay; and the only feature of the law that they had violated, and that through their innocent and blameless ignorance, was a failure to report from day to day the amount of the grain that they had used in mash. In the trial of those cases that took place in the United States district court for Kentucky a few weeks since, the distillers vindicated their perfect integrity by showing that they had accounted for every gill of liquor that they had made, and had paid the full tax upon it by wine measure; and yet they were pursued in that trial upon the charge of having violated the law which required them from day to day to enter into a book the amount in weight of their mash. Those distillers appealed to headquarters, if I may use the term, for relief. I do not know whether they got it or not. They had no intention of violating the law or of committing any fraud upon the Government, and they did in fact commit no fraud upon the Government. On the contrary, they accounted to the Government and paid tax upon more liquor than they had made, according to the proofs established by the law itself; and yet some sharks of officers, by the meshes of this law, were enabled to pursue them to judgment upon the simple and innocent charge of having omitted to enter in a book from day to day the amount in pounds of grain which they had distilled; and for that simple and practically inoffensive violation of the law, made in utter ignorance on their part, they were assessed in an aggregate amount of damages exceeding $14,000. Those distillers were mostly distilling their own grain; two of them, I believe, entirely their own grain. One of them had made from twenty to forty barrels in a domestic distillery out of corn raised upon his own farm; and the amount of fine imposed upon him exceeded the entire value of his whole crop of whisky.

I never in my life have heard of any system of revenue or any system whatever connected with the collection of money, that established so many chances of sweeping oppression and robbery upon the part of the officers appointed to carry the system into execution as is embodied in this bill and the bills of which it is the successor. The assessors and their officers laid in wait, with a knowledge of the careless manner in which these unsophisticated and uninformed distillers were transacting their business; they knew that they were in daily and innocent violation of the law; and when their violation accumulated to such an extent that by the plunder acquired by the iniquitous and unjust enforcement of these penalties, they were enabled to enrich themselves, the harpies then pounced upon these innocent men; and had them mulcted to the extent that I have named; and that in relation to a matter in the law that was totally immaterial; because these distillers, admittedly, had reported the full amount of their distillations according to the law, had accounted for it by wine measure, and yet could not escape from the inexorable fangs of the law and of the harpies who were engaged in its execution.

I will advert to another matter of abuse under this law. The collector in that district admitted to me when his name was before the Senate for confirmation on renomination, that some of his officers had assessed, for the simple gauging of the liquor, in some instances, as high as seven per cent. upon its value, and in other instances as high as five per cent.

When that is the character of the law, when that is the system of tyranny and oppression, with all of its vexations, that the Government introduces, and men are thus wronged and robbed and plundered and impoverished for a violation of its immaterial provisions by the officers who ought to be the guardians of the innocent distillers as well as of the Government, how can it be expected that men thus robbed and plundered should feel a disposition to sustain the system or the Government itself?

Mr. President, I want no more war, no more rebellion. I never wanted any. I always believed it a great iniquity that would produce a hundred-fold more of mischief and woe to those who made it than it would to anybody else. But if the country should ever unfortunately come again to a disposition to rebel, what more fruitful cause of rebellion and of engendering rebellious feeling could be had than in such a law as this? Sir, the people do not belong to the Government. They were made for some other purposes than to pay taxes. They have their duties to perform in life, and other ends to attain as individuals and as members of a great political community. The Government by its laws, instead of outraging all the customs and habits of the people in their ordinary business, ought to accommodate itself to the modes of doing that business by the people. Wherever it be practicable to make provisions for taxation and collecting taxes that will observe the habits and modes of the people in doing their business, those habits and modes ought to be scrupulously conformed to and respected by the law. But this law proceeds upon the contrary principle, and outrages and disregards all those modes of doing their own business by the people, and seeks by its highly penal and punitive provisions to constrain the people to come to its own expensive and most vexatious mode of doing their own business.

Mr. President, I think that a greater good could not be done to the Government and to the country, and one that would result in producing more of revenue to the Government, and more of contentment and submission to this necessarily vexatious measure on the part of the people, than for those who form these bills and give them their features to attempt in every possible and practicable instance to mitigate the severity and the vexation of the law and of the system, and to conform the law as nearly as possible to the modes of industry of the people, where that can be done without any sacrifice of revenue or of public interest. I do not think the provision which I have moved to strike out is germane to the bill. I think it is unnecessary; that it is multiplying and making more complex the law needlessly, without any necessity or any practical result; that it only tends to give one more chance to the harpies who are enriching themselves by having this law executed upon innocent and unsophisticated and ignorant men; and I therefore move to strike it out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If rebellion grows out of this provision I suppose it will be called "the mash-tub rebellion of Kentucky;" but I apprehend there will not be any such result, even if we keep this clause in. The "unsophisticated" distillers of whom the honorable Senator has spoken, taking the country through, have been so unsophisticated that the result is, that out of about forty million gallons manufactured last year, we got the tax on about fifteen millions; so that it seems, unsophisticated as they are, they understand very well how to dodge the payment of taxes.

This provision to which the Senator has referred is one that has been in the tax laws from the beginning, and it was put into the original bill on a suggestion that was made to me, as chairman of the Committee on Finance, when the bill was being drawn, that it was impossible, and had been found so in Canada, because the communication came from a friend there, to have the necessary checks upon distillation to ascertain the quantity unless the distillers were compelled to state from time to time the quantity of materials purchased and used. That was a check that enabled you when you could get at it to ascertain with more certainty the amount distilled, because the amount of materials being given, you could ordinarily tell the amount of production. It is considered by the office, and by all connected with the collection of the revenue on distilled spirits, as a very necessary and important check. The Senator says it is unnecessary and means nothing. I assure him it is not so regarded. It is regarded as a very important provision, by which the amount distilled can be ascertained, and for the prevention of fraud, and has been so considered from the beginning.

The Senator has also made some remarks upon the system. I am told that in the city of New York it has been ascertained that in some instances they had vats under ground directly under the cisterns; and when the officers came to seize the distillery and make an examination, large vats were found into which a considerable quantity of liquor was run off; and in one instance they were connected with pipes on the other side of the street, some fifteen rods off where they were built. That was ascertained after they got hold of the establishment. There are many contrivances of that sort which render it necessary to have most stringent and careful provisions in order to guard against frauds which those unsophisticated distillers are continually practicing, and practicing successfully, on the Government.

The appeal which the Senator has made, founded upon the brutal nature of the officers who wish to entrap these "unsophisticated" distillers and to prey upon the simplicity of the people; I think really has no foundation except in the imagination of the honorable Senator from Kentucky. The case which he has referred to in Kentucky is now under consideration. They have broken the law. It is now under examination here; and if it shall turn out that there was actually no fraud intended or none perpetrated, unquestionably the fine will be remitted. There has been no instance, I am told, from the beginning, in which, although a fine was imposed under the law, if it was satisfactorily shown that the offense was unintentional, accidental, the penalty has not been remitted by the office, under the authority conferred on the Commissioner and the Secretary of the Treasury; and so it will unquestionably be in the case referred to by the Senator. But even if there are some instances in so extensive a system in which the comparatively innocent; that is, those who are innocent in intention, suffer, that affords no reason for overturning a system that is absolutely necessary for the protection of the revenue against frauds that are practiced. I hope, therefore, as this is regarded by all connected with the collection of the revenue on distilled spirits as not only a very important but a very essential provision, that it will not be stricken out on the motion of the honorable Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg to say a single word in reply to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance. What I said in relation to unsophisticated distillers had no reference to the distillers in the cities. I do not know anything about those in the cities; but in the rural districts all that I said about them is true. I do not know anything of the modes of distillation by what is called the steam process; but by the old method of distilling which you, sir, [Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair,] are familiar with, by two copper stills, one called singling and the other doubling, and running through a copper vessel, I know all about that; and it is in that way that the real, genuine Bourbon, that is most highly appreciated for its greatest excellence, is made. The mode of distillation in that way is about thus: the distiller makes his mash; he takes a bushel of corn and half a bushel of rye, and after he has made his mash he puts it in the tub and the beer works. It has four or five days to work. When it has perfected itself by sufficient working, it is then let into the first still for distillation. I have not been in a still-house but once since I was twelve years of age, but up to that time I learned a good deal about distillation. I know that the produce of distillation results very much from the character of the weather. The beer works and becomes perfect very much in proportion to the character of the weather. It must be neither too cold nor too warm. The highest produce of that mode of distillation is three gallons to the bushel; but it varies from one gallon to three. I am told that under the steam process the production is five gallons to the bushel; but under the old mode of distillation the highest production was about one half that quantity, and was very often not more than one fifth of that quantity.

The number of pounds of meal, corn, or rye that is used in the process is no criterion to be relied upon by which the quantity of liquor made from it is to be ascertained. Sometimes it is two and a half gallons, under our mode of distilling in Kentucky. It is sometimes as high as three; it is often as low as one; and something like two gallons would probably be the average. But amid such variation of the produce of liquor resulting from the same amount of grain, according to that process of distillation, owing to the condition of the weather and the perfection to which the beer reaches, and other causes, the requisition that the distiller shall keep in a book from day to day and supply three times a month to the collector the number of pounds of grain he has distilled is no criterion of the produce of his distillation upon which the collector or anybody else can rely. Why, then, is he required to keep such a constant and tedious record? It is unnecessary, because the produce of his distillation, whether it has been successful or not, is to be emptied into two reservoirs; it is to be emptied once a day; and it is to remain in those reservoirs for three days, to enable the inspector to visit the establishment and ascertain the exact quantity that has been made. I do not see any need for this record. Certainly there was none for it in the cases to which I referred, because there was no fraud upon the revenue in those instances.

Now, what is the punishment? "Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall, for every such offense, be liable to a fine of $500." These four men, farmers in the county of Harrison, distilling their own grain, except in one instance, by omission to comply with this law, of the existence of which they were perfectly ignorant, and which omissions resulted in no damage to the Government, in the loss of not one cent of revenue, were yet mulcted in damages in the aggregate exceeding $14,000.

Mr. President, if it is necessary to fortify a law of this kind and a provision such as I have just read by a fine of $500 for every violation of it, it seems to me that the court trying the case ought to be vested with a discretion, if the judge is satisfied that there is no fraud, to remit the fine or to graduate the fine according to the defalcation and the immorality of the offender. I do not think there is any necessity for this provision, but if there is, I think it ought to be mitigated by vesting the judge with a discretion over the amount of the fine, and over its very existence, so that he would be enabled to graduate it according to the testimony, as the testimony would establish guilt or the absence of guilt in the case.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am acquainted with the facts and the proceedings to which my colleague refers. I thought they were framed pretty much to get the penalties. They did not touch the production. It was the outside declaration of the lawyer that the parties had paid for all they had distilled, and I have no doubt that was so. I have looked over this bill, and I do not believe it is possible to collect the internal revenue without a very rigid law, and one nearly as rigid as this.

My colleague says the amount of grain is no criterion of the quantity of spirits distilled. I think it certainly is a criterion. It may not be a very accurate one. Some distillers used to say that they made four and a half gallons, others that they made but three and a half gallons, and others that they could not get that much. A good deal depends on the character of the weather, a good deal depends on the success of the mash. Then when they mash with slop, very often they do not get the spirits in the first distillation, but get them in the second. The quantity of grain used is one criterion, and I could not recommend that it be dispensed with. So it is in relation to beer. You cannot resort to taxation on these articles without a pretty rigid system of laws. If you make them so equitable and amiable that they will suit the taste of everybody you will get no revenue.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to strike out all of the first section of the bill after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That no tax or duty shall be assessed or paid on unmanufactured cotton which may be grown or produced after the passage of this act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I trust that will not be adopted. We have had the same tax on cotton since the last act was passed. The House of Representatives in this bill put the tax on cotton at five cents a pound. We have struck that down to the original tax, leaving it to stand as it is. I trust the Senate will be content to let it so remain.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe that it was two years ago that that tax was first imposed, was it not?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. I at that time resisted the imposition of the tax upon the ground that I thought it unconstitutional. I had not then sufficiently examined the subject to advance any very confident opinion on that point, but I have since given it a very thorough investigation, and I am perfectly satisfied that cotton or any other article of agricultural production cannot be taxed in the raw state under our Constitution; or if it can be taxed at all, it must be apportioned among the States as a direct tax. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate; but as this is a very important subject, I think one of the most important, because it lays a precedent for the taxing of agricultural products, I should like to be allowed a short time to discuss it. In fact a year or two ago it was proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury to tax tobacco in the leaf, and that induced me to make a very thorough examination of this general subject. I do not wish to interfere with the desire of the Finance Committee on this subject, and I hope I shall have the permission of the Senator from Maine to discuss the subject somewhat.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no power either to give or to withhold permission. The Senator must be his own judge.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to impede the progress of the bill. Of course I know my rights, but I do not desire to interfere with the speedy passage of the bill because I am as anxious to get away from here as any Senator, but I regard this as a most important question, and I trust I shall be indulged for a short time in giving the result of my investigations in regard to it.

The third clause of the second section of the first article of the Constitution provides that—

"Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers"— which shall be determined in a certain manner therein prescribed. The eighth section of the same article provides that—

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

In the ninth section of the same article it is declared that—

"No capitation or direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken."

In the same section it is declared that—

"No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

The tenth section of the same article provides that—

"No State shall, without the consent of the Congress lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress."

In the next clause of the same section it is said—

"No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage," &c.

I believe these are all the provisions of the Constitution in reference to taxation. Whenever duties, imposts, and excises are laid they are required to be "uniform throughout the United States." If a capitation tax or other direct tax is laid, it must be "in proportion to the census or enumeration" constituting the basis of representation in the lower House. It will be observed that the power is given "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," and that only duties, imposts, and excises are required to be uniform. This requirement does not apply to taxes. In the first case decided in the Supreme Court, calling for an interpretation of these provisions, it was thought that the Convention purposely omitted taxes from the requirement of uniformity in order that a tribute or tax might be assessed and collected which would not fall under the head of duties, imposts, excises, or direct taxes. The word "taxes," in this connection, is synonymous with the "capitation, and other direct taxes" named in other clauses of the Constitution. Congress, of course, was given power to lay direct taxes; but if this word only had been used it might have been well said that no taxes could be laid at all, except direct taxes, for such a tax had been already provided for and a mode fixed for assessing it. An established rule of construction would have made the term equal and caused it to refer to the same subject-matter in every part of the instrument. The Convention avoided that construction by proceeding to enumerate the other kinds of tax which it wished to give Congress the power to levy. Hence, after taxes follow the words "duties, customs, and excises." It is then provided that the last three, to wit, "duties, customs, and excises," shall be uniform. They did not say that taxes should be uniform, because it was already provided that taxes, that is direct taxes, should not be uniform.

If this view be correct, then the words "duties, imposts, and excises" will cover every species of taxation within the power of Congress except capitation and other direct taxes. It is highly important, then, to know what was the true force and meaning of these terms at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. We are not told in the instrument what a direct tax is, nor what a duty, impost, or excise is. To ascertain what is meant by these words we must look to the English law, the terms of which were used throughout the Constitution, and with which our ancestors were familiar. We must look to the same source for their meaning as for the meaning of bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, or writs of habeas corpus. Mr. Madison, commenting on these very clauses, said:

"It may be thought that the Constitution might easily have been made more explicit and precise in its meaning. But the same remark might be made on so many other parts of the instrument, and, indeed, on so many parts of every instrument of a complex character, that if completely obviated it would swell every paragraph into a page, and every page into a volume; and, in so doing, have the effect of multiplying topics for criticism and controversy."

I propose first to show that a tax on cotton is within what was known in the English law as a direct tax. I hold that agricultural products, in their raw or unmanufactured state, were only considered as a means of ascertaining the value of land, and, if taxed at all, were taxed under the head of "land tax" by our English ancestors, and that this is the same referred to in our Constitution when it speaks of a direct tax. By reference to English history and English law a clear definition of all the terms used in connection with this subject of taxation may be easily obtained:

"The earliest system of taxation in England was based on the nature of its land tenures. Every tenant of a knight's fee was bound, if called upon, to attend the King in his army for forty days in every year. Blackstone says this personal attendance grew troublesome, and the tenants found means of compounding for it, by first sending others in their stead, and in process of time by making a pecuniary satisfaction to the Crown in lieu of it.

"This pecuniary satisfaction came afterward to be levied by regular assessments, at so much for every knight's fee. This tax was called the scutage, because of its military origin. Now, there were many lands in the kingdom not held by military title, and it was thought proper that they too should pay taxes. The tax was, therefore, finally levied on them as upon the military lands, and this was called hidage, because it was assessed at so much per hide of one hundred and twenty acres of plowed land. In process of time commerce and manufactures brought together large bodies of people who built up cities and burghs. These towns, of course, did not fall subject to the taxes I have named, because their lands were neither military nor farming lands. The simple idea of justice suggested that they also should be taxed, and hence came what was called the tailage tax, which was levied upon them in their corporate limits.

"These land taxes proved to be wholly insufficient to carry on the wars of the crusades under Henry II, and through the religious zeal of the day he induced the people to pay him the tenth part in kind of all their goods, which tax was called the tithes. This proved too burdensome and was reduced to a fifteenth."

"During the reigns of Richard II and Henry VI both the land taxes and the fifteenths were abandoned and a new system adopted called subsidies. This was a money tax on persons levied in proportion to their wealth, lands being valued according to their rental or productions and taxed at four shillings per pound, and goods at two shillings and eightpence per pound.

"During the war between Charles and his Parliament both parties taxed the people. They made no change in the subjects of taxation, but made their assessments weekly and monthly, instead of annually. A very material change they made, however, was to levy a certain amount on each county in proportion to its wealth in lands and personal estate according to their value. The lands were valued by their rental or production. After the Restoration, the old system of subsidies was entirely abandoned. Blackstone says, 'from that time forward, we hear no more of subsidies. But,' he says, 'occasional assessments (the new mode adopted) were levied as the national emergencies required.'"

Blackstone, referring to these taxes, book one, page 312, says:

"These periodical assessments, the subsidies which preceded them, and the more ancient scutage, hidage, and tailage, were to all intents and purposes a land tax, and the assessments were sometimes expressly called so."

He refers to the Journal of the House of Commons, June 26, and December 9, 1678. In 1692 a new valuation of the kingdom was taken, and so much apportioned to each county, the amount to be assessed upon the individuals residing in each county, according to the value of their real and personal estates. This was what was known in all the acts of Parliament as the land tax or direct tax.

In 1769 Burns's Justice was published in London, a work containing a vast fund of information in regard to the English law, and defining with accuracy the duties of public officers. In volume three, page 17, I find the following under the head of "land tax":

"The land tax hath succeeded into the place of the ancient fifteenths and subsidies, and the land-tax acts are framed in many respects after the manner of the ancient subsidy acts."

The subsidy, I have shown, was on land valued by its products, and on personal property other than agricultural products.

"We meet with the payment of fifteenths as far back as the statute of Magna Charta, in the conclusion of which the Parliament grant to the King, for the concessions by him therein made, a fifteenth part of all their movable goods.

"This taxation was originally set upon the several individuals. Afterward, to wit, in the eighth year of Edward III, a certain sum was rated upon every town by commissioners appointed in the Chancery for that purpose, in like manner as commissioners are now appointed by the several land-tax acts for carrying the said acts into execution, which commissioners rated every town at the fifteenth part of the value at that time, and their taxation was recorded in the exchequer; and the inhabitants rated themselves proportionably for their several parts to make up the general sum upon the whole township. This fifteenth amounted to £29,000, or near thereabouts.

"But as the necessities of Government multiplied and the kingdom became more populous, and the values of things increased, this fifteenth was insufficient for the occasions of the public, and thereupon the number of the fifteenths was augmented to two or three fifteenths, which still proving defective, another and quite different taxation was superadded, namely, the subsidy, which was an aid to be levied of every subject of his lands or goods, after the rate of four shillings in the pound for lands, and two shillings and eightpence for goods. And accordingly in the ancient subsidy acts there is first a grant of so many fifteenths and then the grant of a subsidy."

The writer proceeds to say that Parliament, afterward finding these taxes insufficient, changed the method; and during the Long Parliament "certain sums were fixed upon the several counties, which course of taxation still continues."

And again, at page 42 of the same volume, he gives directions as to how the tax was to be assessed, and enumerates the articles falling subject to this land tax. It will be seen that agricultural productions are not included in the list. I give the full list as it appears, to wit:

"The charge upon real estate shall be as follows: that the entire sum may be raised, all manors, messuages, lands and tenements; all quarries, mines of coal, tin and lead, copper, mundick, iron, and other mines; iron-mills, furnaces, and other iron-works; salt springs and salt-works; all alum mines and works; all parks, chases, warrens, woods, underwoods, coppices; all fishings, tithes, tolls, annuities, and all other yearly profits, and all hereditaments whatsoever, shall be charged with as much equality and indifference as possible, by a pound rate, to make up the several sums charged by the act on each county or place."

Dr. Adam Smith, in his work on the Wealth of Nations, discusses this subject fully, and while he denounces a separate tax on agricultural products, shows that no such thing then existed in England. His work was first published at the beginning of the American Revolution, in 1776, and the third edition of it in 1784. After speaking of the two modes of levying this tax on productions, to wit, in kind and on the money valuation, he uses these words:

"When, instead either of a certain portion of the produce of land or of the price of a certain portion, a certain sum of money is to be paid in full compensation for all tax or tithes, the tax becomes in this case exactly of the same nature with the land tax of England."

This language seems to settle the question, but it is equally clear in Mr. Hume's definition of this tax in his History of England, and in other works referred to in those from which I have quoted. The truth is that all taxes on production, for many years before our Constitution, had been odious in England. They had been abandoned by the State from the time of the tenths and fifteenths. I quote from standard works to show the contemporaneous feeling by political economists against this sort of tax. The truth is, no one at that time thought of burdening agricultural products.

In the notes of Mr. McCullough to the work of Adam Smith, speaking of the tax on raw produce, he says:

"It is indisputable, therefore, that tithes operate practically as a premium on idleness, and as a heavy and constantly increasing tax on industry. By preventing the cultivator from reaping the entire advantage of superior skill and increased exertion, they discourage his efforts and contribute to render him indolent and indifferent."

Dr. Paley, in his work on Moral and Political Philosophy, says:

"Tithes are a tax not only upon industry, but upon that industry which feeds mankind; upon that species of exertion which it is the aim of all wise laws to cherish and promote."

Adam Smith, page 377, says:

"Taxes upon the produce of land are in reality taxes upon the rent." "There is no farmer who does not compute beforehand what the church tithe, which is a land tax of this kind, is, one year with another, likely to amount to."

"The tithe, and every other land tax of this kind, under the appearance of perfect equality, are very unequal taxes; a certain portion of the produce being, in different situations, equivalent to a very different portion of the rent."

"The tithe, as it is frequently a very unequal tax upon the rent, so it is always a great discouragement both to the improvements of the landlord and to the cultivation of the farmer. The one cannot venture to make the most important which are generally the most expensive improvements, nor the other to raise the most valuable which are generally, too, the most expensive crops, when the church, which lays out no part of the expense, is to share so very largely in the profit."

I think I have now shown that agricultural productions in their original state were not taxed separately under what was called the land tax. They were never assessed and placed in the tax lists. They were taken into consideration as affecting the value of lands, those lands producing most being regarded as most valuable; but they were never rated and taxed in addition to the lands on which they grew. I now propose to show that these products were never taxed before the making of our Constitution under any other head of taxation in England.

In addition to this land tax was the old duty known as the "customs," which was taken from the French word coustume, meaning "toll" or "tribute," from which comes our word "cost." Blackstone says:

"Customs are the duties, toll, tribute, or tariff, payable upon merchandise, exported or imported."

The ground upon which an export tax was permitted was that the King was bound of common right to maintain and keep up the ports and havens and to protect the merchants from pirates. These export customs were first granted in the third year of Edward I. They became unpopular, and in the twenty-fifth year of Edward I it was expressly stipulated that the King should receive the tax only on wool, skins, and leather. These articles could not be exported without being taken to the King's marts and stores, called staples, there to be first rated and then exported. These stores were the same as those used in our warehousing system. Hence articles that thus came in large quantities into the warehouses for exportation were soon known as "staple commodities." An export tax was allowed upon these three articles, because it was supposed no other people could compete with our English ancestors in their production; in other words, that these articles could bear the export tax and then compete with other nations in foreign marts of sale.

In addition to these regular customs was a small subsidy, tonnage, or poundage tax, levied for the keeping and the safeguard of the seas and the intercourse of merchandise to come safely into the kingdom and pass out of the same. This was a tax of the same character as that referred to in our Constitution, where it is said "no State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for its inspection laws;" and again, "no State shall, without consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage," &c. It was the abuse of this power to levy tonnage duties which constituted one of the complaints leading to the rebellion against Charles I. These export duties were always the cause of much complaint, and tonnage duties had been greatly abused; hence our Constitution designed to cure the evil by cutting it up by the roots.

Next came the excise tax, which had its origin, as most of these burdens have, in that curse of nations and of mankind, war. Blackstone says that this tax—

"Is an inland imposition usually paid upon the retail sale of a commodity."

It appears, he says,

"That they are generally imposed on manufactures and paid by the manufacturer, who advances the price of his commodity in proportion."—1 Blackstone, 318-320.

An excise tax was exceedingly unpopular in England when first proposed, because it was thought to be incompatible with the temper of a free people. To execute it properly required that officers should enter and search the houses of such as deal in excisable commodities, and the proceedings for punishment were to be summary and sudden, denying jury trials and other proceedings of the common law. One of the most formidable accusations against Charles I, was that his Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Bedford, contemplated an excise tax. It was charged afterward that the Parliament also contemplated it on their side when the House indignantly denied it, saying "that these rumors were false and scandalous, and that their authors should be apprehended and brought to condign punishment." However, less than six months thereafter they levied an excise tax on venders of ale, cider, and perry. The royalists at Oxford immediately followed their example. Both sides protested that it should cease at the end of the war. It afterward, however, became a permanent system of taxation. The evils of war have made it permanent, but Blackstone says its very name has at all times been odious to the people of England. The direct tax was afterward insufficient to meet the expenses of the continental wars, and it had to be submitted to. But my chief object is to show that it is a perversion of terms to call a tax upon an agricultural production in its raw state an excise duty. A distinguished writer, Blackstone, in enumerating the articles subject to excise duty in England at the period of our Revolution, says:

"Brandies and other spirits are now excised at the distillery; printed silks and linen at the printer's; starch and hair-powder at the maker's; gold and silver ware at the wire-drawer's; plate in the hands of the vender, who pays yearly for a license to sell it; lands and goods sold by auction, for which a pound rate is payable to the auctioneer, who also is charged with an annual duty for his license; and coaches and other wheel carriages, for which the occupier is excised, though not with the same circumstances of arbitrary strictness as in most of the other instances. To these we may add coffee and tea, chocolate and cocoa paste, for which the duty is paid by the retailer; all artificial wines, commonly called sweets, paper and pasteboard, first when made and again if stained or printed, malt, as before mentioned, vinegar and the manufacture of glass, for all which the duty is paid by the manufacturer; hops, for which the person that gathers them is answerable; candles and soap, which are paid for at the maker's; malt liquors brewed for sale, which are excised at the brewery; cider and perry, at the vender's; and leather and skins at the tanner's—a list which no friend to his country would wish to see further increased."

Now, Mr. President, it will be observed that there is but one article in this entire list which is an agricultural production, and that is hops. The cultivation of this article, it will be remembered, was regulated by law, as the cultivation of tobacco now is in France. The article was never exported, and could be and was protected by a heavy impost duty on the foreign article. There was not enough of the article produced for home consumption.

The only other taxes existing in England at the American Revolution were the salt tax, which was really an excise tax on the manufacture of this article: the post office tax, the stamp duties, the duty upon windows, the duty of twenty-one shillings per annum upon every servant employed, excepting in husbandry, trade, or manufacture; the license tax on hackney coaches, and the duty on salaries, fees, and perquisites of office. The notion that all agricultural products may be taxed is predicated on the decision of the Supreme Court rendered in the case of Hilton vs. United States, reported in 3 Dallas's Reports, page 171.

On the 5th day of June, 1794, Congress passed an act levying a duty on carriages used for transporting persons. Hilton, a citizen of Virginia, owned one hundred and twenty-five carriages and refused to pay the tax, which was small. The case was submitted to the circuit court of the eastern district of Virginia, and the judges being equally divided, the defendant confessed judgment and took the case to the Supreme Court on a writ of error. The decision of the court turned on the question whether the duty on carriages was a direct tax or not. Chief Justice Ellsworth was sworn into office on the day the opinion was delivered, and therefore took no part in its decision. Justice Cushing was sick at the argument, and delivered no opinion. Justice Chase delivered the opinion of the court. On the precise question at issue he used the following language:

"As it was incumbent on the plaintiff's counsel in error, so they took great pains to prove that the tax on carriages was a direct tax; but they did not satisfy my mind. I think, at least, it may be doubted; and if I only doubted, I should affirm the judgment of the circuit court. The deliberate decision of the national Legislature, who did not consider a tax on carriages a direct tax, but thought it was within the description of a duty, would determine me, if the case was doubtful, to receive the construction of the Legislature; but I am inclined to think that a tax on carriages is not a direct tax, within the letter or meaning of the Constitution."

Justice Patterson, who concurred in the judgment of the court, delivered a separate opinion, in which he used the following language:

"All taxes or expenses on consumption are indirect taxes. A tax on carriages of this kind, and of course is not a direct tax. Indirect taxes are circuitous modes of reaching the revenue of individuals who generally live according to their income. In many cases of this nature the individual may be said to tax himself."

Justice Patterson received this idea of direct and indirect taxes from the work of Adam Smith on the Wealth of Nations, where he says:

"Consumable commodities, whether necessities or luxuries, may be taxed in two different ways; the consumer may either pay an annual sum on account of his using or consuming goods of a certain kind or the goods may be taxed while they remain in the hands of the dealer and before they are delivered to the consumer. The consumable goods which last a considerable time before they are consumed altogether are most properly taxed in the one way; those of which the consumption is immediate or more speedy in the other; the coach tax and plate tax are examples of the former method of imposing; the greater part of the other duties of excise and customs of the latter."

He concluded that as a carriage is kept by the wealthy, and is consumed in the use of it, the duty on it is a tax on luxury or the expenses of living, and may be denominated an indirect tax.

Justice Iredell, in his opinion, said:

"There is no necessity or propriety in determining what is or is not a direct or indirect tax in all cases. Some difficulties may occur which we at present do not foresee. Perhaps a direct tax in the sense of the Constitution can mean nothing but a tax on something inseparably annexed to the soil, something capable of apportionment under all such circumstances."

Without determining what is a direct tax, he says that a poll tax and a land tax are certainly direct taxes. He says further, "In regard to other articles, there may possibly be considerable doubt." He concludes by using the following language:

"It is sufficient on the present occasion for the court to be satisfied that this is not a direct tax contemplated by the Constitution in order to affirm the present judgment."

Justice Wilson concurred in the judgment, but left no written opinion. By examining these opinions closely it will be seen that all the judges were forced to the conclusion that this tax was constitutional chiefly by the fact that it could not be equally apportioned to the States. For instance, Judge Chase said:

"The Constitution evidently contemplated no taxes as direct taxes but only such as Congress could lay in proportion to the census. The rule of apportionment is only to be adopted in such cases where it can reasonably apply; and the subject taxed must over determine the application of the rule."

Justice Patterson said:

"A tax on carriages, if apportioned, would be oppressive and pernicious. How would it work? In some States there are many carriages, in others but few. Shall the whole sum fall on one or two individuals in the State who may happen to own and possess carriages? The thing would be absurd and inequitable."

Justice Iredell said:

"As all direct taxes must be apportioned, it is evident that the Constitution contemplated none as direct but such as could be apportioned. If this cannot be apportioned it is, therefore, not a direct tax in the sense of the Constitution."

He then said, if any State had no carriages there could be no apportionment at all, and the tax apportioned must be collected from other articles. This mode, he proceeded, is too manifestly absurd to be supported.

I have examined the reasoning of the judges to ascertain, if possible, the extent and authority of this decision. It has been always quoted for more than it is worth. It is dangerous to extend the authority of a case beyond the facts before the court. It is true this was a tax upon specific personal property, or rather it was a tax upon the use of it. But because it was a tax on one article of personal property it does not follow that a tax may be levied upon every article of personal property. Much less does it follow that because a tax may be levied upon the use of a manufactured article of luxury, which enters into the expenses of living, that therefore a tax may be laid upon an article of agricultural production after it was estimated to enhance the value of the land, and whether it is consumed or not. A carriage is an article of manufacture, and may be taxed at the time it is made and sold or afterward in the hands of the consumer. It is in no way connected with the land. It is therefore not analogous to a tax on an agricultural production. It will be observed that no one of the judges pretended to define what the Constitution means by a direct tax. Judge Chase satisfied himself by saying that a tax on carriages is not a direct tax. He said:

"It seems to me that a tax on expense is an indirect tax; and I think an annual tax on a carriage for the conveyance of persons is of that kind; because a carriage is a consumable commodity, and such annual tax on it is on the expense of the owner."

It is perfectly clear that no judicial opinion was given in this case denying that a tax on personal property in some cases may not be a direct tax. Judge Chase said:

"I am inclined to think, but of this I do not give a judicial opinion, that the direct taxes contemplated by the Constitution are only two, to wit, a capitation or poll tax simply, without regard to property, profession, or any other circumstance; and a tax on land. I doubt whether a tax by a general assessment of personal property within the United States is included within the term direct tax."

Justice Patterson, in his opinion, says:

"It is not necessary to determine whether a tax on the product of land be a direct or an indirect tax. Perhaps the immediate product of land in its original and crude state is to be considered as the land itself; it makes part of it; or else the provision made against taxing exports would be easily eluded. Land, independently of its produce, is of no value. When the produce is converted into a manufacture, it assumes a new shape; its nature is altered; its original state is changed; it becomes quite another subject, and will be differently considered. Whether direct taxes, in the sense of the Constitution, comprehend any other tax than a capitation tax and tax on land, is a questionable point. If Congress, for instance, should tax in the aggregate or mass things that generally pervade all the Union, then, perhaps, the rule of apportionment would be the most proper, especially if an assessment was to intervene. This appears, by practice of some of the States, to have been considered as a direct tax. Whether it is so under the Constitution of the United States is a matter of some difficulty; but as it is not before the court it would be improper to give any decisive opinion upon it."

No one doubts that a tax on land is a direct tax. But we do not levy such tax by the acre, that is, an equal amount on an equal number of acres, wherever it may lie. A vacant lot in the city of New York should pay more than the same area of land in the open prairies of Kansas. And why? Because it is more productive. It yields a larger rental, a larger profit to the owner. When a direct tax is apportioned to the several States they would surely rate the rich agricultural lands that yield largely to the husbandman much higher than the poor, barren lands from which but scanty productions might be obtained. We give value to lands in proportion to what they realize, or can be made to realize, to their owners. If the rental or productions of land are large, the value will be necessarily enhanced, and the tax correspondingly increased.

Now, suppose that Congress should lay a direct tax and at the same time impose excise and income taxes, including a tax on agricultural products, what would be the result? First, the farmer, in paying the direct tax on his land, would indirectly pay on his productions, because they would necessarily go to increase the valuation of his land. Secondly, he would again pay the tax levied directly on the products themselves under the name of excise tax, but which no nation has ever called an excise tax before this age. And thirdly, he would pay another tax on the same productions in the shape of an income tax. None of these taxes could ever be returned to him in case the products themselves were raised in excess of home demand. They would partially fall on the producer, even were the home consumption ever so great.

But how would it be with the manufacturer? He, too, would have to pay the direct tax on his real estate, but its valuation would not be enhanced by the productions of the factory. The articles manufactured would be taxed under the excise, it is true, but the manufacturer would add to their price, and get it back on sale. He might also add the direct tax imposed on his factory. The only tax that would likely affect him would be the income tax. In this case the manufacturer would pay one tax, at the outside two, while the farmer would pay three. In addition to the three taxes I have named, would not the farmer help to pay the excise tax of the manufacturer on the purchase and consumption of his excised articles? And if the customs duty on the imported article of a similar character were sufficient to enable the manufacturer to add the amount of the direct tax paid on his factory to the price of his goods, would not the consumer have to pay that also?

This, I think, is a fair statement of the rank injustice of the proposed tax. We boast of our Constitution as an instrument securing justice to the people, perfect equality among the States, and guarantees against discriminating legislation oppressive to the interests of any section.

Now, if this tax on raw cotton is a constitutional tax then no branch of industry in this country is safe. The Constitution ceases to be an instrument of justice, and at once becomes an engine of oppression and wrong. If a tax of two cents on the pound is legal, then a tax of twenty cents is equally so. The limit of taxation is a mere matter of legislative discretion. No one denies that a tax of twenty cents would prevent the growth of cotton in the United States. The tax of ten cents per pound might not entirely prevent it, but would certainly restrict it to home consumption, and on the grower be oppressive.

The agricultural productions of the United States were quite varied when the Constitution was framed. As the country has become larger, embracing soil adapted to new growths, this variety has become much more marked. This thing was well understood and anticipated at that time. A rule was fixed for the imposition of direct taxes. Direct taxes included poll taxes, taxes on land, and, in my judgment, such other taxes on permanent possessions as could be apportioned. This rule could not be changed. It was not thought advisable to confine taxation exclusively to direct taxes. The exigencies of the nation might demand a larger revenue than could be obtained from this source.

Hence the power to lay "duties, imposts, and excises." These terms were well understood in the English law, and there was no necessity for defining them. It was only necessary to prevent Congress from establishing rules of inequality in their imposition. If impost taxes were greater at the ports of one State than at the ports of another the entire commercial interests of the State discriminated against might be destroyed. If the excise tax on the manufactures of one State are greater than on those of another any one can see the result without an argument. The manufacturers of the one would grow rich, the manufacturers of the other would grow poor. If stamp duties were larger in one State than in another this discriminating tax would depress business, and drive population to the more favored States. To prevent these evils it was provided that—

"All duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Now, can it be possible that with a small commerce for imposts and inconsiderable manufactures for excises, the Convention should have so carefully guarded against injustice in the laying of indirect taxes, and left the whole agricultural interest of the country subject to no rule except the combination of interest or the whims of passion and prejudice? A tax upon raw cotton can affect but few States; so with tobacco, hemp, rice, and other articles. Those States not growing any one of these articles might combine and tax it as they chose, unless prohibited by the Constitution. Unless there is such a prohibition, the Constitution is not that perfect instrument which we have supposed. I am aware that if an agricultural product is not produced beyond the demands of home consumption, it may bear an internal tax, provided the foreign article is sufficiently taxed upon its importation to protect the home product. But where an article is grown or produced in excess of home consumption, an internal tax without the privilege of drawback upon exportation is liable to destroy its production entirely, and that is the case before us.

Now, if we give to the decision of the Supreme Court the construction accorded to it by some Senators here, this strange conclusion will follow, to wit, a direct tax includes nothing but a capitation and land tax. These are fixed by the rule of representative numbers. The word "duties" refers to taxes on the use of consumable articles, stamps, &c. The term "imposts" refer only to taxes laid on articles imported from foreign countries, export taxes being prohibited. The word "excises" refers to the tax levied on manufactures, when the article is changed from the raw material into some new form. Now, this would leave agricultural productions in the raw state to be taxed ad libitum. They would neither fall in the list subject to direct taxes, for which a supposed equitable rule of apportionment was established, nor in the list of indirect taxes, for which the rule of uniformity was adopted. Now, does any sane man believe that such was the intention of those who made the Constitution? Does such a construction accord with other provisions of the instrument? The agricultural interests in the country were the most watchful and jealous of all others, and therefore the idea cannot be tolerated for one moment that they intended to leave these products to be taxed in the discretion of Congress.

My argument up to this point has been to show that an agricultural production cannot be taxed at all in its raw state. If cotton can be taxed, wheat, corn, oats, barley; hay, potatoes, and onions may be equally taxed; and if right to tax one, why not tax the other? But suppose I am mistaken in this; let it be admitted that agricultural products can be constitutionally taxed, under what head of taxation will they fall? Congress may lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises. Nobody will pretend that this is an impost or an excise tax. If the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Hilton case can be relied on, it is not a "duty." It must, then, fall under the general head of "taxes." I have already attempted to show that this term in the Constitution means "direct taxes," and none other. To give the term any broader signification would open the door to unlimited injustice. Now, I insist if any tax at all can be laid on agricultural productions, it must be a direct tax and apportioned among the States. In England a tax on a carriage was called an excise tax. Instead of imposing the whole duty on the original manufacturer, a part of it was reserved to be paid from year to year by the consumer or user of the article.

The Supreme Court perhaps properly sustained the carriage tax under our Constitution. If they committed an error at all, it was because they did not place it under the head of an excise tax. Judge Chase believed that it was constitutional, because it was a tax on expenses, and "that a tax on expense is an indirect tax." Judge Patterson said, in the same case, that "all taxes on expenses or consumption are indirect taxes." It is upon the same principle that we tax gold watches, gold and silver plate, yachts, billiard tables, &c. The tax is on the use of the article, and not upon the article itself. We had no precedent in England for taxing agricultural products. We have none here. The laws of England did not even tax the hiring of servants who were employed in agricultural products. So in the early legislation in this country. Though carriages were taxed which were used for hire or for the conveyance of persons, yet by the act of July 24, 1813, all carriages "usually or chiefly used" in husbandry were exempted. Again, by the act of December 16, 1814, the same exemption was continued.

Although we were in the midst of war in 1813 and 1814, and were imposing heavy direct taxes, stamp and excise duties, and although in January, 1815, a heavy duty was imposed on even household furniture, ranging from one to one hundred dollars, yet no thought of taxing agricultural production seems to have entered the public mind. But for the decision of the Supreme Court, that a carriage could be taxed, nobody, I dare say, would now think a cotton tax constitutional. That decision does not justify this action. All the judges in that case based their decision chiefly on the ground that a tax on carriages could not be apportioned. That reason does not apply in this case. If a tax on land can be apportioned, certainly a tax on its products can be apportioned. It may be that no carriages could be found in one of the States. But is it likely that any State would be without agricultural productions? The only other reason influencing the court was that the carriage tax was a tax on expense. This reason, of course, is not applicable to a tax on agricultural products, and especially to those which must seek a foreign market. So far from the court intimating that agricultural productions could be taxed, Judge Patterson expressly said that—"If Congress, for instance, should tax in the aggregate or mass things that generally pervade all the States in the Union, then perhaps the rule of apportionment would be the most proper, especially if an assessment should intervene."

He further said that some of the States under these revenue systems included other things than land in a direct tax. Whether it was so under the Constitution of the United States, he said, "is a matter of some difficulty;" but he repeated "as it is not before the court, it would be improper to give any decisive opinion upon it." If we seek for his opinion at all, we find it in these words: "the immediate product of the land in its original and crude state ought to be considered as the land itself; it makes part of it, or else the provision against taxing exports would be easily eluded." To support this view there is an argument in the wording of the Constitution. It is such as to indicate that some other direct tax than a capitation tax or tax on land may be imposed. The words are, "no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid." If it were intended only to include a poll tax and a land tax, why were not the words "capitation and land tax" used? The words "other direct tax" seem to signify that such a tax might include more than one article or subject of taxation. If any other article than the land itself was intended to be placed subject to a direct tax, what article so universal and so common to all the States as agricultural productions? My theory is that they are subject to no tax in kind, but if taxed at all it must be directly. All taxes levied upon them must be apportioned in the same way as a capitation or land tax. Hence the proposed excise duty of two cents per pound on cotton is an unconstitutional tax.

I now propose to give a third reason, showing the invalidity of this tax. It is notorious that much of the cotton grown in this country must seek a foreign market. Such was the case when the Constitution was formed. The home consumption did not then and will not now absorb it. Hence we cannot protect this interest by an import duty upon the foreign article. It must be exported. Now, this bill proposes to tax cotton and allow no drawback on its exportation. When Senators who favor this tax are reminded that this is tantamount to an exportation tax, and therefore a violation of the Constitution, they attempt to escape the force of the argument by saying that it is not an exportation tax. They insist that it is an internal duty, an excise tax, or something else than an exportation tax. They say that it is within the discretion of Congress to allow drawbacks or not. This, of course, makes the provision against export taxes utterly futile, if not absurd, and leads to the destruction of any interest that Congress chooses to destroy. If an article is produced in this country in excess of home consumption all that Congress has to do in order to destroy it is to levy upon it an exorbitant duty and allow no drawback when it is sent abroad. If the article can be produced anywhere else upon the surface of the earth the American producer will go there and produce it or enter into some new business at home. In the same way might any species of manufacture be oppressed and broken up.

In my construction of the Constitution, whenever a tax of any sort has been paid to the United States upon any commodity whatever, and that commodity is afterward exported, the tax must be paid back to the owner. If this is not so, Congress may regulate even to the extent of building up or destroying all industrial pursuits by its system of taxation. Congress cannot evade the constitutional restriction under any such subterfuge as this. It is not an exportation tax alone which is prohibited. In the prohibition on the States it is said "no State shall lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports." It is not said that the States shall lay no duties on articles that may be thereafter exported. The States were to be left free to adopt their own system of taxation. They had governments to support, and they must necessarily have the power to levy not only direct taxes, but other duties and excises. Many of the articles upon which they had levied duties might afterward be shipped abroad. If the State could not tax any article because it might be exported, or if, having taxed it, it had been compelled to pay drawback on its exportation, the States might have been unable to keep up their governments. It will be observed that the prohibition on Congress is in altogether different language, and language was never changed in the Constitution without a purpose. It is there provided that—

This language is much more comprehensive than it would be if it read, "no exportation tax, or no tax on exports shall be laid." I think it means, what it ought to mean, and what the framers of the Constitution evidently intended it to mean, that when an article is exported from any one of the States it may enter into free competition with the commodities of other countries. It was to induce industry to come and develop our resources. It was to invite population. It was to make our country equal in all industrial pursuits to any other country on earth. There was no doubt that a sufficient revenue might be obtained from direct taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to answer all the ends of Government, and yet leave our industry to compete on equal terms with the industry of other nations. We had the advantage of taxes upon every article of home consumption through imposts and excises, and if this proved insufficient we could resort to direct taxes. This was thought sufficient, and is sufficient for every purpose of revenue.

If by chance we tax any article which is afterward exported, the Constitution requires the payment of drawback. If the language had been similar in the prohibition on the States, the States would have been compelled to repay the tax which it had collected, when the article should be exported.

It is unnecessary to adduce reasons in favor of this construction. It is sufficient to say that with this construction the Government may supply itself with abundant revenue. Perfect equality will be accorded to each State and its people; every department of industry will be placed on a footing of equality, and the Constitution will become an instrument of justice and protection instead of injustice and oppression. As an additional guarantee, it was provided that no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another. What does this guarantee, in connection with others named, amount to if their promises can be broken by false construction? If such a tax as the one contemplated can be constitutionally levied, then all the advantages springing from equal taxation and freedom of commerce, like Dead sea fruits, turn to ashes upon the lips. The injustice of this tax is openly confessed in the proposition to allow a drawback on manufactured cotton exported, while it is denied on the exportation of the raw material. If the manufacturer needs further protection let him have it in the shape of a tariff, which, though it may be said is unjust, is at least constitutional. If the cotton manufacturer cannot go abroad and compete with the foreign article, how is it that the planter can compete in the same market with the raw material? This, then, constitutes the third reason for pronouncing this tax an infraction of the Constitution.

But if this tax were clearly a valid one, I should object to it on the score of its impolicy. First, we have had four years of war, and now have the asperities and bitterness of feeling which invariably follow civil strife. Though united we are almost two different nations. Statesmanship requires the removal of every obstacle to perfect a reunion. We want chemical affinity. A Union in name is not sufficient. We want a Union in fact. How is that to be accomplished? Certainly the most powerful means to attain this end would be to induce a large immigration into the South. This would gradually break down their present hostility and prejudice. It would give to every neighborhood in the South teachers to inculcate Union sentiment, and establish the new system of industry. It would tend to infuse into the public mind more patriotic sentiment. Northern men, who have fought for the Union, will carry their energy, industry, and intelligence into the southern States and gradually reform its material and social condition. The South is the best cotton-growing region of the world. Its culture was almost entirely neglected during the war, and in consequence the supply fell far below the demand. Great profits can now be realized by its cultivation. In this very fact Providence kindly furnishes us a means of consolidating our people again. By blending together northern and southern men in these cotton States, we shall unite their interests. Commerce it is said makes friends of nations. Trade and intercourse make friends of individuals. They will thus sooner forget the past and become absorbed in the mutual labors of the present and the anticipations of the future. As a political measure, it would be better to give a bounty upon the production of cotton for the next five years than to impose a duty. This opportunity for reaping great political advantages in the pacification of so large a mass of restless and discontented people should not be thrown away. The paltry amount of revenue to be obtained in this way is insignificant when compared with the advantages to be realized by a contrary policy.

My second objection to it under this head is, that it is vicious as a measure of economy. The civil war, in which the people of the South so foolishly engaged, has left them in extreme poverty. Many of them are actually suffering from the want of the necessities of life. Their labor system, to which they had become accustomed, is completely overthrown. The ravages of war destroyed their plantations. Long before it ceased they had nothing but a worthless currency, and at its close they had none. Many of the laborers, white and black, have been killed or disabled. The larger proportion of the southern people are not only reduced to utter poverty, but they are helpless and physically unable to repair their fortunes. In Alabama and other States there is now much suffering, and even famine is threatening. The levees on the southern waters were cut by our troops during hostilities, and the best cotton and sugar lands have been completely submerged this summer. To save the people, white and black, from starvation and suffering was one of the chief objects inducing the enactment of the Freedmen's Bureau bill. For this charitable object Congress is annually appropriating millions of dollars. Now, I submit that that economy is questionable indeed which appoints tax commissioners and pays them heavy commissions to collect from ten to fifteen million dollars to be replaced in the hands of bureau agents and distributed at an additional risk and cost among the very people from whom it was collected. Let us rather encourage them by every system of favorable legislation which is just within itself to enter with zeal upon the cultivation of their great staple for their own support and the relief of the nation.

But if these reasons be thought insufficient, I have a third one to urge, which affects the national wealth and the national finances. We now have upon our shoulders a national debt of near three thousand million dollars. That debt is not a blessing. It cannot perhaps be called a curse, for it was contracted in a good cause. At the least, however, it is a great burden, a misfortune. That debt has to be paid. Millions of the material wealth of the country was burned and otherwise destroyed during the war. That must be replaced. We cannot repair these losses and pay the public debt by the manufacture of paper money. We cannot pay it by protecting one branch of the industry at the expense of another. With much truth it has been said that agriculture is the source of all wealth. Let us then develop it in all its resources. It behooves us indeed to encourage every branch of labor, for without labor there can certainly be no accumulation of wealth. It is notorious that exchanges are largely against us. We import more than we export. We have supplied the deficit of exportation, not with the elements of wealth, but the evidences of poverty, the bonds of our indebtedness. Our country has been drained of its precious metals, and in the present state of agriculture the mines of California, Colorado, Nevada, and Montana will prove wholly inadequate to meet the balance of trade against us. Nothing is so well calculated to retrieve our condition as the cultivation of cotton. The world needs the article, and we have the best soil and climate for its production. Instead of discouraging it by an oppressive tax, we would much better appropriate millions to encourage its growth. One full crop of cotton would be worth at least $800,000,000. This would check the exportation of gold, appreciate our bonds, establish specie payments, send a large immigration of loyal men to the South, give contentment to the present dissatisfied elements of southern society, give wages to the negro and employment to the poor white, and relieve the Government from its present burdensome dispensation of charity.

A fourth reason consists in the fact that this is a discriminating tax, the only one levied upon agricultural productions, and should not be resorted to unless the necessities of the Government absolutely demand it. Such is not the case. The receipts from the customs and internal duties this year are amply sufficient to meet the current expenditures of the Government and the interest of the public debt. This fact has induced a heavy decrease in excise duties as proposed in the very bill now pending. I make no complaints against the manner in which this decrease is to be made. Many articles of manufacture are put in the free list which might very well bear a continued tax without injury to the manufacturer and without serious detriment to the public. Wealthy railroad corporations and other common carriers are relieved of tax, which will inure, perhaps, but little to the traveler or to the shipper. Large reductions are made in iron manufactures; native wines are made free; and even the manufacture of every species of agricultural implement is left without taxation. The ship-building interest, a tax on which is essentially indirect and but little injurious to anybody, is left entirely free. I might go on and enumerate many articles that could better bear a tax than the production of cotton. But, Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly shall not undertake to answer the learned and elaborate argument of my friend from Missouri at this stage of the debate, because I look upon this question, so far as the Senate is concerned, as already adjudicated. I have not the time and I have not made preparation to follow his argument through the whole course of it; but there are one or two considerations that seem to me to settle this matter. The Constitution of the United States in the first article, section eight, provides—

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

The power that is conferred upon Congress to lay taxes is as broad as the English language. No words could be used in the Constitution that would give Congress more fully and completely the power of taxation than the words here used. The only exception to the power of taxation is contained in a clause of section nine of the same article in which it is provided that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

There are two modes of levying taxes. One is provided for by the general section I have already read, declaring that "all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." The other mode is provided in section nine of article one, declaring that "no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken." The only question, then, in this case is whether this is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution. There are four classes of taxes provided for in the Constitution: one under the general name of taxes, one under the name of duties, one under the name of imposts, and another called excises. Three of these classes are expressly required to be levied uniformly throughout the United States. There is one general word used, "taxes," a word so broad that nothing can be levied by a Government upon the people that it does not include; a word of as broad signification as any that could possibly be employed. The Constitution recognizes a difference between direct taxes and indirect taxes, because after speaking of taxes generally it then speaks of direct taxes, and provides that they shall be apportioned according to population. As to indirect taxes, imposts, excises, and duties must be levied by some uniform rule in the mode provided for in this bill. Then the only question that is open for us is whether this is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. HENDERSON. Allow me to interrupt the Senator just there. He says that taxes, imposts, excises, and duties may be laid, but the latter three must be uniform. He says that the first word, taxes, is as broad as the English language. Now, I desire to ask him a question. If excises, duties, and imposts must be uniform, and Congress can levy other than a direct tax under the first word, "taxes," is there any restraint upon it unless it be that it shall be apportioned as required upon representative population? According to the Senator's argument, everything may be a "tax," and you may levy in one State just as much as you please, and in another State just as much as you please, on the same article, because if the word "taxes," as used in that connection, does not mean "direct taxes," there is no limit at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope my friend will not interrupt me further, because it is too hot for a conversational colloquy, and I do not think it is necessary. I want to meet directly and without equivocation the question that is made. I say the only question is, whether a tax on cotton is a direct tax. If it is not a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution then the argument of the Senator falls. All the argument that he bases upon the extraordinary power of Congress to break down one State or one interest by improper taxes is inherent in the nature of things. Having the full and broad power of levying taxes, that includes the power of levying a heavier tax upon the productions or consumption of one community and less upon those of another. That has been done since the foundation of the Government. The only question with us is whether a cotton tax is a direct tax. My own impression is, though that is a question which has not been decided by the Supreme Court, that a tax on cotton comes within the express meaning of "excise," within the technical meaning of the word "excise" under the English law. I find in a very good law book, Webster's Dictionary, [laughter,] this definition of "excise," and I think that as this is a legal technical term, the definition is legally and technically given:

"The word 'excise' includes any inland tax or impost laid on an article produced and consumed in a country, and also on licenses to deal in certain commodities."

The word "customs" or "duties" has now a much more contracted signification than when the Constitution was framed. Under the English law the word "duties" is almost as broad as the word "taxes." The word "taxes" is a broader term, covering all species of levies upon the people, and the word "duties" includes nearly all, although in common parlance now we generally apply that word to duties on imported goods, but those are really "imposts." The proper definition of the word "impost" is a duty on imported goods; but we have by common use applied the word "duties" to revenues collected from imported goods, and the word "excises" or "taxes" to inland revenue. When the Constitution was framed the legal meaning of the word "duty" would include all excises and all taxes except a tax on land. The definition of "duty" given in Webster's Dictionary is "that which a person owes to another; that which a person is bound by any natural, moral, or legal obligation to pay, do, or perform; and further, 'in the technical sense it is anything that is prescribed by law or by morals.'" That is the broad meaning of the word "duty," and when applied to taxes it is any duty that is imposed by law, any legal duty. I think that the framers of the Constitution have used words which cover this case. I think the word "excise" will do; I think the word "duty" will do. The Supreme Court, however, declined to give a specific meaning to these words, stating that the word "tax" certainly included everything. You may say there was simply tautology in the use of words.

Now, the question again recurs, whether a tax on cotton is a direct tax, and upon that point the Supreme Court of the United States have made as plain and palpable a decision as I think they have ever made upon any question whatever. There were but four judges, it is true, upon the bench at the time, the Chief Justice not yet having taken his seat, but those four judges all concurred in the opinion. I do not wish now to read the whole of the decision. The substance of it is, that they regard the power of Congress to be plenary and absolute, with but the single exception I have named of a duty on exports. They then go on and define what is meant by the term "direct tax." They draw a distinction between a direct tax and an indirect tax. They say that under the Constitution an indirect tax of any kind, shape, form, or manner that is not included within the words "imposts, duties, and excises" may be levied in any way that Congress may provide for; that whatever may be levied under the name of "duties," "imposts," or "excises" must be levied by uniformity, but an indirect tax that is not included within those three words may be levied in any mode provided for by act of Congress.

They then proceed to discuss what is a direct tax. In that case the question was about a tax on a carriage. If I were to say that anything in the world was a direct tax, I should be inclined to say that a direct tax was a tax upon accumulated property, that which a man had on hand. That would be our ordinary definition of the term "direct tax"—a tax on a matter on hand, on personal property, on a horse, on carriages, on cotton, on all the various products which are on hand—a completed fixed article of property. The ordinary meaning of the term "direct tax" would be a tax upon any kind of personal property; but the Supreme Court go on to show here that that was not the meaning of the framers of the Constitution. The meaning of the framers of the Constitution was to apply the term "direct tax" simply to a poll tax and to a tax on land; and the only doubt, upon which my friend from Missouri hangs the whole of his argument, was a doubt which, fairly construed, works against him, and that is a doubt expressed by one of the judges, Judge Patterson, in giving his opinion. Judge Chase said, in the case alluded to, Hilton vs. The United States, 3 Dallas, 171:

"I am inclined to think, but of this I do not give a judicial opinion, that the direct taxes contemplated by the Constitution are only two, to wit, a capitation or poll tax simply, without regard to property, profession, or any other circumstance; and a tax on land. I doubt whether a tax by a general assessment of personal property within the United States is included within the term direct tax."

And then he goes on and shows the effect of such a construction, that it would be unequal and unjust, and excludes it from the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution. Judge Patterson, in giving his opinion, says this:

"The Constitution declares that a capitation tax is a direct tax; and, both in theory and practice, a tax on land is deemed to be a direct tax. In this way, the terms 'direct taxes' and 'capitation or other direct tax' are satisfied. It is not necessary to determine whether a tax on the product of land be a direct or indirect tax. Perhaps the immediate product of land, in its original and crude state, ought to be considered as the land itself; it makes part of it; or else the provision made against taxing exports would be easily eluded. Land, independently of its produce, is of no value."

And upon this remark the honorable Senator bases his whole argument. But the judge goes on and says further:

"When the produce is converted into a manufacture it assumes a new shape; its nature is altered; its original state is changed; it becomes quite another subject, and will be differently considered."

If I were disposed to split hairs on a question of this kind, I might show that cotton, the article of commerce, is an article of manufacture, and that the process of ginning cotton makes a greater change in it than the process of converting wheat into flour makes in wheat. Flour was taxed under our excise laws without objection, but it was a tax that was very soon repealed. I have no doubt that where an agricultural article or any other article is changed in getting it ready for consumption, it becomes then a manufacture; but aside from that, in an agricultural country like ours, we cannot find any provision in the Constitution which exempts agricultural products from the same tax that may be levied upon manufacturing products. I represent an agricultural State, and yet I can find in the Constitution no principle favoring the productions of my people more than the products of any other people. If any other articles of personal property may be assessed under the form of an excise tax, so may the articles produced by my people. The distinction made by the framers of the Constitution is palpable. A tax on land or a tax on people is a direct tax; all other taxes are indirect taxes, taxes on personal property, carriages, yachts, cotton, wheat, &c. I have not a doubt that we may levy a tax upon wheat; but I do not fear that Congress will do it.

When you come to the question argued by the Senator in the closing part of his elaborate speech, I quite agree with him; I think a tax on cotton is indefensible in principle, and I do not believe it will last more than this current year. It was levied during the war at two cents a pound. I have no doubt of our power to levy it. The tax is proposed to be continued this year because all the people who have planted their cotton—I give my own reason for it—have planted it under the expectation of paying this tax. The great bulk of this tax will be paid by the consumer abroad, and therefore we are justified, under the present circumstances of the country, in putting an exceptional tax on this agricultural product; but after this year I do not suppose the cotton tax will be continued for any length of time. The very moment cotton produced in other parts of the world competes with our own production, then, as a matter of course, we shall have to abandon the cotton tax or we shall have to give a drawback upon the exportation of cotton, which will amount to the same thing; but at present we can levy this tax, I think, without any injury to any portion of our people.

As I said before, I am not prepared to enter into a further and more elaborate examination of this subject. I look upon it as settled by the debate two years ago, when it was discussed at some length. I consider it as settled by the decision of the Supreme Court. I do not think, therefore, it is worth while to continue the discussion.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Ohio says we have settled this question. We settled it in the midst of war and at a time when the proclamation of the President made the southern States enemies, and I do not think the legislation at that time, levying a tax upon cotton that might be obtained and brought from the enemy's country into our own, comes under the same head of taxes under which he chooses to tax this article now. I think it is altogether a different thing. The war is over; and now the levying of a tax upon an agricultural product in the southern States is exactly the same as levying it in the State of Ohio. I do not think our action of two years ago is any precedent at all. It was an article, then, brought from a country that was at war, an enemy's country.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 10, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Foster, Henderson, Hendricks, Norton, Pomeroy, Sprague, Stewart, and Wiley—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Creswell, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Ramsey, Sherman, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Nye, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Wright, and Yates—15.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move to amend the bill on page 22, line three hundred and sixteen, by striking out the word "four" and in-serting in lieu thereof the word "five;" the effect of which will be to pay the assistant assessors uniformly five dollars a day instead of four. It makes their pay uniform.

Mr. BROWN. It increases it.

Mr. CRESWELL. It pays them all five dollars a day instead of a portion of them. As the section now stands they receive, generally, four dollars a day. They receive, however, three dollars for every hundred persons assessed, contained in the tax list, and a subsequent provision in the section has since been stricken out paying them twenty-five cents for each permit granted to any tobacco, snuff, or cigar manufacturer. But by the provision commencing on the three hundred and thirtieth line and extending to the word "day," in the three hundred and thirty-fourth line, all assistant assessors when employed outside of the town in which they reside, in addition to the compensation now allowed by law, are to receive during the time they are so employed one dollar per day. Under the existing provisions of the bill, all assistant assessors in the country will be paid five dollars a day for all days in which they are employed in the exercise of their duties outside of their towns. I presume that that allowance is owing to the additional expense to which they will be subjected in maintaining a horse and carriage, and also in payment for their hotel bills. If the amendment I have offered shall be adopted, I shall then move to strike out this subsequent provision, and thus make the pay of all assistant assessors, either in cities or towns, at the uniform sum of five dollars per day.

In the cities the assistant assessors now receive four dollars a day for every day employed. Their pay, then, is four dollars a day for every day in the year, because, I believe, they are employed nearly all the time except Sundays, and excepting such days as they may be necessarily absent, and such days as they may be sick. The result is that their pay is reduced below the sum of $1,200 per annum, under the general provision of the per diem. Under the subsequent provision they receive comparatively an insignificant sum. I allude now to the provision paying them three dollars for every hundred persons assessed, contained in the tax list. There are scarcely any of them who return on their lists more than from eighty to one hundred names. That would make their pay, under that heading, only three dollars per annum. The subsequent provision granting them twenty-five cents for each permit granted to any tobacco, snuff, or cigar manufacturer being stricken out, they are deprived of the amount of compensation that they received under that clause. It is impossible, in my judgment, in any of the cities of this country to insure the proper men to perform the duties of assistant assessors for this sum. The enforcement of this law depends altogether upon the kind of men who are selected as assistant assessors, because they really do the work. It will be impossible, under the provisions of this bill, to secure proper and competent men to discharge the duties of assistant assessors at the rate of compensation which the law allows. It requires that these men should all rent houses, in the cities, and those houses cannot be obtained at less than from four to four hundred and fifty dollars. That will leave them for actual expenses seven or eight hundred dollars. The kind of men required to perform this duty cannot, in my judgment, be procured for that pay. They are certainly men of a superior stamp to those who are required for first-class clerkships in this city. Most of them are men of families, and it is important that there should be appointed men of that stamp, substantial men who may be raised above all temptation to fraud or any inducement to raise money other than that which may be legitimate and proper and honest; and I therefore think that the sum of five dollars a day is compensation small enough for that order of men.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The original provision was three dollars a day. They made a very considerable talk about it, and we put it up to four dollars a day. This session they have been complaining that they ought to have office rent, and we have given power to the Commissioner to allow them office rent. Now, the Senator says that will not do; they must have five dollars a day; and I do not know where it will end. He says we cannot get competent persons for less. We do get competent persons, and they are willing to hold on to the offices. They do not resign. The question is, inasmuch as this matter has been considered and settled by the committee, whether it is worth while, because a gentleman is here from Baltimore, who, I believe, has been staying here for a long time trying to get his pay raised, for us to raise their pay. I think we had better stand as we are.

Mr. CRESWELL. The provision for office rent is not at all equitable in its character, because that requires every man, no matter what may be his position, to rent an office, and many of them have apartments in their houses, for which they cannot legitimately or properly, perhaps, charge office rent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It can be allowed.

Mr. CRESWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 5, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cragin, Creswell, Howe, Kirkwood, and Ramsey—5.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Poland, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Dixon, Doollittle, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Wade, Wright, and Yates—16.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend the bill on page 107 by inserting after line twenty-four hundred and twenty-nine the following:

On shoddy-wool manufactured from woven cloth five cents per pound.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will inform the Senator that there is already a tax on that by this bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Where is it?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is a tax of five per cent. on the manufactured article.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a tax of five per cent. ad valorem, which is a very different thing from this amendment. My proposition is to tax it five cents per pound. I presume every one knows what shoddy is. It is a species of wool made out of old cloth which is introduced into the manufacture of new cloth. It is a substance, producing a very inferior article, by which the community are very much imposed upon. In the early stages of the war a great deal of this shoddy cloth was purchased for Army clothing, and great losses were occasioned by it. It is a poor and inferior article, calculated to impose upon the community. Its production ought not to be encouraged, and it is in the way of the manufacture of good articles. The woolen manufactories cannot afford to use all wool and make a good article of cloth and compete with the other manufactories which use half wool and half shoddy. This shoddy can be manufactured, I understand, from old cloths at about ten cents a pound. It is mixed then with good wool and an article is produced of course cheaper than you can make it from new wool, wool costing say fifty cents a pound.

The object of the amendment is twofold: in the first place, to derive a revenue from this shoddy; and in the next place, to encourage the manufacture of a good article, and discourage the introduction of this shoddy into manufactured articles. It goes into cloth, hats, and carpets.

Mr. CHANDLER. It ought to be taxed ten cents a pound.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I agree with the Senator; I think the tax ought to be ten cents. I first framed the amendment fixing the tax at ten cents; but Senators around me suggested "five," and I placed it at that. I should be better satisfied with ten. I think there ought to be a tax of ten cents a pound on this shoddy, so that there will be less inducement to introduce it into our cloth, and thus have less imposition practiced upon the country. Shoddy wool is an article well known. It is wool made out of old cloth. It is well understood in the country. I had three specimens of it submitted to me the other day, made out of different kinds of cloth, some of it very coarse, and some of it made from finer cloths, and a fine fiber. I trust the Senate will adopt the amendment. I shall take up no time in discussing it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I wish to say one word on this subject. This material called shoddy—called so since the war, but never before—was introduced into the use of manufactured articles in this country in order to compete with articles manufactured abroad. It was not known here until we were forced to imitate the example of those who shipped such goods into this country to be distributed to the consumers here. The Senator from Illinois cannot accomplish the result that he desires by simply preventing home manufacturers from the employment of this commodity, for the very reason that it will come in contact, as the manufacturers here have come in contact, with the foreign article.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Rhode Island will allow me to suggest that we shall have the tariff bill before us in a short time, and I shall propose, and I presume it will be done, to put a very heavy tariff duty upon all cloths manufactured of shoddy, so that we shall protect ourselves against it from abroad as well as at home.

Mr. SPRAGUE. You may do that in the new tariff bill; but that is not the law now, as I understand it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But a tariff bill is to come soon. It is well understood that we are to have a tariff bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am speaking of the case as it stands. I knew something of this commodity prior to the war. It costs the manufacturer about half a cent a pound. It is put into a machine and torn into pieces, and the fibers from old blankets and old woolen clothes of all sorts are used, as I say, to compete with the foreign article. There was no demand for woolen rags in this country prior to the introduction of this article. They could not be sold. By taxing this article out of existence the value that the people of this country derive from the sale of their own woolen clothing will become useless. You affect every individual in this country in the amount of the value of the wool that he uses when you tax this commodity in the manner in which you propose. You might just as well tax any article that enters into woolen cloth out of proportion to any other article in it, because some of the properties of that article are not of equal value to some others. Everybody who knows anything on this subject, in examining the qualities of cloth, knows at once which contains shoddy and which does not. The people cannot be deceived in the purchase of an article with or without shoddy. There is a great deal of wear in the material that is used. If you destroy its use, you destroy an article which, first, is of value in wear, as it has wear, and you destroy a large value of property which has been heretofore used, and you prevent the people from exercising economy in collecting together their old materials and making the best use of them.

Sir, if this proposition be adopted, its effect will be to legislate out of existence a quality which is very common in the people of other countries, and which we have endeavored to introduce among the people of this country, of economy in their living and in everything connected with wear. I should conceive that to be one of the most deplorable conditions of things. It is well known that we in this country live at greater expense than those abroad. Our people complain of the high price of everything in this country in comparison with the cost of the same articles in other countries, and one of the causes of those high prices is the extravagance and the waste among our people. Here is an opportunity whereby a commodity may be saved, may be put into use, and may be made an element of public wealth and of advantage.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Rhode Island says that every purchaser knows what is manufactured from shoddy. Now, I will venture to say that there are not three members of this body who can tell whether there is shoddy in the cloth of their coats or not. None but an expert can tell it. Shoddy is used chiefly, although not wholly, in thickening by fulling cloth which was lighter before the shoddy was applied. It is utterly worthless. It is a cheat. There is no wear in it. A thin article of cloth is thickened, and the shoddy filled in. Every man who has worn a coat has found a little wisp of something in the bottom of the lining. That is shoddy. It is filled into the cloth. It peeks off, and is utterly worthless. It is simply a cheat. There is no wear to it, no value to it, no object in its use except to defraud. It is true it is a recent production in this country. The English were in the habit of sending us manufactures of shoddy. They look well; they feel well; but they will cheat; they will not wear.

I remarked a few minutes ago that I thought the tax on shoddy should be ten cents instead of five. I do. I would tax it out of existence; and then to protect our manufacturers I would impose a duty of one hundred or five hundred per cent. on the importation of anything that had shoddy connected with it in any way, manner, or shape. I would stop the cheating in shoddy. This Government has lost millions of dollars since the commencement of this war by shoddy. I think we all know enough about shoddy to stop its manufacture if we can. I would prefer a tax of ten cents; but I am willing to accept five; and then when the tariff bill comes in, I will vote any tax you see fit to impose on the importation of shoddy, enough at any rate to stop the use of shoddy.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes eighteen, noes not counted.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to amend the bill on page 138 by inserting after line thirty-two hundred and three the following:

Any tax paid under the provisions of the one hundred and twenty-fourth and one hundred and twenty-fifth sections shall be deducted from the particular legacy or distributive share on account of which the same is charged.

I will explain the object of this amendment. It does not affect the Government at all, one way or the other. A tax is imposed by the one hundred and twenty-fourth section, and it is carried out in the one hundred and twenty-fifth section, upon what is called succession. A person dies, and a legatee or distributee is entitled to a share of the estate, and there is a tax upon it, and very properly. The question has arisen whether that tax is chargeable upon the body of the estate, the corpus of the estate, or upon the particular legacy or distributive share. Questions have arisen and are now in litigation upon that point. I should have no hesitation myself in saying that it should be charged upon the share on account of which the tax is laid; but there are those who suppose that, like other expenses of administration, it should come out of the body of the estate; and this amendment is offered with a view to charge this tax in the settlement of the estate upon the particular legacy or distributive share, on account of which the tax is laid.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. On page 128, after line twenty-nine hundred and thirty-nine, I move to insert the following proviso:

And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any bank, banking association, or corporation whose charter had expired and whose affairs were in process of liquidation at the time the act of June 20, 1864, took effect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. I will state it. There is in the State of New York, and I dare say there are in other States, a class of old banks whose charters had expired and whose business was in process of settlement and liquidation before June, 1864; some of them several years ago. Some of them had closed up their affairs, distributed their effects among the stockholders, and after paying all their effects, they had nothing to do but to redeem the small outstanding circulation. To illustrate it, I will take the case of the Highland Bank, at Newburg, in New York. Its charter expired in 1863. By the laws of New York, trustees were appointed to settle the affairs of the bank. They went on and settled the affairs of the bank, paid all the debts, and distributed the effects among the stockholders; but there is a circulation out, of lost bills probably, of more than five per cent. If there was less than that amount I see a provision in the new section here which would cover it; but there is more than five per cent. out. For the purpose of covering that, and meeting those bills if they should come in—probably they never will—they have deposited in a national bank the amount of their outstanding circulation in order to redeem those bills. Now, by a construction which has been given by the Commissioner, which I think, with all respect, is erroneous, he holds that this bank which had ceased to exist before this law was passed—it was no bank, no banking corporation, no banking institution, but merely a provision made by certain trustees appointed by law to redeem the outstanding circulation—he holds that this bank, as he construes it to be, is liable to the tax of three per cent. a year. They have no interest at all; they are doing no business; they merely made the deposit to redeem bills which will probably never be presented. The provision of this amendment which I have offered is, that where a bank had ceased to exist before the law of 1864 went into effect it shall not be liable to taxation under the provisions of that law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask the Senator whether such a case would not come under this provision:

But whenever any bank which has ceased to issue notes for circulation shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States in lawful money, the amount of its outstanding circulation, to be redeemed at par under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, it shall be exempt from any taxation.

Mr. HARRIS. I have thought of that, and I have been looking at that to-day, and I am not sure that it would not cover this case; but it would require these trustees to break up their arrangements for the redemption of their bills, to take their deposits from the bank where they are now and place them in a sub-Treasury.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why should they not do it?

Mr. HARRIS. It would be no advantage to the Government at all. I thought this amendment would be perhaps judicious, notwithstanding that provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. To require them to deposit the amount of outstanding circulation in the Treasury in order to relieve from tax would be rather burdensome, because the outstanding circulation is really a cumulative property made years and years ago. It would hardly be fair to make them surrender that in order to get the benefit of exemption from tax.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator from Ohio thinks the amendment is right, I have no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see any particular objection to the amendment, as it is to guard against a harsh construction of law, if the banks have gone entirely out of existence.

Mr. HARRIS. That is provided for in the amendment. It refers to banks whose charters had expired before the law of 1864 took effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. On page 153, line thirty-five hundred and seventy-two, I move to strike out "three months" and insert "one year;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided also, That no claim for drawback on any articles of merchandise exported prior to June 30, 1864, shall be allowed, unless presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within one year after this amendment takes effect.

I will state why I make this motion. I have no objection to the statute of limitations applying to such a case as this. On the contrary, I approve of it; but three months is too short a time. Those that are entitled to drawbacks in the city of New York, where perhaps most of these claims arise, have great trouble in getting them through the custom-house, so as to prepare them to be presented to the Commissioner, and it will perhaps do injustice to limit them to so short a period as three months. I am told there are very great delays in the custom-house.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator does not exactly understand the proviso which reads:

Provided also, That no claim for drawback on any articles of merchandise exported prior to June 30, 1864, shall be allowed, unless presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within three months after this amendment takes effect.

They have already had two years.

Mr. HARRIS. That is so; and yet I am told that there are claims of this sort coming within the provision of this section which are still pending in the custom-house, and they are not able to present them. I do not want anybody to be injured by it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator has probably been informed about it. Two years is an abundance of time; and this provision is to head off a great evil. There are a parcel of sharks in the city of New York who make it their business to hunt up old claims, anything they can make fortunes out of; and when parties have had two years allowed them for the absolute presentation of their claims, we want to cut them off after that time, allowing them three months more. The people who have them never would think of them; in ninety-nine cases of a hundred they do not know anything about them until they are informed by those who make a living in that way, who are continually hunting up things of this sort. I presume the Senator gets his information from them. We want to cut off these old claims, giving the parties three months more in which to present them, in addition to the two years they have already had.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maine certainly has no right to indulge in any such presumption as that I get any information from anybody who should be called a shark.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not suppose my friend has any affinity with the sharks.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maine ought to be assured that I get my information from a gentleman for whom I am willing to vouch on this floor. I understand that there are claims that have been lying for a long while in the custom-house. If this limitation were to be made applicable to the custom-house instead of to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue I would have no objection to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All they have to do is to present their claims. They do not have to make them out.

Mr. HARRIS. They cannot present them to the Commissioner until they go through the custom-house.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir, they can. There is no difficulty about it in the world. We give them three months to present their claims to the Commissioner, and then they can take all the time that is necessary to make them out.

Mr. HARRIS. I will compromise with the Senator from Maine and make it six months.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think it is a case of compromise.

Mr. HARRIS. I will change my amendment by making it six months.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to suggest an amendment on page 163. It is to insert after line forty-five of section eleven the free list, "flax and the manufactures thereof."

The law now exempts all yarns, twine, and everything made from flax, except when it is made into cloths. The object of the amendment is to exempt from tax cloths made from flax. It may not be known to the Senate, but nevertheless the fact is that there is not a manufactory in the United States of linen. Shirt-bosoms, handkerchiefs, and things of that sort, to the value of twenty or thirty million dollars a year, are imported. It is very well known that Congress, in 1863, exempted from duty flax machinery for two purposes: one was to encourage the manufacture of the article in the country, and the other was to create a demand for flax culture, with the idea of varying our productive industry and also our manufacturing. I am told that that machinery has now arrived in this country; but cloth made from flax being included in the ordinary tax upon manufactured articles, that machinery must remain useless. It cannot be used so as to compete, in the present state of the tariff, with the low prices of goods sent to this country. If, however, they are relieved from this tax it will create an interest equal, as far as it goes, to that of the cotton interest and manufacturing of the country. The Government having encouraged the introduction of the machinery into the country, it seems to me every principle of interest, right, and justice would suggest that when they have received it they should be protected in its operation.

Mr. GRIMES. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that he insert the word "cloth" in connection with the word "thread" wherever it occurs. His amendment now goes too far, as I understand it. It would exempt linseed oil, which is one of the manufactures of flax. That, I suppose, he does not intend to exempt.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is exempted now.

Mr. GRIMES. Is it on the free list?

Mr. SHERMAN. All vegetable oils are placed on the free list by this bill.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 11, noes 2; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that the whole amount of flax manufactured in this country probably does not amount to $50,000 a year, so far as I have heard of the manufacture. It is not manufactured anywhere but in one or two places in Massachusetts. If we had such a manufacture it would consume a production of our soil which is now utterly worthless and thrown out on the manure heaps. It may render that of some value which is now of no value. I feel disposed to favor the amendment. The tax does not yield us any revenue.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My objection is that we do not know much about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. We know that the flax in the country is produced simply for the seed. The oil is pressed from the seed, and then the stalk is thrown out and not used at all; it goes to waste and is good for nothing. They are now beginning to use it, and when they use it for twine and rope it is free, but if converted into cloth it is not free. I do not suppose that there are over $50,000 of linen goods made in this country, as far as I know or have ever heard.

Mr. CHANDLER. The manufacture of cloth from flax yarns is a manufacture we have been trying for years to encourage, and I certainly hope this amendment will be adopted. As the Senator from Ohio says, the product is very small, but there is a very great desire to enlarge it. Of course the importations of flax and the products of flax are very heavy, and it is for the interest certainly of this Government to promote the production of the manufactures of flax. Perhaps no country on earth is so well adapted to the raising of flax as this, and there is no reason on earth why we should not manufacture our own articles of that material. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island will prevail.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The Senator from Rhode Island has already stated flax machinery is exempted from taxation. I find in section ninety-six of the existing law that "flax prepared for textile or felting purposes, until actually woven," is also exempt from duty. This shows the spirit in which this subject has been approached, and it is in accordance with the remarks, I believe, of more than one Senator, that in the infancy of the manufacture of linen goods or the woven fabrics from flax it ought to be encouraged. The tax that would be laid upon these goods, it seems, would amount to nothing at the present time, and as much of our land is adapted to the cultivation of flax, and it is now only cultivated for the purpose of the seed, which is sold and exported from the country, I should be in favor exempting from internal tax the woven fabrics from flax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair.) The Chair will put the question again on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will now be necessary to move an amendment on page 109, in order to make it conform to the amendment just made. On page 109, line twenty-four hundred and seventy-nine, the word "flax" should be stricken out; and the word "paper" should also be stricken out in line twenty-four hundred and eighty-one, because that has been otherwise provided for.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This strikes out all the tax on paper.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; the tax on paper is put at three per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a manufacture of fine paper.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I think not. All flax that is converted into paper is then taxed three per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But this is on the "manufactures thereof." It goes clear through. It changes the whole bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may go too far in that particular; but I think it would be covered by the three per cent. clause. The word "paper," at any rate, ought to be stricken out in line twenty-four hundred and eighty-one. It is provided for in another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio propose an amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the word "flax" in page 109, line twenty-four hundred and seventy-nine, and also the word "paper" in line twenty-four hundred and eighty-one. They are provided for in another place.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the amendment of the committee introduced the word "printing" before "paper," and only included printing paper and tarred paper in the free list.

Mr. SHERMAN. But by the direction of the committee, I proposed an amendment putting all other paper at three per cent. This clause provides for a tax of five per cent., and these words ought to be stricken out of it.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. That is true.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. On page 146, line thirty-four hundred and ninety-six, I move to insert after the word "collector" the words "or deputy collector." If this amendment shall succeed, I shall move the same amendment on the next page, and a slight change afterward. The provision is, that in case a party has omitted to affix the stamp required by law to an instrument, or a copy of an instrument in case the original is lost, he may do so by appearing before the collector and paying a penalty of fifty dollars. On the next page the provision is carried further, and in case the stamp has not been placed on an instrument by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, the party may go before the collector, and by proving that fact, may put the stamp upon the instrument without a penalty. In some of the districts in the State in which I live, it will be exceedingly onerous to go before the collector. A man may have to travel one hundred or one hundred and fifty miles to see the collector of the district; and perhaps it would be so in some of the congressional districts of the State of Maine. I move to insert the words "or deputy collector," so that this may be done before the officer of each county. If this amendment prevails, I shall move to amend the next page in the same way, and also to require the person to pay, in addition to the stamp, a penalty equal to the value of the stamp. I think if these amendments are made the effect will be good. As it now stands, it will certainly be a very serious inconvenience and loss to persons living in large congressional districts.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was considered in committee, and we did not deem it safe to put this matter of affixing stamps afterward and collecting penalties into the hands of every deputy collector. There are but very few instances of their having been omitted in places where the law has been in operation; and we have provided for the southern States where the law has not been in operation. If a person has omitted to affix the proper stamp to any instrument, we did not think it would be hard for him to go or send to the collector and have the proper stamp affixed on the instrument or whatever it may be. We did not consider it safe, and the Commissioner did not, to leave the business of affixing these stamps where they have been left off in the hands of every deputy collector, but thought it should be confined exclusively to the collector who has charge of the district. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. On page 79, line seventeen hundred and thirty, after the word "thereof" I move to insert these words:

Less the actual expenses paid out by such manufacturer, producer, or agent in effecting such sale and removal.

Section eighty-six of the existing law is the one to which this amendment will apply. It reads:

"That any person, firm, company, or corporation, manufacturing or producing goods, wares, and merchandise, sold or removed for consumption or use, upon which duties or taxes are imposed by law, shall, in their return of the value and quantity, render an account of the full amount of actual sales made by the manufacturer, producer, or agent thereof."

I want my amendment to come in at this point—less the actual expenses paid out by such manufacturer, producer, or agent in effecting such sale and removal.

The tax as the law now stands is imposed upon a value that the manufacturer himself does not receive. He cannot receive the expenses of removing or transporting the goods and the expenses of selling. It will be seen, therefore, that it is a very unequal tax, because a person at a distance, in sending his goods, for instance, to New York or Philadelphia, is obliged to pay a much larger tax than he who manufactures his goods in New York or Philadelphia. The tax is sufficiently onerous when he who pays it pays upon the actual amount that he receives. If you tax him for an amount that he does not receive it produces great dissatisfaction and complaint. If you tax him upon the whole amount that he does receive there will be less complaint and less dissatisfaction. As it now stands it produces great dissatisfaction. It looks like an arbitrary tax; it looks like one that ought not to be imposed; and it is unequal, when really there can be no difficulty in executing the law so that every producer may have the benefit of the cost to the time of his entering his goods into consumption. If a parcel of goods is sold at a dollar ten cents is given for the transportation and the selling, perhaps; but upon that ten cents the Government impose a tax of five per cent. It seems to me that the committee and the Senate will see the wisdom of applying this amendment to the proposed amendment of the eighty-sixth section; and I really hope they will see that it will be to the advantage of a proper execution of the revenue law in obtaining more honest returns from the producer than otherwise would be obtained; because if the people begin to feel that the Government exercises an arbitrary will in relation to this matter, they in their turn may exercise the same spirit. I really hope that the committee will see the advantage that will result in the execution of the law and of its general policy, and will permit this amendment to prevail.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The only question is whether the whole thing shall be put in the hands of the manufacturers at their own will and pleasure and as they make out their expenses of agency and everything else. How much we should get out of the tax with that provision I leave the Senate to judge.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I do not think that is a fair way to treat that subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the way I look at it, and I think it is fair to state precisely the view I have of it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I must disagree with the honorable member on this proposition.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the provision in regard to lotteries, on page 58. I do not intend to make any motion about it, but there is an amendment proposed by the committee which I do not comprehend, and to which my attention has been called by a gentleman engaged in that business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will explain it in a moment. As it now stands, it is precisely the provision reported by the committee of the House after great consideration. The only way in which we could get the tax was by making the managers responsible for the payment of the tax. When the bill came to be engrossed the provision was not there, but there was another instead of it. The Committee on Finance struck that out and put back the original provision.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand there are but two States in the Union in which lotteries are allowed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This provision is simply to guard against fraud and to secure the payment of the tax.

Mr. HARRIS. I am satisfied.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to offer an amendment, to insert on page 135, after line thirty-one hundred and thirteen, the following:

Provided, That the list of incomes in the offices of the assessor and collector shall be open to the inspection of the public; but neither the assessor nor the collector shall furnish such list or any portion thereof for publication, nor permit the same to be copied for publication.

I hope the committee will not object to this amendment. The exposure of the lists in the offices of the assessor and collector is sufficient for all purposes of preventing frauds; and it seems utterly unnecessary to parade in the papers a list of every man's income. It is not done in England where they have the income tax, and I do not believe it is necessary here. It is very annoying; it is the most odious feature of that tax.

Mr. SHERMAN. One of the best writers on the subject of English taxation, though, recommends that it should be done.

Mr. ANTHONY. But his views do not prevail with the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not done in England because they are controlled very much by an aristocracy. It seems to me in the interest of the revenue the publication of the income returns is the most efficient means of attaining certainty. I know how the first law operated. The first law did not require these lists to be published, and it got abroad in various communities. I know in the State of Ohio that such and such persons gave such an income return when it was known that their expenditure was much more than their reported income. It had an effect upon their credit. Finally the lists were published, and a great sensation was created. The result was that in some communities the incomes of many men were doubled over the previous year, and the general result was to get double the previous year's amount. I have no doubt that in nearly every community the neighbors of a man have some general idea of his income, and if he does not give it nearly right or approaching what is right they have some means of detecting it. If it is confined simply to the books of the assessor and collector, and it is not published, no one desires to go and examine the lists and publish his neighbor's income return. It is an invidious task, and therefore it is not likely to be published. No great harm is done by income lists being published, and then the community at large generally pass judgment upon the accuracy of the returns. It is a great assistance to the assessor and collector. I see myself in this country no practical objection to it. I hope, therefore, this amendment will not be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I have another amendment to propose, but I will let the bill get into the Senate if that is desired.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have it get into the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be taken on all the amendments together, unless in cases where a separate vote is asked for.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to except from the general vote the amendments on page 116 striking out the words "foreign exchange."

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to have the amendment on page 185, relative to extending the time for the operation of the tax on State bank circulation, excepted, as I wish to move an amendment to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I desire to reserve the amendment on page 2, reducing the tax on cotton from five to two cents per pound.

The question being put on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of those reserved for a separate vote, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before acting on the other amendments, I wish to make a couple of slight changes. On page 188, section [thirty] twenty-eight, I move to strike out in line twenty-seven "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After the word "collector," in line twenty-nine of the same section, I move to insert "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment excepted at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] will now be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to add to the tenth section of the bill the following clause:

That section six of the act of March 3, 1865, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That every national banking association, State bank, or State banking association, shall pay a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of notes of any person, State bank, or State banking association, used for circulation and paid out by them after the 1st day of July, 1867, and such tax shall be assessed and paid in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. SHERMAN. Instead of non-concurring in this amendment, which I had intended to propose, I think my object will probably be better accomplished by striking out the word "seven," in line twenty, and inserting "six," so as to leave the tax to go into effect on the 1st of July, 1866, according to the present law. The phraseology of this amendment is better than that of the corresponding section of the present law.

I am opposed to extending the time allowed to the State banks to retire their circulation. The existing law provides "that every national banking association, State bank, or State banking association, shall pay a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of notes of any State bank or State banking association paid out by them after the 1st day of July, 1866." Under the present law there is no discrimination against State banks on the circulation now outstanding; but all banks are to pay a tax of ten per cent. on State bank notes which they pay out after the 1st of July. The purpose of the enactment was to compel the retirement of the State bank circulation. The effect of the legislation of Congress has been substantially to get rid of the State banks. According to a statement which I have before me, their circulation has been reduced to about fifteen million dollars; but in some of the most glaring cases the purpose of Congress as evinced by its legislation has been abused, so that one bank has now in circulation about eight times the amount of its capital stock. Some of these banks exist in Maine, some in Massachusetts, some in New York, some in Ohio, and some in the western States. I am informed by the Comptroller of the Currency that he fears that if this time is extended one year longer, and the right is given to these State banks to issue notes without restraint, they will largely increase the amount of their present circulation. Some of the banks have actually increased it within the last month or two so as to have it outstanding.

I have here a letter from a cashier of a national bank in New York, showing how this privilege has been abused in that State. He gives a list of some fourteen State banks in the State of New York, with a capital of $866,320, whose circulation is now $2,509,996. The Bank of Watertown, with a capital stock on the 30th of December, 1865, of $110,000, had a circulation of $594,371, and it appears that by the 1st of May last that circulation had been increased $257,645, making the circulation of that bank (with a capital stock of $110,000) $852,017. I have a statement from the superintendent of the banking department of the State of New York, showing that the circulation of that bank is $852,017. I have no doubt that many of the other banks in this list have increased their circulation. If we should repeal section six of the act of last year, or extend the time for retiring the State bank circulation, I fear not only that the present State banks will keep out their existing circulation to the detriment of the public credit, inflating the currency of the country to that extent, but that all the State banks now in process of liquidation will again commence issuing paper.

In the State of Ohio we had a very excellent bank system when the national act took effect, and most of our banks went into the national banking system; but some of the State banks are still in existence, not many, but some which have made no efforts to retire their circulation. While under the general banking law those who went into the national banks were limited in their circulation to ninety per cent. of their actual stock, those that kept out of the national banking associations, those that refused to come in under the general system and kept out their notes, are only liable to pay the same tax as is imposed on the other banks. They were prepared, and prepared themselves to retire the whole of their circulation and redeem the whole of their circulation on the 1st of July next; but if you extend the time one year they will undoubtedly reissue a portion of the circulation they have now retired; they will make no effort to draw in that which is now outstanding; but if you leave the law stand as it is, no national bank and no State bank dare pay out these notes, because if they do they would be liable to a tax of ten per cent. They would be bound to make a return showing it. The effect would be that every State bank would by the 1st of July next redeem the great body of its circulation, because no such circulation could possibly be used to any profitable extent.

I know that the argument has been made that this will be inconvenient in particular localities, and especially to the State banks themselves. The Senator from New York [Mr. HARRIS] tells me that in certain communities where they have relied upon State circulation, it will deprive them of circulation. So I am informed by the Senator from Maine will be the effect in certain localities in Maine. But it seems to me it should be remembered that all these State banks had for a year or two an opportunity to come into the national banking system. They did not do it in time; they waited until the amount of circulation was taken, until other banks, new and old, absorbed the amount fixed by law, and now, after they have been guilty of laches, they come in and claim an exemption that is not extended to the other banks. It must be observed, again, that by this bill we have assessed three per cent. —

Mr. FESSENDEN. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. SHERMAN. Except this: we have assessed that upon national banks, not upon State banks.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Only upon the national banks that continue to issue their old paper in connection with their new paper. That is a very different thing, they having a double circulation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where State banks have gone into the national bank system, we provide that upon the amount of their old circulation we will tax them three per cent. over and above the tax imposed upon all other banks; but we make no such provision in regard to State banks that have refused to go into the national banking system.

It seems to me that as the section we now propose to modify has been on the statute-book more than a year, as all these banks knew of it and are prepared to meet the burden of that legislation, we ought not to change it. I am therefore in favor of letting the law remain as it is; but as I prefer the language of the amendment better than the language of the old law, because it enables the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prescribe the mode and manner of assessing the tax, I will simply move to strike out the word "seven" and to insert "six," so as to leave the provision stand as it is now, taking effect on the 1st of July next.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think it is worth while to run a good idea entirely into the ground. This is not a question in which the State banks for which we propose to extend the time are so much interested as the people who are connected with them and rely upon them in different sections of the country. This clause was inserted to meet a difficulty that arises in my own State, I understand in the State of Michigan also, and to a certain extent in some other States, where the conversion of certain State banks did not take place or was not attempted until the whole amount of national banking capital had been taken up that was allowed by law. They were not converted, not for the reason that they were negligent so much as because they doubted whether the system that was to go into operation would be a success, and they did not move so fast as others. When they undertook to do it they found the whole amount was taken and they were not able to convert.

The reason why they have not called in their circulation up to this time, and why they have held on, is because they were not able to convert. They have been trying to do so, and making application after application to the Comptroller of the Currency, but he says, "My power is exhausted; I have no more circulation to give you, and therefore you are ruled out." Take, for instance, my own State. Pretty much all the eastern section of the State — and it is a large State — is supplied by one or two small banks. Our people there do a very large business; they do a foreign business; they build ships; they take freights; they have bills from abroad; they rely for getting circulation upon the banks in their own immediate vicinity. When they wind up the result is that we are tributary to Boston, Massachusetts, which has got largely more than its share of circulation, more than it wants to use in point of fact. The whole eastern part of Maine, because we cannot get a chance to convert our banks at this time, is to be subject to them. I am told it is so in other sections of the country. Now, I learn from the Comptroller's office that $10,000,000 will cover all the conversions that are necessary in the country. The object of this clause is to give time in order to allow any bill that may be passed to go into effect; and I hope one will be passed giving relief to a certain extent. Several plans have been proposed, not to oblige them to call in their circulation and distress the community all about them until we can see whether they can have an opportunity to convert by withdrawing the circulation from those States which have so much more than they want to use, cutting them down and giving a chance to the State banks which are left in different sections of the country to be converted into national banks. That is the object.

Now, whether the time allowed should be a year or not is perhaps a question. It is put at a year in the amendment of the committee for the reason that that will carry us over the next session of Congress, at which I suppose, if it is not done at this—a bill has been reported in the other House on the subject—some remedy, some relief, will be afforded to those sections of country where they have in fact no banking facilities under the operation of the law. A line cannot be carried straight square through and be considered without reference to the inconvenience it produces to the people everywhere. We must try to accommodate ourselves to the wants of all sections, if we can.

With regard to the other provision of which the Senator speaks, it is intended to meet a case which I was very anxious to meet, where a State bank had not been converted into a national bank in point of fact, but had so arranged as to become a national bank and at the same time keep up its old organization, kept out all the circulation it was entitled to under its charter and then continued issuing, not only the new circulation, but also the old, thus having a double circulation. That was an evil which ought to be met. If any national bank practiced it, as some did, it ought to be corrected.

I do not suppose that this provision will stand exactly as it is before the committee of conference. It was inserted here, as I thought, by the consent of all the Committee on Finance, in order to give an opportunity in the committee of conference to arrange the matter so that those sections of the country that are suffering for this very reason might be relieved, and I certainly hope it may be permitted to stand. We shall never be able to accomplish anything unless we take the matter into our own hands, for I am perfectly satisfied that if the Comptroller of the Currency cannot get the one hundred millions of additional capital which he proposes and which he desires to have, but which Congress is not disposed to grant, he will unquestionably oppose everything that affords temporary relief to the community unless it is done in his own way. I hope the Senate will allow this provision to stand as it is, and if there is any error or danger about it the committee of conference of the two Houses can undoubtedly arrange the matter without difficulty so as to produce no evil. If a year is too long, cut the time down to six months.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Ohio by substituting therefor—

Mr. FESSENDEN. You cannot do that; his is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see. I was about to propose an amendment as a middle ground which appeared to me to be just between the views of the Senator from Ohio and the views of the Senator from Maine. I will state the purpose of my amendment, as it may possibly have some effect on the minds of Senators in voting upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as I perceive that my amendment is not at this moment in order. If the amendment of the committee, as it now stands, is left, it gives State banks an advantage over national banks, by an excessive circulation. For instance, in the State of Vermont by law State banks are authorized to circulate their notes to twice the amount of their capital; and in other States they are authorized to circulate probably the full amount of their capital, possibly in some States more. Now, by act of Congress, national banks are in no instance authorized to circulate in excess of ninety per cent. of their capital, and in some instances a much less percentage.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But they get six per cent. on their capital out of the Government, which the other banks do not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The other banks do in the same way, for the reason that every bank in my State has the whole or nearly the whole of its capital invested in United States bonds, and they draw their interest upon them, and do their banking business on what among private persons would be regarded as a kind of kiting. It is perfectly safe, however, because they are secured; but if there should be a run upon them they would have to realize and sell their bonds. As it is, every bank invests in Government securities, and then the bank issues its own circulation and keeps it running round and round. It is no reproach to them, because the law allows it, and it is just as safe because their loans are secure. Therefore it is that this bill, as it now stands, makes an unjust discrimination in favor of the old State banks, and against the very banks that are organized under the national statute. I think there is great force in what the Senator from Maine has said as to the necessity for a larger circulation in some sections of the country than would exist without these State banks. To meet that, I propose to tax the excess of their circulation above their capital or above ninety per cent. of it, with ten per cent. now; but to all State banks that are willing to come down to a national basis of ninety per cent. or below, I am willing to grant an extension.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish the Senator would allow that to go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am obliged to allow it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The State of Vermont, where the banks are of which the Senator speaks, will undoubtedly be represented in the committee of conference, and that can be suggested then as a basis of action.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will prevail. When this tax was originally provided for I urgently advocated making it commence on the 1st of July, 1865. I think it was a mistake that it was not made to take effect on the 1st of July, 1865. Our object then was to compel State banks to drop into the national organization; and had we adopted that provision then, every State bank would have organized at once under the national system; but they stood out in my State and finally came in reluctantly. They fought as long as they could fight, and at last gave way and organized under the national system. I regret that this tax was not made operative on the 1st of July, 1865; but as it was then fixed at 1866, and as it has been understood up to this time that it would take effect on the 1st of July, 1866, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will prevail, and that we shall make it operative at the time then fixed. It certainly cannot be a hardship on any State banking organization, for they have now had a year and a half notice, and if they are not prepared it is their own fault; they ought to be prepared.

Mr. SHERMAN. The proposition made by the Senator from Vermont will not answer, because this is not a tax upon the bank; it is a tax upon the circulation of the bank paid out after the 1st of July next. If the bank would simply draw in and retain its circulation it would not be subject to any tax. This is only a tax on what is paid out after the 1st of July. That is the only effect of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My point is exactly that it is a tax, as the Senator from Ohio says, upon the circulation paid out after the 1st of July; but if you leave it as the bill now stands, a bank in my State for every hundred thousand dollars of capital can pay out $200,000 in currency, and therefore it has an unjust advantage over a national bank; but I think, in order to relieve the people and let these State banks run awhile, that it would be just to put them down to the national basis of ninety per cent., and then let them run to the next session. With that it would accomplish much of the object the Senator from Ohio has in view.

Mr. SHERMAN. They all understood the law would take effect on the 1st of July.

The amendment of Mr. SHERMAN was agreed to—ayes fifteen, noes not counted.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the consent of the Senate, I propose to strike out "July" and insert "August," ["No objection,"] as the rest of the bill takes effect on that day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next excepted amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the next excepted amendment, which was on page 116, in lines twenty-six hundred and forty-three and twenty-six hundred and fifty, to strike out "foreign exchange."

Mr. SPRAGUE. If the chairman of the committee will consent that promissory notes should also be struck out of the same clause, I would make no objection to this amendment. Foreign exchange moves the commodities of foreign countries. Promissory notes move and take care of the products of our own country. Section ninety-nine, which this clause amends, imposes a tax on sales of bullion, coin, gold, promissory notes, and other securities, and taxes them at the rate of one cent for every $100, and on all sales and contracts for sale negotiated by any person, firm, or company not paying a special tax as a broker, bank, or banker, of any gold or silver bullion, coin, promissory notes, stocks, bonds, or other securities, not his or their own property, the tax is at the rate of five cents for every $100. If a person draws a check on a bank at sight the stamp is, as all know, two cents. If he issues his note for $100, it is five cents. Foreign exchange is divided into first, second, and third bills of exchange; and upon each bill instead of five cents, the stamp is two cents, making foreign exchange pay six cents, because five cannot be divided into three parts without leaving a fraction; and for that reason the stamp tax on foreign exchange is to a certain extent somewhat higher than the stamp upon promissory notes. But to offset that there is the difference between gold and currency. Take for instance a bill of exchange for £200, which would be equal in the market to about $1,500. The bill of sale upon that exchange would be $1,500, whereas the stamp placed upon that bill of exchange would only be a stamp for $1,000, or fifty cents. If it was a note for $1,500, the stamp duty would be seventy-five cents. It is very apparent, therefore, that foreign exchange is permitted to be passed and issued at a less rate than promissory notes are permitted to be negotiated and sold. It may not be known, but it is nevertheless the fact that promissory notes have become as much a commodity of sale necessary to trade as stocks, bonds, and other securities. I trust, therefore, that the committee will not insist upon striking "foreign exchange" out of this portion of the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a good deal of force in what the Senator says; but I submit to him that if these words be not struck out now, there will be no way of amending the clause, if found to be wrong. Some members of the House committee think it was wrong to insert these words; that they ought to be out. I think the Senator had better leave the amendment in, and we can consider it in the committee of conference. I am very much inclined to agree in his views on the subject; but still I do not like to tie my hands in case it shall be found that foreign exchange ought to be excluded. There are some arguments that might be used in favor of it. I would rather, therefore, that the clause remain as we have amended it, in order to give us a chance to reconsider it, which we cannot have if there is no concurrence in the committee's amendment. The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remaining excepted amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in section one, line twelve, to strike out "five" and insert "two;" so as to make the tax on cotton two cents per pound.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "two" and inserting "three." I think that five cents is too high under all the circumstances, and I think that two cents is decidedly too low upon cotton, considering the fact that much of it will be received from foreign nations, and that it discriminates too much in favor of cotton against wool. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will agree to the amendment which I propose to the committee's amendment, making it three instead of two cents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was inclined to vote for three cents in committee, but upon examination and more mature reflection I am satisfied in my own mind that two cents is as much a tax as ought to be levied upon cotton. I shall vote now for the two cents as it has been reported by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, no; let us finish the bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This is too important a subject—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope we shall not adjourn. Let us pass the bill. We have got nearly through the amendments.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. EDMUNDS to the amendment of the Committee on Finance, resulted—yeas 6, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Edmunds, Howe, Poland, Trumbull, and Wade—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Morgan, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Conness, Craig, Dixon, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Wright, and Yates—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to strike out the sixth section of the bill on page 6. It provides for a drawback on cotton fabrics, allowing no drawback on the raw material. If raw cotton can be shipped to foreign ports, and can compete in foreign markets with foreign cotton, I cannot for my life see the necessity of allowing a drawback upon the manufactured article. If there is any reason for it, I am sure I am not hostile to the manufacturers of cotton.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state to the Senator that a small export goes on of coarse fabrics. We do not export anything except mere coarse fabrics. They come in competition with coarse manufactures made abroad from Surat cotton. It is a comparatively small item of our exports—I do not know how many millions. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio recollects it better than I.

Mr. SHERMAN. The last three or four years it does not amount to anything. It used to amount to something.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is trifling. There is a tax already on the machinery, on the manufacture, on the income derived, and everything of that description. If you refuse to allow a drawback it puts an end entirely to any chance of exporting these coarser fabrics, for they cannot come in competition in foreign markets with—

Mr. HENDERSON. What are they manufactured from?

Mr. FESSENDEN. From Surat cotton. They can hardly compete with Surat cotton now. That is the simple state of the case. It is a small matter in amount, comparatively, but it adds something to our exports, is of value to the country, and it is entirely destroyed unless a drawback is given. Ever since the duties were put on a drawback of the same amount has been allowed. As it is they lose about fifteen per cent. in the export.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me ask the Senator, then, if he has objection to an amendment. It now reads, that on articles "manufactured exclusively from cotton and exported" there shall be allowed as a drawback an amount equal to the tax. Has he any objection to saying articles "manufactured exclusively from cotton imported from foreign countries?"

Mr. FESSENDEN. Of course, for then we should gain nothing. I say it comes in competition abroad with coarse cotton manufactures made from Surat cotton, and some in our own markets; but the very object is to enable those who manufacture it to export it, and that the country shall have the benefit of the export in the competition in foreign markets. It adds just so much to our exports; but if there is no drawback allowed there is an end of it; we cannot export it at all. The section is unquestionably right as it stands. The House agreed to it almost without a division. The thing is understood. I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will not insist if I can understand it. The Senator is generally very clear in his statements, but for my life I cannot understand it:

That upon articles manufactured exclusively from cotton, when exported, there shall be allowed as a drawback an amount equal to the internal tax which shall have been assessed and paid upon such articles in their finished condition, and in addition thereto a drawback or allowance of as many cents per pound upon the pound of cotton cloth, yarn, thread, or knit fabrics, manufactured exclusively from cotton and exported, as shall have been assessed and paid in the form of an internal tax upon the raw cotton entering into the manufacture of said cloth or other article.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do I understand that our cottons, upon which an internal revenue tax has been levied of two cents a pound when manufactured here, come into competition in foreign markets with goods made from Surat cotton? I thought ours were the very best cottons upon the earth.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All we can export is coarse cottons; we cannot come into competition with others, although I should like to see it grow up. If it could be it would be very much for the interest of the country; the larger the better, for we should have so much larger exports. It takes very little from the internal revenue.

Mr. HENDERSON. It may be right, but it strikes me that it is simply this: it is laying the foundation for the very thing which I made objection to this morning; it is that you may enable Congress to tax, constitutionally as it is claimed, an article in the raw state, but as soon as it gets into a manufactured condition, when it is exported, the tax that was paid upon the raw material is paid back.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly that is the drawback.

Mr. HENDERSON. If that thing can be tolerated constitutionally, I do not understand the Constitution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It has been tolerated for many years.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know it has been tolerated, but never before this war commenced.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Because we had not occasion to lay an internal tax before.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, we have laid internal taxes again and again, but we never laid an internal tax on an agricultural production before. There is the difficulty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not feel disposed to argue that question. The Senator stated his views at length and the Senate was decidedly against him, as he is aware. It is hardly worth while to reargue it now.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senate was decidedly against me in regard to the tax on cotton. Now I want to know if the Senate is decidedly against me on the subject of allowing a drawback to the manufacturer of a tax which was paid by the planter on the manufactured article when he exports it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The purchaser pays the tax.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is taking the tax from one man and giving the drawback to another. Why not allow the planter to get his drawback when he exports the article?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The planter does not pay the tax under this bill. Each district is a bonded warehouse.

Mr. HENDERSON. Somebody pays it, but nobody who exports it in the raw is allowed a drawback under this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Of course not; the drawback is on the manufactured article.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is a bonus to the manufacturer.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire now to offer an amendment to come in after the word "dollars," in line twenty-six hundred and sixty-four, the object of which is to determine the value of bills of exchange and credits in coin, for the purpose of taxation and stamp duties. I wish the Senator from Maine would agree to this amendment and let the matter go to the committee of conference, to be finally arranged.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will hear it read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to insert after the word "dollars," in line twenty-six hundred and sixty-four, the following words:

For the purpose of the tax on sales and stamp tax, gold and silver bullion and coin shall be taken at the face value thereof, increased by the price of gold at the date of sale; and bills of exchange and letters of credit shall be rated at five dollars per pound sterling, increased by the price of gold at the date of the issue of such bill of exchange or letter of credit.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is perfectly impracticable, and cannot be carried into execution, in my judgment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to submit one other amendment. On page 135, I desire to amend the amendment of the committee in relation to the income tax by inserting after line thirty-one hundred and thirteen the following:

And in addition thereto a tax equal to the tax heretofore levied on the gains and profits and income of other citizens during such times as they may have carried on said business.

It will be rather an astonishment to the people of the country to learn that persons owing allegiance to foreign Governments who have for the past three years transacted business in this country have been exempt from tax on their income. All foreigners, as I understand, who have been engaged in any business in this country, and who have acquired an income, have been exempt from income tax ever since the income tax law was passed. The design of this amendment is that they shall pay a tax equal to the tax that the citizens of the United States have paid during that time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The amendment now offered by the Senator from Rhode Island is wrong in principle. It is to make up defects of our former tax bills, where people have been exempted, because we did not so frame our bills as to catch them; to go back and collect taxes on them for three or four years past when they were not liable to tax by any law.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 708) for the relief of Dr. Edward Jarvis, and the bill (H. R. No. 711) for the relief of James Fitzgibbon, were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, June 25, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. Boynton.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order the calling of committees for reports to go upon the Calendar and not to be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider, commencing with the Committee of Elections.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order for Thursday next after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

The call of committees having been concluded, the Speaker stated as the next business in order the calling of the States and Territories for resolutions in the inverse order, commencing with the State of Vermont where the call rested on last Monday.

PAY OF CLERKS.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE offered the following resolution, and demanded the previous question thereon:

Resolved, That the compensation of the file, printing, petition, stationery, and principal engrossing clerks be made equal to that of the assistant disbursing clerk, and that John M. Barclay, Journal clerk, receive a like increase of compensation with that of assistant disbursing clerk under the resolution of the House of the 18th instant; said increase of compensation to commence at the same time provided in said resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman to agree to an amendment. I think he will do it. Instead of having the increase of these salaries perpetual I think we should confine all of them, if we vote an increase at all, to the present Congress. I am opposed to the whole thing, but if the resolution is going to pass I want it to pass with that limitation. I ask the gentleman to accept this amendment, "provided that the increase of salaries made at this session shall not extend beyond the present Congress." Let the next Congress do as it pleases.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the gentleman withdraw the previous question?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] that it may be modified by adding the words "until otherwise ordered."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I appeal to the gentleman from Vermont to accept the amendment I suggested.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE was understood to give his assent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Vermont accepts it so that the increase shall extend only to the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. ROLLINS. I hope the previous question will not be sustained.

Mr. HALE. I would inquire if it is in order to make a reference of this resolution to the Committee of Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Not pending the previous question.

Mr. HALE. Will it be if the previous question is not seconded?

The SPEAKER. Any motion will then be in order.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to lay the resolution on the table, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question being taken on laying the resolution on the table, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered, and the Speaker appointed Messrs. WOODBRIDGE and BOUTWELL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 13, noes 79.

The Speaker voted in the negative to make a quorum; so the motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the gentleman from Vermont yield to me for a question?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I must decline to yield.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire only to ask the gentleman if he knows what the pay of these officers is now.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I decline to yield.

The question was put upon seconding the demand for the previous question, and there were—yeas 71, noes 23.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered, being upon agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution, as modified, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the compensation of the file, printing, petition, stationery, and principal engrossing clerks, (I. Strohm, A. J. Larner, and E. Cowan,) be made equal to that of the assistant disbursing clerk; and that John M. Barclay, Journal clerk, receive a like increase of compensation with that of said disbursing clerk under the resolution of the House of the 18th instant; said increase of compensation to commence at the same time provided in said resolution: Provided, That the salaries of all officers of the House increased at the present session shall not extend beyond the first session of the next Congress.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays on the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROLLINS. Is it in order for me to ask a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont declines to yield, and the House is acting under the previous question.

The question was taken on agreeing to the resolution; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 21, not voting 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Blaine, Boyer, Buckland, Coffroth, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Hayer, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Latham, George V. Lawrence, LeBlond, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McCullough, McKee, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Frowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen P. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Baker, Baldwin, Benjamin, Boutwell, Hale, Aaron Harding, William Lawrence, Marston, Niblack, Perham, Pike, Price, Rollins, Sawyer, Thornton, Trimble, Ward, Elihu B. Washburn, and William B. Washburn—21.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Banks, Baxter, Bingham, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Desires, Delano, Denison, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grider, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hart, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Julian, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Ladin, Lynch, Marshall, McClurg, McIndoe, Mercer, Moulton, Nicholson, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, and Wright—73.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. WOODBRIDGE said: From what has been stated to me by one of the clerks, it appears that there may be some misunderstanding as to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois which I accepted. I accepted an amendment that this resolution should not apply after the present Congress, but I did not accept an amendment that cases in which the amount of pay had been already established by the House should be affected by the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I stated distinctly in offering my amendment that I did not see any reason why the salaries of those which had been already increased should remain intact while the salaries of those proposed now to be increased should only be increased for this Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the situation of the resolution as he understands it. After the gentleman from Vermont introduced the resolution and demanded the previous question upon it, the gentleman from Illinois suggested a modification, which was accepted by the gentleman from Vermont. After it had been reduced to writing and reported to the House, the gentleman from Illinois stated that it did not cover all that he intended that it should cover; that he intended to cover the increase of pay of all the clerical force, and the gentleman from Vermont did not dissent from that construction.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. If I had understood it I should certainly have dissented from it. I had no intention of making the resolution apply to those whose salaries had been increased by a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The House has already voted on the resolution and has decided upon it. If the gentleman from Vermont states that he misunderstood the matter and desires another roll-call, that can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROLLINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois stated distinctly that his modification was intended to cover the cases of all those whose salaries had been increased and the gentleman from Vermont did not object to it at the time.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I merely wish to say that if I had understood the gentleman to have proposed any such amendment I should have disagreed to it. I do not want now to complicate the matter, and I suppose the best thing I can do is to let it go.

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOUSE LIBRARIAN.

Mr. BLAINE. There have been a great many salaries increased of gentlemen who have hitherto been paid very respectfully. I now offer a resolution, upon which I call the previous question, to increase the salary of a man who now receives but three dollars a day, although he is one of the most faithful and attentive officers of the House. I offer the following resolution, and call the previous question:

Resolved, That the salary of Paul Stevens, librarian in charge of the Hall library, be fixed at $1,500, beginning with the present Congress.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLAINE. I cannot yield.

The previous question was seconded.

The question was then taken upon ordering the main question; and upon a division there were—yeas fifty-five, noes not counted.

So the main question was ordered.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF HOUSE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay the clerks and employes of the same, receiving salaries of $1,200 or less, a sum equal to twenty-five per cent. additional compensation upon the amount received by said employés, to date from the commencement of the Thirty-Ninth Congress: Provided, That the extra twenty-five per cent. shall be paid only during the present Congress.

Mr. ROLLINS. I object to the resolution.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE subsequently said: I understand that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] withdraws his objection to the resolution.

Mr. ROLLINS. I will withdraw my objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time if I am allowed to say a word or two in explanation of my objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I have no objection to the gentleman's making his explanation, though I think the resolution will commend itself to everybody.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have opposed all these resolutions for the reason that I believe it to be a bad policy to increase the pay of the employés of this House in the manner in which it has been done, without any sort of inquiry whatever. There is a standing Committee of Accounts on the part of this House whose business it is to take all these matters into consideration. Now, I object to the manner in which these things are being done, because great injustice is often done, and in my opinion great injustice will be done by the passage of this resolution. I think this resolution should be referred to the Committee of Accounts, for them to thoroughly inquire into the matter. I am not opposed to the policy of increasing salaries, for I think the pay of many of our employés should be increased; but I think the increase should be made after a full and complete examination.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have no doubt it is very important for the Committee of Accounts to have knowledge of these matters. But if I am not mistaken that same committee the other day reported in favor of an additional clerk in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms without the House having called for or recommended any such thing.

Mr. ROLLINS. The gentleman is mistaken. A resolution making that recommendation was introduced into the House, referred to the Committee of Accounts, and reported back to this House unanimously by the committee.

Mr. WARD. I beg leave to correct my colleague on the Committee of Accounts, [Mr. ROLLINS.] I have never given my consent in any way to increasing salaries or employés whether in committee or out.

Mr. ROLLINS. The gentleman may not have been present when the committee acted upon that subject. But that is a matter of no importance in this connection.

My objection to this whole thing is that it is doing it without a fair and proper examination of the matter. I think there are some employés of this House whose salaries should be increased; but there are also others whose salaries should not be increased. But this resolution proposes an indiscriminate increase of the whole, without any inquiry whatever, the increase to date back to the commencement of this session. I am satisfied that if the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WOODBRIDGE] was familiar with this whole matter, he would be the last man to introduce the resolutions he has introduced into this House, and which he now urges the House to pass. The resolution is proper enough, perhaps, so far as it applies to some of the employés of the House; but it is improper so far as it applies to others. I hope that even at this late day the House will take a position upon this subject which is right and proper; and allow all these matters to be inquired into by the proper committee before action is taken upon them. And if it is in order, I will move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] only does me justice when he says that if I knew this to be an improper resolution I would not introduce it. I deem it to be absolutely and essentially a just and proper resolution toward a class of employés who are now receiving salaries entirely inadequate to their support. Now, this resolution does what? It simply makes all the doorkeepers receive the like pay and compensation. Some of them receive now $1,500 a year, others receive $1,200 a year. The $1,200 men, to my knowledge, are as efficient as the $1,500 men. If the resolution I have offered shall be adopted it will make them all $1,500 men. And in order to make no distinction between them and other employés who receive less than $1,200, the resolution provides that all employés who receive less than $1,200 shall have this increase of pay. I believe it is due to these employés that we should pay them enough to support them. I do not think it is true economy for the Government to pay so low salaries that they cannot obtain the services of men entirely competent to perform the duties of their offices. I believe this to be a just resolution—just to these officers, and not an extravagant one by any means. I hope that the resolution will be adopted. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WARD. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Vermont. He says that some of the doorkeepers get $1,500 while others get $1,200, and he wants to equalize the pay. Now, I am in favor of equalization; but I would suggest to the gentleman that the best means of accomplishing this is to make the salaries of all of them $1,200.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his suggestion; but I prefer to equalize up instead of equalizing down. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ROLLINS to refer the resolution to the Committee of Accounts, there were—ayes 40, noes 53.

Mr. ROLLINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ROLLINS. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the resolution was not referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BALDWIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPALDING. I suggest that this resolution ought to include the Chaplain of the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution cannot be modified now except by unanimous consent, as the House is acting under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I must object to increasing the pay of the Chaplain.

Mr. SPALDING. Why?

Mr. LE BLOND. Because he has done nothing but pray abolitionism during the whole session.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The Chair will state, however, that, as he thinks, the terms of the resolution include the Chaplain, whose salary is less than $1,200.

The question was taken; and it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 76, nays 29, not voting 77; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Blaine, Boyer, Buckland, Cobb, Coffroth, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Hayes, Henderson, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Latham, Loan, Marvin, McCullough, McKee, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Baker, Baldwin, Boutwell, Broomall, Dawson, Eldridge, Finck, Aaron Harding, Laffin, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Marston, Mercer, Niblack, Perham, Price, Ritter, Rollins, Scofield, Shanklin, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Ward, and William B. Washburn—29.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Baxter, Bingham, Blow, Brandegee, Bronwell, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, McClurg, McIndoe, Morrill, Moulton, Nicholson, Noel, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Platts, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Taber, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Williams, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—77.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. GRINNELL. My colleague, Mr. HUBBARD, has been called away by indisposition.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. My colleague, Mr. BAXTER, is confined to his bed by sickness.

Mr. LE BLOND. When my name was called, I voted under a misapprehension. I now understand that this resolution embraces the Chaplain. I therefore change my vote from "ay" to "no."

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I vote "no" for the same reason.

Mr. McKEE. Because the resolution embraces the Chaplain, I change my vote from "no" to "ay." [Laughter.]

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL SECURITY IN SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. PERHAM submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas Captain John E. Bryant, recently of the county of Oxford, in the State of Maine, was, a few weeks since, brutally assaulted, and his life greatly endangered, in the streets of Augusta, Georgia, by a citizen of that State, because, as is reported, of the efforts the said Bryant had made for the elevation of the colored people of that State and the part he bore in a movement to decorate with flowers the graves of the soldiers who fell in the defense of the Union cause; and whereas it is reported that Captain C. C. Richardson, of the same county of Oxford, was on the 12th instant attacked at Thomasville, Georgia, by a man named Lightfoot, by whom he had been ordered to leave town, and shot through the neck and hand; and whereas both of these gentlemen served the country with distinguished ability and bravery during the war, and are now entitled to the protection due to American citizens in the State of Georgia which they assisted in saving to the country by their valor, and in which they are attempting to establish themselves in the practice of their profession and make their future homes; and whereas similar cases to those recited above are understood to be of frequent occurrence in the States recently in rebellion, thus rendering it extremely hazardous for northern men to attempt to settle there; and whereas the Richmond Examiner, a paper published in Richmond, Virginia, and receiving the patronage of the Administration, being one of the papers designated to publish the laws of Congress, in its issue of May 4, 1866, used the following language:

"THE SHRIEK OF COWARDS.—No better proof of the dastardly nature of the 'loyalists' could be found than their evident trepidation when left without protecting bayonets. We hear a cry of alarm at Staunton. The Union men are afraid of their own shadows if a Federal soldier is not at hand to reassure them. They have guilty consciences that oppress them heavily, and they will not find peace and quiet until they confess and repent. We assure the authorities at Washington that secessionists are not such asses as to expose themselves to further hardships by their own acts, and the shriek of cowards at Staunton is more a call for greater oppression of the true Virginians than for a protection of the lion-hearted Unionists. The fact is, that when the blue uniforms are withdrawn, the 'loyalists' have nobody to keep them in countenance, nobody to associate with, and they feel very like they had got into the wrong paw. Let them seek congenial society elsewhere, if they do not like the contempt of the honest and respectable throughout the South. We are not likely to pay them any respect if they live among us a thousand years."

And whereas the spirit of the foregoing extract appears to predominate in the States referred to, and the citizens of these States who continued loyal to the Government during the war, and especially those who served in the Union Army, are insultingly proscribed and excluded from social and political privileges: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this House whether the personal rights of citizens of the United States are at present sufficiently protected in said States, and whether any further legislation is necessary to clothe him with sufficient authority to protect all the loyal citizens of the States recently in rebellion in the enjoyment of their constitutional rights.

THE SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the preamble and resolution will go over until Monday next.

MONUMENTS FOR NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide suitable monuments for national cemeteries; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with leave to report at any time.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a personal explanation as well as an appeal to the House. Some days ago action was had in reference to Senate bill No. 317, to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman making a personal explanation?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS. Those interested in that bill came here and asked me to take charge of it, and when it came here to let it lie upon the Speaker's table and not to let it be sent to a committee, and I agreed to do so. I remained in the House until within a few minutes to four o'clock p. m. I was unwell, and became feeble. The call ceased, and I asked the Speaker whether he thought the call of any more bills would take place, and he told me he thought it would stop where it was. I went to the committee-room and got my hat and was about to go home when the call was renewed. I came in just at what I supposed to be the call of the Kansas bill, and I asked that it lie upon the Speaker's table, as I had promised to those who asked me to take charge of it. There was no objection, and I went home. I found, next morning, instead of bill No. 317, another bill was allowed to remain upon the Speaker's table, and bill No. 317 was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. I asked that the Journal should be corrected. It was my fault, and not that of those interested in the bill, it was placed in that condition. It was not from any negligence on my part, but on account of sickness I was obliged to leave at the time I did; but, sir, it was objected to my correcting the Journal in that way. I have waited till now to move a suspension of the rules, if necessary. I ask, first, by unanimous consent, that Senate bill No. 317, to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864, be placed back upon the Speaker's table. It can remain there, subject to the disposition of the House. I do not want my mistake to prejudice gentlemen who have an interest in the bill. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I rise to a personal explanation. I have been boarding at a public hotel in this city during most of this winter. I have had gentlemen call on me at the hotel, respectable gentlemen, to tell me about the Pacific railroad. Each of these gentlemen very kindly gave me his views of what would be to the interest of this country. If I know myself, that is exactly my policy; I want to do what is to the interest of this country. I was told that these bills were coming from the Senate, and when they came I expected to hear from these railroad men at the West, and get their views. Some of them wrote to me. They said when the bills came to the House and were referred to the committee they would come and explain their views. I watched the bills. They came to the Speaker's table.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks he was taken advantage of. I do not like to see him going back on himself. When other people have impugned his sagacity I have stood up for him, as everybody knows. These bills were on the Speaker's table, and I was informed by one side of this case that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would take care of that side. I thought that I could safely take care of the other side by moving to refer the bill to himself. He is on the committee to which we referred this bill, and I thought it would be doing him no injustice to refer it to him. There is no man in this House who has followed him so blindly as I have. [Laughter.]

My friend from Pennsylvania made a motion the other day to lay one bill on the table. I was not watching that bill. That was his business, not mine. But when we came to the proper bill I wanted to send it somewhere, and where could I send it better than into the arms of my friend from Pennsylvania? So, into his arms I sent it, and there it is now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am free to say that I know nothing about the merits of these bills. I have heard both sides kindly, fairly, and impartially. But from a long experience in this House, I have no confidence in the professions of a lobby man anyhow. He is like a lawyer, he works for his client; and when a man comes into this House and tells me his story, I regard him just like a lawyer. He has got his fee and is working for the men who sent him here. I have heard the lobby men on both sides of this question, and I have asked that this bill might go to this committee. I am opposed to leaving it on the Speaker's table, because some morning or evening when but few of us are here it will be taken up and passed. It is not a thing that is to be discussed in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and five minutes will settle the case when the lobby have notified their men. Therefore, without saying anything more either for or against it, I propose that it do not lie on the Speaker's table, where any member can get up here some afternoon and take a snap judgment on the House.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I was not going to discuss the merits of the question.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Let me finish my remarks, and then I will yield with great pleasure to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Well, now, Mr. Speaker, we have been passing a great many of these railroad bills this session, and no member of this House knows when called upon by his constituents what they have been doing. And now you ask me to let a great railroad grant lie on our table where in five minutes it can be disposed of under the previous question. I never will consent to that. The bill is now referred to a committee of which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is a member, and of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is a member. I do not know who the other members of the committee are, but the bill is in the committee now, and what I propose is, that it shall remain in that committee, where every member of the House and every man in the country shall have the privilege of going before the committee and discussing it, and thus all sides of the question can be heard. I want only fair play.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to object.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I do not object to the gentleman's speaking, but I object to his motion.

THE SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's object can only be reached by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not propose to refer to the merits of the bill. I have stated the reason why those interested in the bill were deprived of what they desired. It was a mistake on my part, and I simply ask that the bill be placed where it was, simply leaving it on the Speaker's table, subject to all the action it would have been subject to but for my mistake.

As objection is made, I move a suspension of the rules so as to allow the bill to remain upon the Speaker's table.

The question was put; and there were—yeas 74, noes 36.

Mr. ALLISON demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to speak five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. I object.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 38, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Coffroth, Cullom, Dawson, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Larkin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McKee, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rousseau, Schenck, Seofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Stillwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—83.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Boutwell, Chandler, Cobb, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eldridge, Eliot, Grinnell, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Julian, Marston, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Spalding, Taylor, Warner, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, and Windom—38.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Baxter, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Culver, Darling, De-frees, Delano, Denison, Dumont, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hill, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Lynch, Marshall, Melndoe, McRuer, Morrill, Moulton, Nicholson, Noell, Plants, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Taber, John L. Thomas, Van Aernam, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright—61.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the Committee on the Pacific Railroad was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the same was transferred to the Speaker's table.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish to say that there is no disposition to take any advantage of the fact of the bill being where it now is. I do not propose to call it up to-day. I propose to let it remain where it now is until gentlemen shall have had a chance to examine it.

CONTESTED ELECTION—BOYD VERSUS KELSO.

Mr. UPSON. I rise to a privileged question. I am instructed by the Committee of Elections to make a report in the contested-election case of Boyd vs. Kelso, accompanied by a resolution. I do not propose to ask for action on the resolution at this time, but will call it up at some future day. I move that the report and resolution be printed and laid upon the table.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN R. KELSO is entitled to retain his seat in this House as a Representative in the Thirty-Ninth Congress from the fourth congressional district of Missouri.

The report was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

DORENCE ATWATER.

Mr. HALE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire and report whether, in the conviction of Dorence Atwater, late a private in the general service of the United States Army, on the charge of larceny, before a court-martial held at the city of Washington in or about the month of September, 1895, and in the finding and sentence of said court-martial, and the execution thereof, any injustice was done to said Atwater which ought to be redressed; and whether in the proceedings against said Atwater before said court-martial, or prior or subsequent to the same, any officer or officers of the United States Army was or were guilty of oppression, cruelty, injustice, or other conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman; and also to inquire and report whether, and since the conviction of said Atwater, any officer or officers of the United States Army, has or have been guilty of oppression, cruelty, injustice, or other conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in improperly attempting to prevent, hinder, or delay the pardon of said Atwater, or the canceling and annulling the sentence of said court-martial, or in any manner improperly interfering or attempting to interfere with the course of public justice, or the exercise of executive clemency; and whether any further legislation is necessary to protect the rights of citizens and of the rank and file of the Army against oppression and injustice under color of military authority or martial law, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to this House copies of the record and proceedings of the court-martial held at the city of Washington, in or about the month of September, 1863, in the case of Dorence Atwater, late a private in the general service of the United States Army, including all testimony taken before the said court-martial, together with all orders and papers relating to the finding or sentence of said court-martial, or the execution thereof; and also copies of all papers subsequently presented to the President in relation to the case of said Atwater, and looking toward the canceling or annulling of the finding and sentence of said court-martial, or other redress to said Atwater; together with any and all reports, recommendations, statements, protests, or other papers that may have been received by the President from the Judge Advocate General of the Army, or from any other officer or officers of the Army touching the case of said Atwater, or any action or proposed action thereon.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolutions.

Mr. HALE. In offering these two resolutions upon the same subject, I ask the attention of the House for a few minutes while I briefly state the facts upon which they are founded. This is a matter affecting directly only a very humble individual, a citizen of the State of Connecticut, who served for some years as a private in a volunteer regiment of the State of New York. Indirectly I think it affects the rights and privileges of every citizen of the United States, and particularly of every soldier, whether in the regular or volunteer service.

I have here upon my table two memorials, which I propose to present to-day under the rule for reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, bearing upon the subject. One of them is a memorial of the party immediately interested, Dorence Atwater, setting forth the facts in his case, and asking that this Congress may afford him proper relief. The other is a memorial of a large number of highly respectable citizens of the town of Terryville, Connecticut, his own residence and native place, setting forth their knowledge of his character, certifying him to be a young man of the highest standing and integrity, morally and intellectually, and setting forth the facts of his case as they have learned them and asking the action of Congress upon it.

The facts of his case are very briefly these: Dorence Atwater, at the age of seventeen years, in 1861, enlisted in a regiment of New York volunteers. He served down to the month of August, 1863, at which time he was taken prisoner at Hagerstown, Maryland, during the pursuit of the rebel army on its retreat from Gettysburg. He remained a prisoner in the hands of the rebels for twenty-two months, several months after his term of enlistment had expired. During his confinement at Andersonville he was detailed as clerk in the office of the rebel surgeon of the prison. It there became his duty to keep what was called "the dead-list," the record of those who died in the Andersonville prison. This record he kept for many months, during which time the deaths amounted to over twelve thousand. The idea occurred to him while he was there keeping those records that the information afforded by that list would be of the highest value and importance to the citizens of the North, the relatives and friends of those soldiers who were there dying by hundreds and thousands. At the risk of his life, he succeeded in making a complete copy of that dead-roll, and when he was paroled he secreted it on his person and brought it through the lines with him to the parole camp at Annapolis. It appears that, subsequently, some of the officers of one of the staff departments in Washington, learning that Atwater had such a list, called upon him to enter into negotiations for the surrender of the list to the Government. He did enter into such negotiations, and finally upon urgent application and against his own wish (he desiring simply to publish this list for the benefit of those who were anxious concerning the fate of their relatives and friends in the rebel prison) he entered into an agreement with a bureau officer in this city to surrender these rolls to the Government, as he affirms, on three conditions: first, that he was to receive $300; second, that he was to be appointed to a clerkship in the War Department; and third, that these rolls when copied by the Department should be returned to him.

The record of the evidence before the court-martial that afterward tried him shows that there is no conflict between him and the officer with whom this bargain was made, except upon one point, the officer stating the agreement to have been that he was to receive a copy of the rolls and not the original—an entirely immaterial point so far as regards the merits of the case. Atwater surrendered the papers, received the $300, and also received the clerkship, he being obliged for that purpose to enlist anew in the general service of the Army. He remained for some months in that service. From time to time he called upon the officers of the Department to return to him his rolls. He received answers from time to time that they were not copied, or that the Department was not then prepared to part with them. He finally received a direct and decided answer that the Department would not deliver to him either the rolls or a copy of them, according to the agreement set forth in his own memorial and in the testimony of the officers before the court-martial. Those officers took the responsibility of directly repudiating their own agreement, and without right or color of right retaining the rolls from him. To that he of course submitted, for he had no alternative.

I ought to remark here that these copies which were furnished by Atwater were the first information afforded to the anxious people of the North regarding the fate of those prisoners who had died in Andersonville prison. Afterward, the original records were in part, but not fully, captured by our armies; but the only complete list we have ever had is Atwater's list. Some months after Atwater was detailed to go to Andersonville with a party under the command of a quartermaster of the Army, for the purpose of marking the graves of the United States prisoners buried there. The original copy of the roll made by Atwater was taken with that party to be used at Andersonville. Those rolls there came into his hands in the ordinary course of his duty in identifying and marking the graves. When the duties of that party at Andersonville were completed, the rolls remained in his hands; they were not called for there. Without being questioned he put them in his trunk and brought them to Washington. After he arrived in Washington, on the first inquiry that was made in regard to the rolls, he avowed their possession, stating that he claimed to own them, that they were his under the agreement of the Department. He simply put himself on his rights, claiming his own property. In his whole conduct there was not the first trace of secrecy, of fraud, of felonious intent, from beginning to end. I should add that they had been already copied by the Department.

For this act this young man was arrested by order of an officer of a staff department in this city, committed to the Old Capitol prison, afterward brought to trial before a court-martial, and by that court-martial, on the facts which I have here detailed—and the record of that court-martial I myself have read and examined—on these facts he was convicted of the crime of larceny, sentenced to confinement in a State prison in New York for a term of years, to refund the $300, to give back his papers, and lose all pay and allowances due him from the United States. He was put in chains in this city as a felon and carried through its streets, taken to Auburn prison, in the State of New York, and confined there in a cell and in the garb of a felon. And I say, on my reputation as a lawyer and a man, that it is impossible any intelligent man can read the record of that court-martial without saying it is a case of the grossest and most monstrous cruelty and injustice that ever oppressed any human being. This would seem to be sufficient to call for an inquiry in this case of Atwater, but there are other and subsequent facts which I apprehend call for the vigorous interposition of this House. Atwater was subsequently discharged from prison under a general order discharging prisoners convicted by courts-martial, but still remained with the brand of a felon upon him.

These memorials to which I have referred came to my hands several weeks ago. Before presenting them to Congress I deemed it my duty to seek for redress from the military and executive authorities of the nation. I caused a copy of Atwater's memorial to be transmitted to the President of the United States, with the request that the Judge Advocate General of the Army might be called upon to reexamine the case and report whether, in his opinion, the facts proved before the court-martial against Atwater justified his conviction. A copy of the charge and proceedings was laid before the President for the purpose of asking him to take such action as should in some little degree tend to redress the great wrong this young man had suffered. Sir, I have reason to believe that the Judge Advocate General did examine that record. I have reason to believe, in returning his opinion together with a copy of the proceedings, he certified that, in his judgment, the evidence before the court-martial was insufficient to sustain the charge of felony, and that it was a proper case in which a special pardon should issue, stating, as its ground, the insufficiency of the evidence on which he was convicted.

I have reason to believe that another fact existed in this case, which, if true, is a most remarkable one. After the head of the Bureau of Military Justice had made his report and decision certifying that justice and right entitled this man substantially to the abrogation of his sentence, to restoration to his position among honest men, to be relieved from the odium and disgrace of a felon's name, I have reason to believe that another military officer of this city, an officer high in rank, the head of a military bureau, that he dared—that he dared, sir, I use the word deliberately—to interfere by submitting a paper in the teeth of the recommendation of the proper head of the Bureau of Military Justice to urge that justice be not done this man. On what ground? That Atwater, after his discharge from prison, after the end of his term of service in the Army, had presumed to make publications which reflected on the character of a subordinate of his bureau.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think in order to relieve other officers in this city, the gentleman from New York should give the name of the officer to whom he refers.

Mr. HALE. I do not know whether I ought to mention his name now. When the matter comes before the committee it will then be made public, and that, I trust, will be sufficient for all practical purposes, both for the officer in question and others.

One word in conclusion. Without assuming to prejudge this case, it strikes me it is of all cases a most proper one for thorough and searching investigation; and if it shall prove true that any officer of the Army, high or low, distinguished or ignoble, has dared to put himself in the position that I apprehend and have reason to believe this man has done, has dared to place himself athwart the path of even-handed justice to a humble man for the purpose of protecting a subordinate in his office or himself, I can only say that such a man ought certainly to be stricken from the rolls of the Army with disgrace and infamy.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gentleman ought, in justice to those officers in this city who are innocent, to inform the House who this officer is; and I earnestly ask him to give us now the name of the officer.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I have stated that I have reason to believe that these facts exist, but I do not think I ought to go further than I have gone until the matter shall come to the notice of the committee to which I ask to have the subject referred. There is no officer who is familiar with the operations of the Army staff at Washington but knows perfectly well the name of the officer to whom I refer. I prefer not to name him—God knows from no fear of consequences to myself, but simply as a matter of propriety. His name will be known soon enough, and wide enough. Upon this statement I submit the case to the consideration of the House; and unless some other member desires to be heard, I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions were agreed to.

PAY OF CLERK TO SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. KERR, from the Committee of Accounts, by unanimous consent submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the salary of the chief clerk in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms be the same as that of the assistant disbursing clerk of the House during the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. FINCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States by Mr. COOPER, his Private Secretary, informing the House that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (H. R. No. 85) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida;

An act (H. R. No. 482) to incorporate the Howard Institute and Home of the District of Columbia;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) to authorize the distribution of surplus copies of the American State Papers in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) to pay the State of Vermont the sum expended for the protection of the frontier against the invasion from Canada in 1864;

An act (H. R. No. 492) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 661) changing the name of Emil Cohen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SMITH, one of its Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House joint resolution No. 77, for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan B. Cornish for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho.

Also, that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the official history of the rebellion.

Also, that the Senate had passed House joint resolution No. 163, for the relief of Charles M. Blake.

Also, that the Senate had indefinitely postponed House joint resolution No. 680, for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer service who failed to make proper returns of stores and other public property.

ARRESTS IN CANADA.

Mr. HOGAN. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, whether any, and if any what, steps have been taken by the executive department to interpose its good offices with the Government of Great Britain or that of Canada direct for the relief of those persons arrested in Canada during the late troubles along the border.

Mr. BANKS. I object.

Mr. HOGAN. It is simply asking for information, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether anything has been done. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. BANKS. I have reason to believe that steps have been taken on this subject, but it strikes me the inquiry had better be deferred a few days at least.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House.

LAND GRANTS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. DONNELLY. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Lands Senate bill No. 221, relating to lands granted to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of railroads.

The bill was read. It provides that whenever it shall appear that the United States have sold or disposed of any lands granted to the Territory or State of Minnesota for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, after the passage of the act granting the same, and after the definite location of the line of road, and before the withdrawal of said lands from sale at the proper local land office, said State may by its agent select, in lieu of the lands so sold or disposed of, from any of the lands of the United States subject to sale, within twenty miles of the line of the proper road, a quantity of land equal to that so sold or disposed of; and the lands so selected shall be substituted for those so sold or disposed of by the United States, and may be disposed of by said State in all respects as if said substituted lands had been parcel of the original grant to the State.

It further provides that the time named in the act granting lands to the Territory of Minnesota to aid in the construction of a certain railroad "from Saint Paul and from Saint Anthony, by the way of Minneapolis, to a convenient point of junction west of the Mississippi river, to the southern boundary of the Territory," approved March 3, 1857, for the construction and completion of said road, is hereby extended for seven years from the passage of this act.

It further provides that all the lands heretofore granted to the Territory and State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of railroads, shall be certified to said State by the Secretary of the Interior, from time to time, whenever any of said roads shall be definitely located, and shall be disposed of by said State in the manner and upon the conditions provided in the particular act granting the same; provided that when the original quantity granted to aid in the construction of any road has been increased, the quantity authorized to be sold from time to time shall be increased correspondingly; and provided further, that on the completion of any ten miles of road the State may sell one half the quantity of lands which said State is authorized to dispose of on the completion of twenty miles.

It further provides that the lands granted specifically, lying in place, on any division of ten miles of road shall not be disposed of until the road shall be completed through and continuous with the same.

Several amendments, mostly of a verbal character, were reported by the committee.

Mr. KASSON. I would inquire of my friend, as a member of the Committee on Public Lands, whether that committee has added to this bill what it was understood both the House and the committee desired hereafter to add to our land-grant bills, that is, one of two provisions, namely, either that the lands thus granted should be subject to preemption all the time at a fixed minimum, or that the company for whose benefit the grant is made should be compelled within a limited time to offer them for public sale. Unless we adopt that course the time is near at hand when we shall have scarcely a hundred thousand acres of land in the Territories of the United States subject to settlement by emigrants from the East. These railroad corporations are absorbing almost all the valuable lands throughout the Territories of the West. We grant lands to them for ten years without obliging them to sell an acre or to open them to preemption by settlers. They go to work and mortgage the lands for aid in constructing their roads and then the mortgagors cannot sell so long as the interest is paid. Thus we establish an enormous land monopoly all over the western country which is depriving the people of the use of the public lands. With these views, which I have heretofore expressed to the House I believe, I have only to say that I understood from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands that that committee was favorable to guarding hereafter against this monopoly by one of the two provisions of which I have spoken, and in listening to the amendments proposed by the committee I heard nothing of that kind. I ask my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] whether any attention was given in the committee to this subject.

Mr. DONNELLY. I beg to say, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] that this bill makes no new grant whatever. It does not add a foot of land to what has been already granted. Its provisions refer simply to details in regard to the grants already made. For instance, it provides that when bona fide settlers have gone upon the lands to which this company has acquired title the company shall not be compelled to dispossess them and drive them from their homes, but may go elsewhere and select other lands in lieu thereof—a measure favorable to the settlers and against the company, since it is probable that the lands so settled upon are nearer the roads and of more value than the lands taken in lieu thereof.

It also provides that the number of miles of railroad required to be built before the company shall acquire title to any of its lands under the grant shall be reduced from twenty miles to ten miles. That is to say, when the company has built ten miles of road they shall acquire one half the number of acres they would have acquired under the former bill by building twenty miles. This is but a just and equitable provision, and is rendered necessary by the increasing difficulty experienced in the construction of western railroads. And while it is a measure of convenience and advantage to the companies, it is no detriment to the Government, since it gives the companies nothing in addition to what they are already entitled to. There are other matters in this bill, some for the advantage of the company, some for the people, and which I shall be happy to state if any gentlemen desire it.

It might be a question whether in such a bill as this, we could insert such a provision as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] refers to, since we are not now granting lands but are legislating in regard to grants already made, and in which these companies now have vested rights.

Mr. KASSON. If my friend will allow me, I will state that in a similar case affecting a land grant to my own State, I submitted that proposition to the Committee on Public Lands. My argument is that where we grant any new benefit whatever to a railroad company we have a right to accompany that grant with certain conditions therein set forth. In that aspect it comes entirely in our power to accompany the grant of any new privilege with the condition I have named, and I very much hoped that my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] would have inserted that condition in his bill.

I was this morning looking at the map of the railroad grants to the State of Minnesota published by the Land Office, showing by colors what the grants are, and from looking at the map it certainly seemed to me that one half or nearly three fourths of the public lands of that State were covered by railroad grants.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Almost as bad as Iowa, I suppose. [Laughter.]

Mr. KASSON. Very much like Iowa. But I am urging this principle upon the State of Iowa and every other State. There is nothing selfish in my proposition, but it is a principle of universal application. I hold that our lands must be taken care of or our people will have no public lands in twelve or twenty years to come.

Mr. DONNELLY. I sustained in the Committee on Public Lands the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Kasson,] not upon its intrinsic merits, but because I believed the Representatives from Iowa should be allowed to determine whether the settlements in and condition of their State demanded such legislation as they proposed. But I do not think it is demanded in Minnesota. On the contrary, the amount of land granted to the State of Minnesota is not so great as the gentleman has stated. I believe the statistics will show that those grants do not comprise one sixth of all the lands in that State. But the State of Iowa is in a different position. The State is older and longer settled than Minnesota, while the railroads therein have been more tardy in their construction, and public complaints have arisen in many parts of the State. Such is not the case in Minnesota. Every road to which land has been granted is progressing as rapidly as the people can reasonably expect. While I am prepared, therefore, to follow the Iowa delegation in all purely local questions, I ask that the same courtesy be extended the delegation from Minnesota. All I ask of the House at the present time is, that this bill, which does not give an additional foot of land or appropriate a dollar in money, but is simply a bill of details for the convenience of the railroads, and at the same time for the protection of the settlers, may be passed. It has already passed the Senate, and it has been examined and approved by the Committee on Public Lands of the House. I am not now opposing the principle which the gentleman urges—it is not necessary to do so—but I do not think this is the occasion to apply it. I now call the previous question upon the amendments of the Committee on Public Lands.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendments reported from the Committee on Public Lands were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. DONNELLY called the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. DONNELLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOUNTIES TO COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to what I suppose to be a privileged question. A bill passed the Senate several weeks ago and came to the House and was passed here with amendments. A very serious error, either in the copying or in some other way, has occurred in the text by which it defeats its own purpose. I desire, therefore, the permission of the House to introduce at once a joint resolution amendatory of that act which will correct that error. I would like to have the matter settled to-day because it is keeping a large number of soldiers from receiving their bounty, many of whom have been waiting here for a long time.

I will state briefly what is the error I desire to have corrected. Under the existing law, the law antecedent to the enactment to which I now refer, the negroes who were enlisted were paid bounty or not, according as it might appear that they were free or not on the 19th of April, 1861, the commencement of the war. A great many applications having been made on the part of colored soldiers or their representatives for bounty, a difficulty arose in regard to the evidence. On some of the muster-rolls of companies and regiments the entry was made "free" or "not free on the 19th of April, 1861," as the fact might be. But upon most of the muster-rolls there was no entry whatever. The consequence of this has been that hundreds of these men have been kept waiting, and are yet waiting, to receive the $100 bounty to which they are entitled under the act, if the proof could be furnished upon the question of their freedom. To remedy this difficulty the Senate passed a bill providing that other testimony might be admitted upon the question of freedom at that date. The bill, coming to this House, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and by that committee reported back with an amendment providing that where nothing appeared upon the muster-roll to show whether the claimant was free or not, the presumption should always be in favor of freedom. That amendment added by the House was in these words:

"But where nothing appears on the muster-roll or of record to show that a colored soldier was not a free man at the date aforesaid, under the provisions of the fourth section of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1865, the presumption shall be that the person was free at the time of his enlistment."

The words "at the time of his enlistment" defeat the operation of the first part of the amendment. The question of freedom does not relate to the time of enlistment; it relates to the 19th of April, 1861. By the addition of those words, "at the time of his enlistment," which were inserted through some mistake in copying the bill, the whole provision is made an absurdity. The bill thus amended went back to the Senate, where the amendment was agreed to at once, and the bill became a law, being approved by the President on the 15th of the present month. The accounting officers now find difficulty in interpreting this law, by reason of those words, "at the time of his enlistment," which contradict and defeat the previous provision of the bill.

These being the facts of the case, I propose to introduce a joint resolution to amend that resolution, providing—

That the words "at the time of his enlistment," at the end of section one of the resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs, approved June 15, 1866, be, and the same are hereby, stricken out.

But, Mr. Speaker, while we have the subject before the House, I wish to go a little further, and amend the resolution, not only by the correction of that mistake, but by adding some other clauses further amendatory of it. This bounty to be paid to colored troops will of course come out of the payment to any one under the law for the equalization of bounties, if the bill which has already been passed by this House, and is now pending in the Senate, should become a law; but in the mean time a large sum, in the shape of bounty, will be paid to such of these colored troops, their widows and heirs, as may successfully establish their claims under the resolution which we passed the other day. In view of this fact, I find it stated in one of the public papers that—

"The claim agents are preparing for the golden harvest. One of the principal firms here is expecting to realize a fortune by collecting claims under the bill. About half the estimated amount, unless the negroes are very careful, will go into the pockets of these sharpers."

This is from the telegraphic correspondence of the Cincinnati Gazette. I have reason to know, from other sources of information, that, inasmuch as none of the guards against the impositions and extortions of claim agents will apply to this joint resolution which has been passed, a very large profit is expected by the claim agents, who intend to share with the negroes in their demands upon the Treasury for bounty.

In the bill which we passed the other day, to equalize the bounties of the soldiers, there were incorporated some five or six sections, prepared with great care for the purpose of avoiding the possibility of the soldiers being cheated by these claim agents. Now, sir, I am glad this error has occurred in the joint resolution authorizing the payment of bounties due to colored troops, because in offering amendment to correct that error I can add similar sections to those we have ingrafted into the general bill for the equalization of bounties of all soldiers; and I propose, therefore, with the permission of the House, to offer this joint resolution, consisting first of the correction of an error in the joint resolution passed on the 15th of this month, and next of additional sections taken from the bill for the equalization of bounties, so that the same care shall be taken to guard the interests of these colored men, more likely to be imposed upon even than white men, just as we propose to guard the interests of all soldiers, if that bill for the equalization of bounties becomes a law.

I ask leave of the House to offer that amendatory joint resolution.

There was no objection, and joint resolution amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "A resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866, was received and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was then read in extenso. Mr. McKEE. I would like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKEE. I want to know in reference to the decision of the question of the freedom or slavery at the time of those who enlisted in colored regiments.

Mr. SCHENCK. The question of their freedom or slavery is determined at the date of 19th of April, 1861. "At the time of enlistment" is a blunder.

Mr. McKEE. I understand there is a provision in these enlistments of slaves that a bounty of $100 is paid to the masters.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is so.

Mr. McKEE. That, then, remains the same as it was.

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir, leaving the construction as before. The whole effect of this is to enable proof to be furnished, and in the absence of proof, leaving the presumption of the freedom of the colored man.

Mr. DAVIS. If it be shown that the master received a bounty of $100 for the colored man who enlisted, is that to be taken as proof that he was a slave and not a freeman?

Mr. SCHENCK. That is a matter for construction and legal decision. I do not say some things like that will not occur, but the gentleman is going back to the merits of the bill which has been passed. This is to correct a blunder which occurred through inadvertence.

Mr. McKEE. I have an amendment which I would like to offer.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will hear what the amendment is.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all soldiers who enlisted in the Army of the United States during the recent rebellion shall be entitled to the bounties provided by law for white troops. These bounties shall be paid to colored troops without regard to the fact as to whether they were free or slave at the time of their enlistment; and no bounty shall hereafter be paid to the owner of any slave at the time of his enlistment.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is simply to enable free men, in point of fact, who served their country to get their pay. It merely enables them to make proof of that fact. I hope the gentleman will not embarrass the joint resolution at the present time by pressing his amendment. The fact is that the object of the gentleman from Kentucky is already accomplished; and I hope he will not endanger the joint resolution at the other end of the Capitol by what looks like a repeal of the present law on the subject.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think my friend from Kentucky has not heard the statement I made. We do not propose to interfere with any existing law. We do not propose to repudiate any obligation, if any has been incurred. We propose to put such construction, or to make such provision of law on the question of evidence touching the claim of colored men, as will enable them to get their bounty.

Now, the difficulty is that the law provided that if the man were free on the 19th of April, 1861, he should be entitled to bounty, and not if a slave. The question arose with the accounting officers what should be the proof of the man's freedom, and they have decided that the only proof they will look to is an entry on the muster-roll, "free 19th April, 1861." The Senate propose to let in other proof where that entry did not appear, and the House committee went further and recommended that it should be presumed that a man was free on the 19th April, 1861, unless the contrary appeared from the muster-roll or from some matter of record; but in doing that, there were these other words added, that he should be presumed to be free on the 19th of April, 1861, and at the time of enlistment. It is proposed to get rid of these words, "at the time of enlistment," which render the whole matter contradictory; and the accounting officers are unwilling to act under the law passed the other day unless it is that far modified. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to go back, under the existing law, and declare that all shall be treated alike, both white and colored. That is already done under the bill passed equalizing bounties. Under that law, whether a soldier, sailor, or marine be black or white, he gets the bounty, and the colored man would get under that law, if it should be passed, all that is already provided for. The gentleman effects nothing by that part of his amendment which declares what the law is. We had better leave it for the construction of the courts hereafter. Otherwise it might introduce a matter of controversy, and defeat the measure in the Senate. Meantime there are some seven hundred cases suspended and the men cannot get their bounty because the accounting officers want the law made clear as to what proof is required.

Mr. McKEE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will only state that my object in offering the amendment is to clear up all difficulties. There are difficulties, as the gentleman has stated, and the amendment of the Senate providing that other evidence may be taken must give rise to interminable controversies. It is my opinion that it would simply cut off the colored soldiers from getting their bounty. I think that while we are on this bounty question we might as well settle the whole controversy. It must be done some day or other, and we might as well do it now. We ought to put all men who have gone into the Army and risked their lives in the cause of the nation upon the same footing.

The gentleman says that the law equalizing bounties will give the colored troops the same bounty as white troops. It will not give the colored troops who were slaves any bounty at all; but my amendment provides that hereafter bounties shall be paid to all men in the Federal Army, without distinction as to whether at the time of enlistment they were free or slave. That will obviate all difficulty, so far as repudiating our obligations is concerned. It will not go far. There are very few men in the border States who were the owners of slaves who enlisted in the Federal Army, who, under the law, could prove their loyalty. I believe that Attorney General Speed rendered a decision that when a man enlisted in the Federal Army he was a free man and entitled to bounty; and although that decision was repudiated in the War Department it was a correct one. If that be not the law of the land we ought to make it so to-day. I do not believe that, under the law as it now stands, or under the law which we have passed equalizing soldiers' bounties, those men who were slaves when they enlisted will ever get one dollar of bounty. For that reason I want my amendment adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKEE] has not adverted to the language of the bill equalizing the bounties. The provision is that every man who has served as a soldier, sailor, or marine, in the Army or Navy of the United States, shall have the benefit of that bill. That embraces everything. If a man gets anything under this or any other law, it is only so much to be deducted from what he gets under that law. If he does not get it under this bill, he gets it under that bill if it becomes a law.

Now, in reference to this particular clause, I propose to let it run as a judicial question rather than to make it a subject of legislation here. The Senate provided that the accounting officers, on the point to which the gentleman has referred, should take other proof. The House struck that out; and, instead of providing for the taking of other proof, passed the act with a provision that if there were no entry upon the muster-roll, or other matter of record, to settle the question by evidence, the presumption should be in favor of the freedom of the enlisted man on the 19th day of April, 1861. Now, it might happen that there being no entry "free on the 19th of April, 1861," a man who was actually a slave would come forward and, taking advantage of the presumption of freedom, would get the bounty; and afterward, the man claiming that the colored soldier was his slave and that he was a loyal master, might come forward, and, as a loyal master, make claim also for bounty. I propose that if there be anything in the law under which the master can make his claim, to let him have the benefit of the law, if any fair construction of the law will give it to him. I would leave it to the construction of the Department or of the courts. I would take just as much care of the colored men as the gentleman from Kentucky would do. This is a question in which the master is concerned as well as the colored man, and every colored man is taken care of, anyway, by this amendment. I do not like to refuse to let the gentleman from Kentucky have a vote upon his amendment, but I only yielded to hear it read, and I must insist on the demand for the previous question.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I rise to a question of privilege. This morning, when a bill was pending in which I was interested, persons, not members of the House, were inside the doors of the House, without leave, and occupied the seats of members. Out of respect to those members I did not then make the point; but now that the bill has passed and everything is over, and no person can consider himself personally rebuked by the remarks I make, I insist that no person shall come upon the floor except members of the House, and that no person shall occupy a member's chair who is not a member of the House. I am satisfied that I was defeated this morning by that class of persons, and I owe it to myself and my constituents to insist from this time henceforth and forever the "lobby" shall not come within the doors of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. What is the question before the House?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I rose to a question of privilege, and I shall stand by it.

Mr. STEVENS. Is this a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. It is. It relates to the enforcement of the rules of the House.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think the members of the House, lobby, as well as others—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman having complained that there were persons on the floor who were not entitled to admission, he referred him to the Doorkeeper. The Doorkeeper, upon the demand of any member, will see that no one is admitted to the floor excepting those who are entitled to admission under the rules of the House.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Now that the bill is passed, I do not make the point with reference to the past, but to the future.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think any harm came of it. There was a gentleman from the far West sitting next to me, but he went away, and the seat seemed just as clean as it was before. [Laughter.]

Mr. WENTWORTH. I insist that henceforth no man shall take a seat upon this floor who is not entitled to it. Have I that right?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has, and the Doorkeeper will enforce the rules of the House.

BOUNTIES TO COLORED SOLDIERS—AGAIN.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now insist upon my call for the previous question.

Mr. McKEE. Is it not in order to have a vote on my amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not, unless the previous question is not seconded. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] has the floor by the unanimous consent of the House; he yielded to allow the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKEE] to be read, but stated after hearing it that he could not yield to allow it to be offered.

The question was taken upon seconding the call for the previous question, and upon a division there were—ayes 80, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. STEVENS. I call for tellers.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will request the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] to withdraw his motion for a few moments, to enable the Chair to lay before the House some executive communications.

Mr. THAYER. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IMPRISONED IN IRELAND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 18th instant calling for information in regard to the arrest and imprisonment in Ireland of American citizens, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State on the subject.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1866.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the message and accompanying documents be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Let the report of the Secretary of State be read.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that it sets forth that all the prisoners have been released.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understand that such is not the case in regard to some of them, and I want to know what particular ones have not been released.

Mr. BANKS. It is believed that all have been released; there is some possible question in regard to two of them.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understand that it rests merely upon belief; I want to know whether that is so or not; and therefore I call for the reading of the report of the Secretary of State.

The report of the Secretary of State was read. After setting forth the terms of the resolution of the House, it concludes as follows:

"I subjoin a list of names of alleged citizens of the United States, who, according to the information of this Department, have been arrested in Ireland since the recent suspension of the habeas corpus act in that country. Pursuant to the instructions of this Department, the United States minister at London and the consuls of the United States in Ireland have made such representation to the British authorities in regard to the cases of those persons that they have been released, except two who are held for trial upon grounds supposed to be sufficient by the judicial authorities. It is believed, however, that in consequence of the aforesaid representations even the two persons referred to, one of whom is a Colonel Burke, have been set at liberty before the present time."

The motion of Mr. BANKS was then agreed to.

EXPENDITURES OF INDIAN BUREAU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Interior, communicating in part the information requested by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 22d of April last, in relation to the appropriations and expenditures connected with the Indian service. ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 23, 1866.

The message and accompanying documents were ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for Mr. JENCKES and Mr. DARLING.

Mr. ORTH asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. DEFREES.

Mr. CHANLER asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for himself.

COMMITTEE VACANCY FILLED.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. DODGE to fill the vacancy on the Committee on Commerce caused by the death of Mr. James Humphrey.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 59) to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statutes of the United States;

An act (S. No. 180) for the relief of A. J. Gray;

An act (S. No. 200) for the relief of Jane Harris;

An act (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Mrs. Amatilla Cook;

An act (S. No. 243) to extend the time for the reversion to the United States of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of said road;

An act (S. No. 275) for the relief of Cornelius Crowley;

An act (S. No. 276) for the relief of Mrs. Jerusha Witter;

An act (S. No. 298) granting a pension to Jane D. Brent;

An act (S. No. 326) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker;

An act (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois;

An act (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin;

An act (S. No. 342) for the benefit of Ira B. Curtis;

An act (S. No. 375) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry;"

An act (S. No. 381) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters," approved April 20, 1866;

An act (H. R. No. 249) to establish a land office in the Territory of Idaho; and

An act (H. R. No. 342) in amendment of an act to promote the progress of the useful arts and the acts in amendment of and in addition thereto.

Mr. THAYER. I now renew my motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 31, noes 53.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. STEVENS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ASHLEY of Ohio, and Mr. THAYER, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 62.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

BOUNTIES TO COLORED SOLDIERS—AGAIN.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the joint resolution,

Mr. SCHENCK. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was again read.

On the passage of the bill,

Mr. LE BLOND called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENITENTIARIES IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Territories a bill setting aside certain proceeds from internal revenue for the erection of penitentiaries in the Territories of Nebraska, Washington, Arizona, Montana, Idaho, and Dakota; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that this bill must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order; and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move that the bill be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX—EXEMPTION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HOTCHKISS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to exempt certain public lands from taxation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPALDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD FROM CALIFORNIA TO OREGON.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPALDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALT LAKE AND COLUMBIA RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 336, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Salt Lake City to the Columbia river, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. That bill was referred on last Wednesday to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

PRINTING TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that one thousand extra copies of the tariff bill be printed for the use of the members of this House.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

PUBLIC SECURITIES AND CURRENCY.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to punish certain crimes in relation to the public securities and currency, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 157) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1867.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

First amendment:

On page 6, in lines sixteen and seventeen, strike out "250" and insert in lieu thereof "100," so that the clause will read:

For contingencies of the Army, $100,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

On page 7, strike out all after the word "dollars," in line five, to the end of the bill, as follows:

Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for paying the Illinois Central Railroad Company for the transportation of the troops or the property of the United States; and the Attorney General of the United States is hereby directed to institute a suit against the said company in the circuit court of the United States, in the eleventh circuit, without delay, to recover from the said company any moneys that have been paid to the said company by any Department of the Government for the transportation of the troops or property of the United States; and the said Attorney General is hereby further directed to appear for the United States in said court, and prosecute its interests in the said suit.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope that amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. This matter has been settled by Congress three or four times. We recommend that it be non-concurred in, and I hope it will be non-concurred in and sent to a committee of conference, which will dispose of it as it has done heretofore. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] who takes a deep interest in the matter, is too unwilling to be in the House; but this does not dispose of the subject, as it will again come up on the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. DAVIS. When the report of the committee of conference is made, must we not act on it as a unit?

Mr. STEVENS. The committee of conference acts on each one of these amendments separately, but when the report is made, of course it must be acted on as a whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section: And be it further enacted, That the sum of $146,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be disbursed by the Secretary of War in the erection of fire-proof buildings at or near the Schuylkill arsenal, in the State of Pennsylvania, to be used as store-houses for Government property.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section: And be it further enacted, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, for the fiscal year commencing January 1, 1866, namely:

For salaries of assistant and sub-assistant commissioners, $147,500.
For salaries of clerks, $82,000.
For stationery and printing, $63,000.
For quarters and fuel, $59,000.
For clothing for distribution, $1,170,000.
For commissary stores, $3,106,250.
For medical department, $500,000.
For transportation, $1,320,000.
For school superintendents, $21,000.
For repairs and rent of school-houses and asylums, $500,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended a concurrence, with an amendment, to add the following:

For telegraphing, $18,000.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope that will be non-concurred in.

Mr. KASSON. Is the gentleman aware that this is a large reduction?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I am opposed to any such appropriation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:
And be it further enacted, That the quartermaster's department shall in all cases, in obtaining supplies for the military service, state in advertisements for bids for contracts that a preference shall be given to articles of domestic production and manufacture, conditions of price and quality being equal; and that such preference shall be given to articles of American production and manufacture produced on the Pacific coast to the extent of the production required by the public service there; and to that end the Quartermaster General shall cause advertisements to be published in the cities of San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in the State of Oregon, and he shall accept the lowest responsible bids under such advertisements, if the quality be equal each in its kind or superior to that which shall be offered by bidders on the Atlantic side, and if the price or cost to the Government be no greater than articles of like kind offered by bidders on the Atlantic side with the cost of transportation added thereto.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence, with an amendment to strike out all after the word "there," in the eighth line, as follows:

And to that end the Quartermaster General shall cause advertisements to be published in the cities of San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in the State of Oregon, and he shall accept the lowest responsible bids under such advertisements, if the quality be equal each in its kind or superior to that which shall be offered by bidders on the Atlantic side, and if the price or cost to the Government be no greater than articles of like kind offered by bidders on the Atlantic side with the cost of transportation added thereto.

Mr. McRUER. I should like to ask the committee upon what ground it struck out the latter part of this amendment, which seems to me to be perfectly just and proper, and demanded by the requirements of the public service. Now, in regard to advertising—

Mr. STEVENS. It does not strike out that part. It only strikes out the part that they shall add the freight. We leave it at the price there, without reference to what goes to make up that price.

Mr. McRUER. It only provides they shall purchase on the Pacific coast such articles manufactured there as can be procured as low as articles on this side, adding the cost of transportation. I think that it is just and right that these young manufacturers on the Pacific should be encouraged to that extent, that the military department should buy such articles as they may manufacture there, provided they can be procured as cheaply as articles manufactured on the Atlantic coast, adding the cost of transportation. Certainly these young manufacturers might be encouraged by the Government to that extent; therefore I hope the amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. SCHENCK. I was going to suggest the striking out of something more from the amendment of the Senate than was proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. It seems to me sufficient to retain simply the declaration that in the advertisement of the quartermaster preference should be given in all cases to articles of American manufacture, and that we should not undertake to decide between one section of the country and another. It would only be going a step further to say in reference to those things to be consumed in Massachusetts that Massachusetts should be preferred; and in reference to those to be consumed in Pennsylvania that Pennsylvania should be preferred; and that in the cotton-growing States their own cotton should have preference. It is far better to leave out all attempts to sectionalize in this matter and confine ourselves to the simple general declaration that in all advertisements the quartermaster should declare that a preference will be given to articles of American manufacture. I move, therefore, to amend by striking out that portion which relates to the Pacific coast, leaving simply the general declaration of preference for American manufactures.

Mr. BIDWELL. Mr. Speaker, we do not desire to ask any preference on the Pacific coast, all things considered. But it is a fact that we have manufactories there of various articles, and that we produce those articles at prices which will compare favorably with the same articles on this side. We make a better article of blankets than is manufactured on this side. At all events, they are in no wise inferior to any article manufactured anywhere in the United States or elsewhere. Now, sir, it seems to me that if these articles can be purchased at the same price, all things considered, deducting the cost of freight from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific coast, it is not asking too much to allow the quartermaster to purchase them from the manufacturers upon the Pacific coast. We do not ask any preference; we simply ask to be placed upon the same footing, taking into consideration the quality of the article required and the price of the freight from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman tell me what part of this amendment prevents such a thing as that? I see nothing of it.

Mr. BIDWELL. I do not know that anything in this bill prevents it, but if there is anything that allows it I hope it will not be stricken out.

Mr. KASSON. I will state that I was under the impression at one time that the bid was for the entire supply of the Army, but I learn that it is for the delivery of such a quantity as is wanted at the respective points of delivery. Hence I am frank to say that for myself I see no use of this entire amendment in reference to California as giving any practical advantage to that coast. It seems to me to be a nominal effect produced and not a real one. As it was the committee struck out the part that was clearly surplusage. I do not wish to appear to uphold the policy of splitting up the Army of the United States into different geographical divisions in reference to the matter of supplies. I believe it will work detrimentally to the interest of the Government. But I assure the gentleman that in the mode in which the bidding is done, the very object which he desires will be accomplished, for if the party at San Francisco bids lower than is bid by the party at New York or on the Atlantic coast it must be given to the party in California.

Mr. BIDWELL. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether parties living on the Pacific coast can furnish the supplies needed there.

Mr. STEVENS. It makes no kind of difference where the parties furnishing the goods reside. Advertisements are put in for the furnishing of goods at various points all over the United States. A man in Boston may bid to furnish goods in Oregon, or a man in Oregon may bid to furnish goods in Boston.

Mr. BIDWELL. Does not one man, for instance, furnish all the blankets needed at different points?

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir. The contracts are not made in that way. There is a demand, for instance, for ten thousand blankets, which are needed at San Francisco, or at Portland, Oregon. They are advertised for, and the bids are open to the whole country, and the contract is given to those who can furnish them cheapest at that point.

Mr. McRUER. But the advertisement is made in New York and Boston and Cincinnati, and not in San Francisco and Portland.

Mr. SCHENCK. Usually the papers in which the advertisements are inserted are selected at the points where the delivery is to be made or at the principal commercial cities.

Mr. McRUER. All we desire is, that if the Government requires articles delivered at Portland or San Francisco, they may purchase them there, provided they can be furnished as cheaply as in New York or elsewhere.

Mr. RADFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question, so that I may understand this amendment. I desire to know if this amendment would require us to purchase goods manufactured on the Pacific coast, even though we could obtain the goods manufactured in other places at a lower price.

Mr. BIDWELL. No, sir; by no means.

They are not to be purchased on the Pacific coast unless they can be purchased as low, all things considered, as elsewhere.

Mr. RADFORD. I think the construction put upon the gentleman's amendment would be that it would compel the Government officers to purchase the goods there, even though they had to pay a higher price than for goods manufactured elsewhere.

Mr. BIDWELL. I have proposed no amendment. I am merely opposing the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out a portion of the Senate amendment. I desire to see the bill passed as it came from the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS. I think that we have had debate enough upon this question, and I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, being first on the amendment proposed by Mr. SCHENCK to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, as amended, was also agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate as amended was then concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:
And be it further enacted, That a sum not exceeding $45,000 is hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of fifty-eight acres, ninety-four and one quarter poles of land near Nashville, Tennessee, being the site of Fort Morton, as recommended by the chief Engineer.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:
And be it further enacted, That section seventeen of an act entitled "An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army," approved July 17, 1862, and a resolution entitled "A resolution to authorize the President to assign the command of troops in the same field or department to officers of the same grade without regard to seniority," approved April 4, 1862, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and no officer in the military or naval service shall be dismissed from service except upon and in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial to that effect or in commutation thereof.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:
And be it further enacted, That hereafter the Superintendent of the Military Academy may be selected from any corps of the Army.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Ninth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:
And be it further enacted, That section thirty-five of an act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, prohibiting the payment of extra-duty pay to enlisted men of the Army, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the provisions of the original act and the authority to grant extra pay are hereby extended to the enlisted men of the Navy and Marine corps of the United States.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The tenth and last amendment was as follows:

Insert as an additional section the following:
And be it further enacted, That the allowance now made by law to officers traveling under orders, where transportation is not furnished in kind, shall be increased to ten cents per mile.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

The title of the bill was amended by adding thereto the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the various votes by which the amendments of the Senate have been acted upon; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House still further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and request a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the evening of Monday, the 2d of July, and each subsequent evening until the business is disposed of, be specially assigned to the consideration of reports of the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon the several subjects referred to them by the House of Representatives.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Except the evening of the 4th of July.

Mr. BANKS. Of course that will be excepted.

Mr. MORRILL. I object to anything which will be in the way of the tariff bill.

Mr. BANKS. The intention is to occupy the evening sessions for the consideration of the reports of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and not trespass upon the business of day sessions.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am opposed to evening sessions.

Mr. BANKS. I will not press the resolution now.

GEORGE FABER.

Mr. ECKLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of George Faber; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Patents.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river, and declaring the same a post route; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

BENJAMIN MOORE DOVE.

Mr. DONNELLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Benjamin Moore Dove; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. MOORHEAD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to further extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ELIZA F. MOORHEAD.

Mr. MOORHEAD asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Eliza F. Moorhead.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Charles M. Blake.

SALT LAKE AND COLUMBIA RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 336, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Salt Lake City to the Columbia river, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SPALDING objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. WENTWORTH renewed the objection.

JOHN T. TAYLOR.

Mr. LOAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of John T. Taylor, late postmaster at Gallatin, Missouri; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee of Claims.

JONATHAN W. BEACH.

Mr. TAYLOR asked unanimous consent to report, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, a bill for the relief of Jonathan W. Beach.

Mr. ELDRIDGE objected.

MAIL ROUTES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to establish certain mail routes in the State of California; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SOUTHERN OVERLAND MAIL ROUTE.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reestablishing the southern overland mail route from San Francisco, via Los Angeles, Fort Yuma and Fort Smith, to Memphis, in accordance with the accompanying resolutions, adopted January 20, 1866, by the Legislature of California, and that the said committee have leave to report at any time.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

And then, on motion of Mr. RADFORD, (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By the SPEAKER: The petition of A. E. Damas, of Austin, Texas, for relief.

Also, of Mrs. Mary A. Palmer, of Pamplin's Depot, Virginia, for relief.

Also, of Mrs. Cynthia Mullins, of Shelby, North Carolina, for relief.

Also, of F. B. Tatt, T. Witherill, and others, citizens of St. Joseph county, Indiana, for just and equal laws for the regulation of inter-State insurances.

By Mr. BANKS: The petition of A. F. McMillan, and thirty-six others, praying for the establishment of a public park for the use of the people of Washington and Georgetown.

By Mr. BRADFORD: The memorial of ex-Governor Evans, of Colorado, asking for the payment of Colorado militia.

By Mr. HALE: The memorial of Dorence Atwater, of Terryville, Connecticut, praying for redress of grievances sustained at the hands of a court-martial.

Also, the memorial of Eli Terry, and others, of Terryville, Connecticut, praying for redress of grievances of Dorence Atwater.

Also, two petitions of citizens of Clinton county, New York, praying for repeal of an act to establish a post road from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, New York.

By Mr. HENDERSON: A petition from physicians, of Seio, Oregon, praying for a reduction of the tax on alcohol.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of the merchants of the city of Washington, asking that the pillar-boxes used for the reception of mail matter on street corners be made more secure, and suitable not only for the reception of valuable letters but newspapers, pamphlets, and magazines.

By Mr. MOORHEAD: The petition of citizens of Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, praying for an increase of duties on foreign imports.

Also, the petition of citizens of Venango county, Pennsylvania, praying that an appropriation be made for Edwin L. Drake, the original discoverer of petroleum.

By Mr. PAINE: The petition of Theodore C. Hawkins, of Sheboygan county, Wisconsin, for a pension.

By Mr. SCOTFIELD: The petition of citizens of New York, for the relief of Edwin L. Drake.

By Mr. TAYLOR: The petition of L. C. Wright, F. B. Baker, and 52 others, asking that suitable provisions be made to prevent United States pension agents from deducting any fee from payments made to pensioners; and protesting against allowing United States pension agents a fee for preparing papers and administering oaths.

Also, the petition of Samuel C. Shepherd, asking an American register for the bark R. W. Griffiths.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 26, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. COWAN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. A few days since I asked leave of absence for the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. LANE.] I have received this morning a telegram from his physician at St. Louis, stating that he is unable to reach the city, and will not probably be here during the remainder of the session. I move that the leave of absence may be extended for the residue of the present session. I have the telegram with me.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of Horace L. Emory, to whom letters-patent were granted February 22, 1852, for improvements in the endless-chain horse power, praying for an extension of that patent; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. COWAN presented the petition of W. H. Singer, F. D. Harton, Frederick Haas, and a large number of other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that the tariff law may be so amended as to protect American labor to the extent of the difference of the cost of capital and labor here and abroad, with the addition of the taxes paid by American industrial products from which the foreign are free; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present the memorial of Mrs. Amelia Feaster, which is accompanied by an autograph letter from General Grant, one from General Howard, one from General Schriver, and letters from other officers of the Army. It presents a case of very peculiar merit on the part of this lady, who not only sacrificed her property in aiding our soldiers when imprisoned in South Carolina, but who was really driven away from there, and she prays to be reimbursed for money expended by her in alleviating the condition of Union troops while in rebel prisons. It presents a very strong case for her relief which I hope will be promptly granted. I move that the memorial with the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers in the case of A. J. Campbell be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 379) to establish in the District of Columbia a reform school for boys, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BUCKALEW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 123) for the relief of Elizabeth Woodward and George Chorpenning, of Pennsylvania, reported it with amendments.

CUYAHOGA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the memorial of the Columbus and Toledo Railroad Company, praying that they may be allowed to construct a bridge across the Cuyahoga river, have had it under consideration, and have instructed me to report a joint resolution (S. R. No. 113) for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Cuyahoga river, over and upon the Government piers at Cleveland, Ohio; and, with the consent of the Senate, I will ask immediate action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution on the day it is reported.

Mr. CONNESS. If this resolution will consume any time I shall be compelled to object to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will occupy but a moment. It will take only the time necessary to read it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a mere local matter, and there can be no objection to it.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of War to permit the Cleveland and Toledo Railroad Company, and the Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad Company, jointly, or either of those companies, for their joint or separate use, to erect a swing-bridge over and upon the Government piers for the passage of cars across the Cuyahoga river, at the city of Cleveland, Ohio, upon such plan as shall be hereafter approved by the city council of Cleveland, and by the Board of Trade of the same city, subject, however, to such restrictions, conditions, and limitations as the Secretary of War may see fit to impose at any period, whether prior or subsequent to the erection of the bridge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the resolution by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That this resolution, and all acts done under it, shall be subject to the future action of Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WADE. There is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is so now.

Mr. WADE. I suppose it is. It does not add anything to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 393) to incorporate the Metropolitan Club of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 114) for the relief of John A. Coan; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

AUSTRIAN TROOPS IN MEXICO.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies of the message from the President, with accompanying documents, answering a resolution of the Senate of the 13th instant, in regard to the departure of troops from Austria for Mexico, be printed for the use of the State Department.

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. WADE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas great inequalities exist in the compensation allowed to the several officers and other employees of the Senate and House of Representatives; Therefore, with a view to the adjustment of these inequalities in the Senate,

Be it resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to take into consideration the foregoing matter, and report by bill or resolution.

Mr. WADE. I move that the committee be appointed by the Chair.

It was so ordered by unanimous consent; and Messrs. WADE, WILLIAMS, and BUCKALEW were appointed the committee.

VENTILATION OF SENATE CHAMBER.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the improvement of the ventilation of the Senate Chamber in accordance with plans that may be submitted by the architect of the Capitol and under his direction, similar to those adopted in the Representative Chamber, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the committee make a report at some early day, for we are suffering every day. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. While it is warm, you mean. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. This afternoon.

Mr. BROWN. I will simply say that I have felt a little delicacy about interfering with the special committee that has already had the matter of ventilation under consideration, but still I think it would be well to charge both committees with it. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LYON, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1867; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "A resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. WADE. I move to postpone all prior orders and take up House bill No. 179, amending the organic act of the Territory of Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 179) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that after the next annual session of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory the sessions shall be biennial. Members of the Council shall be elected for the term of four years, and members of the House for the term of two years, and they shall receive the sum of six dollars per day instead of three dollars heretofore allowed, and shall receive the same mileage now allowed by law. Each is to have authority to elect, in addition to the officers now allowed by law, an enrolling clerk, who shall receive five dollars per day. The chief clerks shall receive six dollars per day, and the other officers elected by the Legislature shall receive five dollars per day each. The first election for the biennial session is to be at the time of holding the general election for the Territory in the year 1867.

Mr. WADE. I offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, approved January 14, 1865, entitled "An act in relation to the county of Skamania," be, and the same is hereby, disapproved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and that the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed; and, on motion of Mr. WADE, its title was amended by the addition of the words "and for other purposes."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1867—to the Committee on Finance.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "A resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs"—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

SURVEYOR GENERAL IN IDAHO.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the bill (H. R. No. 391) to create the office of surveyor general in Idaho Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a surveyor general for Idaho, whose annual salary is to be $3,000, and whose power, authority, and duties are to be the same as those provided by law for the surveyor general of Oregon. He is to have proper allowances for clerk hire, office rent, and fuel, not exceeding what now is allowed by law to the surveyor general of Oregon, and he is to locate his office at Boise City, in the Territory of Idaho.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRITISH VESSEL MAGICIENNE.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 297, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 297) for the relief of the owners of the British vessel Magicienne was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the payment, to the order of the proper functionary of the Government of her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, of the sum of $8,645, as full compensation to the owners of the British vessel Magicienne, or their legal representatives, for damages occasioned by reason of the wrongful seizure and detention of that vessel by the United States ship Onward, in the month of January, 1863, and also as full compensation to the owners and shippers of the cargo of the Magicienne; such sum to be distributed agreeably to the award of William M. Evarts and Edward M. Archibald, Esquires, to whom the claim was referred for adjustment, by an agreement bearing date in November, 1863, between the Secretary of State on the part of the United States, and the British minister at Washington on the part of Great Britain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the vote is taken upon that question, I desire that the Senate should understand precisely the character of the bill. Perhaps the Senate may have forgotten that a message of the President, bearing date April 4, 1866, communicated to the two Houses of Congress the correspondence between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain relating to this vessel. It appears by that correspondence that the United States, through Mr. Seward, and the Government of Great Britain, through Lord Lyons, came to an agreement, in 1863, to refer the question of damages in this matter to Mr. Evarts, the eminent counsel at New York, and Mr. Archibald, the British consul at New York. Those two referees have proceeded with the business and have made a report which forms the basis of this bill. I call particular attention to the dates in this case, because they had an influence on the judgment of the committee in the report which they instructed me to make. I need not remind the Senate that at a later day Lord Russell, in a formal manner, undertook to refuse to submit our claims on Great Britain to any arbitration. That was by a dispatch which I hold in my hands, addressed to Mr. Adams, our minister at Great Britain, and bearing date August 30, 1865. All will remember the terms of that dispatch, which have been substantially set forth in the annual message of the President of the United States. Had this claim accrued subsequent to that dispatch of Lord Russell, it would have been a very grave question whether our committee could have counseled the recognition of the claim; but, sir, it was anterior to that dispatch, and referees were selected on both sides, by whose judgment, it seemed to the committee, we ought to abide. In short, under the circumstances, there was no alternative. We had selected our court, and the damages were determined by the judgment of that court. It was under those circumstances that the committee directed me to report that this claim ought to be paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. As we are in want of time, I should not consume it and will not. The whole of this case is that we are to pay a British claim because it existed anterior to the date of the insolent refusal of the British Government to consider any claims of ours, or to submit our claims and theirs jointly to arbitration. They are to turn out as public marauders over the seas of the world and destroy our commerce, and the question of losses is not to be submitted, and our Government is to be insulted when the proposition is made; but we, with a nicety of justice and an exactitude of justice that can scarce find a parallel, are to pay British claims anterior to that date because we had appointed our own court. I have great confidence in the Committee on Foreign Relations; I know the sense of justice of that committee, and of the chairman of that committee, and have great respect for it; but I cannot vote to pay any British claim in the face of the insulting response made by the British Government to the proposition even to consider American claims.

Mr. SUMNER. I make no question with the Senator from California with regard to the character of the reply of Lord Russell to our own application. I have already stated that had this claim accrued subsequent to that, and had our obligations with regard to it been declared subsequent to that, the committee would not have undertaken to recommend it to the Senate; but it appears by the correspondence which is on our tables that this claim was the subject of an explicit understanding between Mr. Seward on our part, and Lord Lyons on the part of the British Government; that they came to an agreement as to how it should be decided; that referees were selected; that they have proceeded to the decision of the case; and now it seems that it only remains for us to abide by the judgment of the referees that we have assisted in selecting.

Mr. CONNESS. Pay the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. And, in short, pay the bill. I see that it goes against the grain of my excellent friend; but I believe that he, too, is not insensible to the claims of justice. For myself, I would say that while I have no question as to how the conduct of Great Britain on this matter should be characterized, I am anxious that my own country should be kept firm and constant in the attitude of justice.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the motion, and declared that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. HOWE. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to say, for the information of the Senate simply, that this is a bill to provide for a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara. I am not going to argue the question of taking it up. I want to have the sense of the Senate as to whether they will consider it or not.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If my colleague will allow me to make a suggestion on the subject, I think he had better move to take it up after the morning hour has expired. Some gentlemen here who are perhaps friendly to the bill would vote against it in the morning hour, but would vote to take it up after the morning hour has passed. I make that suggestion to my colleague. He may not get the sense of the Senate if he moves to take it up in the morning hour.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to have the Senate take up the bill, and if then it should be the disposition of the Senate that it shall be assigned to any particular time for consideration, I shall have no objection to that. I do not understand why it should not properly be considered in the morning hour as well as in any other hour of the day.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to taking it up for an assignment.

Mr. HOWE. I hope we shall have a vote.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cragin, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Howe, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Trumbull, and Yates—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Riddle, Sherman, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Creswell, Dixon, Fessenden, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wright—13.

So the Senate refused to take up the bill for consideration.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House bill No. 613, to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish the honorable Senator would not propose to take that up in the morning hour, for there is no special order for to-day, and there are some little matters concerning Indian affairs that I want to get up and dispose of in the morning hour.

Mr. WILSON. This bill was specially assigned last week, and was put aside to take up a railroad bill, and then had to give way to the internal revenue bill, and I cannot yield any longer.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This is the morning hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can vouch that the business of the Military Committee has been crowded off day after day, and they ought to have a chance.

Mr. POMEROY. I think the Senator from Massachusetts might bring up his bill at one o'clock and allow the morning hour to be devoted to miscellaneous bills.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. As Senators seem to be giving notices and stating about what ought to be done, I will state what in my judgment ought to be done. We ought to go into executive session pretty early to-day. There are some pending Indian treaties necessary to be acted upon before the Indian appropriation bill is acted upon, and the honorable Senator from Maine having charge of that bill has informed me that he will press it within the next two or three days. Therefore, I wish to give notice to the Senate that I intend to move at an early hour to day to go into executive session, and I wish my friend from Massachusetts to give way and give the floor to Indian affairs—they do not trouble the Senate very often—and let his bill go over until the end of the morning hour. I think we can dispose of two or three Indian questions in the morning hour to-day.

Mr. WILSON. I will take this up and specially assign it for one o'clock.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Assign it for to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. No, I must have it up to-day.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that if we are to consider the bill called up by the Senator from Massachusetts we shall go on with it now. The Senator from Wisconsin was not in his seat, I think, when we voted down the motion to take it up the other day. I was constrained to vote against the motion then, although I am in favor of the measure. I hope we shall go on with it now, without making any special assignment of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 613.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES P. JOHNSON.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the consent of the Senator from Massachusetts and the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow Senate bill No. 374 to be taken up and passed. It is a little bill for a poor fellow who has been waiting a long time. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 374) for the relief of James P. Johnson, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay James P. Johnson, of Iowa, the sum of $202 50, in full payment for his services as veterinary surgeon in the fourth Iowa cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. BROWN. Before this bill is passed I should like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is simply to pay a veterinary surgeon of one of the Iowa regiments for the term which he actually served, but owing to some informality he was not legally mustered in. The bill pays him precisely what the Department says he would have been paid if he had been mustered in, and he ought to have been mustered in.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WYANDOTTE MISSION CHURCH.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask unanimous consent to take up a little bill which has passed the Senate once, but it ought to be passed again so that it may be acted on in the other House during the present session. It is to pay for the destruction of two churches and a library, belonging to the Wyandotte Indians in Kansas. I am sure no one will have any objection to it, and it will take but a moment.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope that bill will be passed at once.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is Senate bill No. 353. I ask unanimous consent to take it up at this time.

By unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 353) for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the mission church of the Wyandotte Indians was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is in these words:

Be it enacted, &c., That for refunding to Jacob White-Crow, John Sarahass, and others, trustees and stewards of the Wyandotte and Quindaro mission of the Kansas conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, for the destruction of their church buildings and library, $6,000, to be applied in rebuilding said buildings and inclosing the graveyards of the Wyandotte Indians in the State of Kansas.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$6,000" and inserting "$4,680." I will state to the Senate, and that explains all there is in the case, that two churches belonging to these Indians were destroyed by the border ruffians of Kansas. We, by treaty, were bound to pay any damages committed upon Indian property. The one church, a brick church, was appraised at $3,000; the other church and the library at $1,680. The member of the committee reporting the bill included another item in relation to a parsonage, about which there is a question, and the committee were not willing to press it upon the consideration of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It has been suggested to me that the usual appropriating clause is not contained in the bill. I move, therefore, to insert after the word "dollars," in line seven, the words "he and is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish, for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in some and non-concurred in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1867, requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ROBERT C. SCHENCK, of Ohio, Mr. WILLIAM E. NIBLACK, of Indiana, and Mr. E. B. WASHBURN, of Illinois, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (S. No. 221) relating to lands granted to Minnesota to aid in constructing railroads, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to take up the Army appropriation bill with a view to have a committee of conference appointed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th of June, 1867.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the President pro tempore appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN KANSAS RAILROAD.

Mr. POMEROY. Senate bill No. 145, for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph, has been returned from the House of Representatives, with an amendment. I move to take it up for the sake of having a committee of conference on the disagreement between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Some person, I do not now recollect who, suggested to me that that bill, as it comes from the House, ought to go again to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection to that reference. I only want to facilitate business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know what is the present stage of the bill, but some person asked me to have that action taken. I do not know for what purpose, and I cannot now recollect who it was.

Mr. BROWN. I believe the amendment that has been put on the bill in the House of Representatives does not meet with the approbation of any one connected with the bill here in the Senate or on the committee, but it was proposed subsequently to dissent from the amendment of the House and ask for a committee of conference, with a view of substituting the original bill as it passed the Senate. Probably that would be the better mode of arriving at it as it is now so late in the session.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If Senators desire that this bill should go to a committee of conference I am not going to insist on the reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BROWN. I think it had better go to a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw his motion?

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is rather unusual to send a bill to a committee of conference when an amendment is merely made in one House, but I withdraw the motion if Senators desire it.

Mr. POMEROY. I now move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the managers on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall now proceed with the bill before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 618) to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia reported several amendments to the bill. The first amendment was to insert after section three the following, as section four:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That officers of the Veteran Reserve corps or of the volunteer service, now on duty in the Freedmen's Bureau as assistant commissioners, agents, medical officers, or in other capacities, whose regiments or corps have been or may hereafter be mustered out of service, may be retained upon such duty as officers of said bureau, with the same compensation as is now provided by law for their respective grades; and the Secretary of War shall have power to fill vacancies until other officers can be detailed in their places without detriment to the public service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to postpone the bill until the first Monday of December next.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Secretary read the next amendment of the committee, which was to strike out section five of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of rendering this bureau self-sustaining, and in the place of lands heretofore assigned to freedmen and thereafter withdrawn from the control of the bureau the President shall reserve from sale or settlement under the homestead or preemption laws, and assign for the use of the freedmen and loyal refugees, male or female, unoccupied public lands in Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and Arkansas, not exceeding in all one million acres of good land. And the Commissioner shall cause the same, under the direction of the President, to be allotted and assigned from time to time, in parcels not exceeding forty acres each, to the loyal refugees and freedmen, who shall be protected in the use and enjoyment thereof for such term of time and at such annual rent as may be agreed upon between the Commissioner and such refugees or freedmen. The rental shall be based upon a valuation of the land, to be ascertained in such manner as the Commissioner may, under the direction of the President, by regulation prescribe. At the end of each term, or sooner, if the Commissioner shall assent thereto, the occupants of any parcels so assigned, their heirs and assigns, may purchase the land and receive a title thereto from the United States in fee, upon payment therefor the value of the land ascertained as aforesaid.

Mr. WILSON. A separate bill has already passed and has become a law, which embraces the provisions included in this section and therefore the committee propose to strike it out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to lay the bill upon the table, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 6, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Guthrie, Hendricks, and Riddle—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Nye, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Clark, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Wright—16.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the sixth section of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever the former owners of lands occupied under General Sherman's field order, dated at Savannah, January 16, 1865, shall apply for restoration of said lands, the Commissioner shall refuse the surrender of the same: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect the right of any person to recover in the proper courts any title or right of possession which such person may have in any of the lands held under said field order.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 6. Whereas by the provisions of an act approved February 6, 1863, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 7, 1862," certain lands in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke, South Carolina, were bid in by the United States at public tax sales, and by the limitation of said act the time of redemption of said lands having expired; and whereas in accordance with instructions issued by President Lincoln on the 16th day of September, 1863, to the United States direct tax commissioners for South Carolina, certain lands bid in by the United States in the parish of St. Helena, in said State, were in part sold by the said tax commissioners to "heads of families of the African race," in parcels of not more than twenty acres to each purchaser; and whereas under the said instructions the said tax commissioners did also set apart as "school farms" certain parcels of land in said parish, numbered on their plats from one to thirty-three, inclusive, making an aggregate of six thousand acres, more or less: Therefore, be it further enacted, That the sales made to "heads of families of the African race," under the instructions of President Lincoln to the United States direct tax commissioners for South Carolina, of date of September 16, 1863, are hereby confirmed and established; and all leases which have been made to such "heads of families," by said direct tax commissioners, shall be changed into certificates of sale in all cases wherein the lease provides for such substitution; and all the lands now remaining unsold, which come within the same designation, being eight thousand acres, more or less, shall be disposed of according to said instructions.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That all other lands bid in by the United States at tax sales, being thirty-eight thousand acres, more or less, and now in the hands of the said tax commissioners as the property of the United States, in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke, excepting the "school farms," as specified in the preceding section, and so much as may be necessary for military and naval purposes at Hilton Head, Bay Point, and Land's End, and excepting also the city of Port Royal, on St. Helena Island, and the town of Beaufort, shall be disposed of in parcels of twenty acres, at $1 50 per acre, to such persons, and to such only, as have acquired and are now occupying lands under and agreeably to the provisions of General Sherman's special field order, dated at Savannah, Georgia, January 16, 1865, and the remaining lands, if any, shall be disposed of in like manner to such persons as had acquired lands agreeably to the said order of General Sherman, but who have been dispossessed by the restoration of the same to former owners: Provided, That the lands sold in compliance with the provisions of this and the preceding section shall not be alienated by their purchasers within six years from and after the passage of this act.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the "school farms" in the parish of St. Helena, South Carolina, shall be sold, subject to any leases of the same, by the said tax commissioners, at public auction, on or before the 1st day of January, 1867, at not less than ten dollars per acre; and the lots in the city of Port Royal, as laid down by the said tax commissioners, and the lots and houses in the town of Beaufort which are still held in like manner, shall be sold at public auction; and the proceeds of said sales, after paying expenses of the surveys and sales, shall be invested in United States bonds, the interest of which shall be appropriated, under the direction of the Commissioner, to the support of schools, without distinction of color or race, on the islands in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the assistant commissioners for South Carolina and Georgia are hereby authorized to determine the validity of all titles to lands in their respective States which are claimed under the provisions of General Sherman's special field order, and to give each person having a valid claim a warrant upon the direct tax commissioners for South Carolina for twenty acres of land, and the said direct tax commissioners shall issue to every person, or to his or her heirs, but in no case to any assigns, presenting such warrant, a lease of twenty acres of land, as provided for in section —, for the term of six years; but at any time thereafter, upon the payment of a sum not exceeding $1 50 per acre, the person holding such lease shall be entitled to a certificate of sale of said tract of twenty acres from the direct tax commissioner or such officer as may be authorized to issue the same; but no warrant shall be held valid longer than two years after the issue of the same.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the direct tax commissioners for South Carolina are hereby authorized and required at the earliest day practicable to survey the lands designated in section — into lots of twenty acres each, with proper metes and bounds distinctly marked, so that the several tracts shall be convenient in form, and as near as practicable have an average of fertility and woodland; and the expense of such surveys shall be paid from the proceeds of sales of said lands, or, if sooner required, out of any moneys received for other lands on these islands, sold by the United States for taxes, and now in the hands of the direct tax commissioners.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That upon completion of the transfers of the said lands in the manner specified in the preceding sections, the President of the United States shall have power to restore to their former owners the lands now occupied by persons under General Sherman's special field order, dated at Savannah, Georgia, January 16, 1865, excepting such lands on the islands in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke as may have been sold by the United States for taxes; but such restoration shall not be made until after the crops of the present year shall have been gathered by the occupants of said lands, nor until a fair compensation shall have been made to them for all improvements or betterments erected or constructed thereon, and after due notice of the same being done shall have been given by the assistant commissioner.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner shall have power to seize, hold, use, lease, or sell all buildings and tenements, and any lands appertaining to the same, or otherwise, formerly owned by or claimed as the property of the so-called Confederate States, and any buildings or lands held in trust for the same by any person or persons, and to use the same or appropriate the proceeds derived therefrom to the education of the freed people; and whenever the bureau shall be withdrawn, States which have made provision for the education of their citizens without distinction of color shall receive the sum remaining unexpended of such sales or rentals, which shall be distributed among said States for educational purposes in proportion to their population.

Mr. WILSON. This proposition is to strike out the sixth section of the House bill and to insert seven sections in lieu of it. I will state that this sixth section refers to the lands in Georgia and South Carolina occupied under General Sherman's special field order. The purpose is to allow the President to restore those lands to the owners by the 1st of January. As far as we can learn, there are between twenty-five thousand and thirty thousand acres that have been taken up by the freedmen in accordance with the provisions of General Sherman's field order. There is a great deal of controversy over them. I see that General Steadman and General Fullerton have recommended to the President that they be given up to the owners by the 1st of January next. Some nine hundred persons have acquired titles to small portions of those lands. We propose to give up those lands in this manner: we have acquired about forty thousand acres of land by tax sales on the islands in South Carolina; those are in the possession of the Government; now, we propose that in lieu of the claims acquired under General Sherman's order, those lands shall be divided up into twenty-acre lots and shall be sold to the persons who have those titles at their cost to the Government. They are to go on the lands and have six years within which to pay for them. They cost the Government about one dollar and a half an acre. This, it is thought, will settle all this difficulty. These lands on the islands are our lands; they are in our possession; they amount to about the same number of acres that have been acquired by these colored persons under General Sherman's field order. It is now proposed that they shall have these lands set apart to them, which shall not for six years be alienated by them, and they shall pay the Government a small pittance of a dollar and a half an acre, which was the cost to the Government.

Then we have six thousand acres, some thirty-three tracts, said to be worth ten dollars per acre, which we authorize the selling of at ten dollars per acre, and which are not to be sold for less, which have been set apart by the commissioners, and are now used and rented for the purposes of a school fund. We propose to have those lands sold between now and the 1st of January, and that the proceeds shall be a fund for the benefit of the persons residing upon those islands for school purposes.

If this amendment shall be adopted, we shall provide for the restoration of the lands set apart by General Sherman, and we shall allow persons who have acquired titles under his order to acquire titles to the land we possess. It is believed by those who understand the condition of affairs there to be an arrangement that will be satisfactory to all. We provide further that if any betterments or improvements have been made on these lands, these persons, before being removed from the lands, shall have the benefit of them, and also the benefit of the present crop, which they planted and which they are to gather.

I believe that the adoption of this amendment will be a great advantage to the freedmen, and that it will relieve us from the controversy that has grown up in regard to the lands set apart under the special order of General Sherman. I will say that several persons who know all about the lands and about the condition of affairs there of the freedmen think that the provisions of this bill will be a great advantage to all concerned.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what amount it is proposed to confirm under the tax sales under the sixth section. The quantity of land described in the seventh section is mentioned; but I am not able to see from the sixth section what amount of lands will be confirmed; and I should like to know.

Mr. WILSON. There is a balance of five or six thousand acres not occupied yet which it provides for on those lands; but I understand the amount occupied which is confirmed here to these persons is some fifteen or twenty thousand acres. They are in small lots that were set apart to these persons by the special order of the Government when we had possession of that part of the country and were providing for these persons so as to give them an opportunity to obtain a livelihood.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Unquestionably it is very desirable to accomplish all that the Senator suggests will be accomplished by this bill; but, sir, I am not able to see the propriety on the part of Congress of undertaking to settle titles under a tax sale. No class of titles are regarded with more care and jealousy by the courts than tax titles. It seems rather an unheard-of proceeding for the legislative department of the Government to confirm a tax sale. The Senator is aware that to make a good title under a tax sale, all the proceedings must have been most accurately pursued according to the requirements and the very letter of the law. The courts will not hold a title good unless in every respect the proceedings connected with the sale have been in conformity with the law. Now, it may be that the Senator from Massachusetts is much more thoroughly informed than I am upon this subject. I have but little information about these sales. I am not prepared to say whether the sales were valid or not. They may be. If so, they do not need any confirmatory act by Congress. If they were so irregular as to be void, ought Congress to undertake to confirm them? In other words, the tax sale being void, can Congress by an act pass the title from the real owner of the lands to the purchaser?

Tax sales have never been favorites in the courts, and should not be; and perhaps no set of tax sales are entitled to less regard than the sales which it is now proposed to confirm. In the other States this tax was not collected. The people of Indiana, as individuals, and of other States, were not required to pay this tax, and no sales were made; but in South Carolina, where the people were in a condition making it almost impossible for them at that time to meet the demands of the tax-gatherers, the sales took place. Whether the proceedings were at all regular; whether they were partial or impartial; whether they were fair or unfair, I think is not known to the Senate; and now it is proposed to confirm them.

I should desire very much to settle the controversy that has grown up in consequence of General Sherman's order; but I would not desire to settle that controversy by perpetrating another wrong; and I am not sure that the purpose of the Senator, even in that regard, is altogether right, because the colored people who occupy the lands under General Sherman's order are not the same as those who hold lands under the tax sales; and how it will do justice to persons who hold under Sherman's order to confirm the tax sale to other people, I cannot understand. It may be all right; but I do not see the propriety of it. General Sherman's order was a military order. I believe no Senator has pretended that General Sherman's order was sufficient to pass the title. It gave the right of occupancy during the command of the officer who made the order. It was a military order, ceasing to have force at the termination of the war, so that that order conferred no title; and it is simply now a question of possession and the right of possession. I presume that the parties can settle their rights in the courts, if in no other way. I am hardly willing to say that a set of tax sales, about which we know but little, shall be confirmed merely to satisfy other parties under General Sherman's order. I do not intend to discuss this measure, because I presented my views in regard to it at a former period of the session, on at least a branch of this subject. I have felt it to be my duty now to suggest this much.

Mr. WILSON. I am satisfied that we have acquired a good title to the amount of about forty thousand acres of land; that it is ours, in our care, used by us, rented, and used for other purposes, generally for the purposes of the freedmen.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to ask him one question. Have these titles ever received the investigation of the law officers of the Government? Has Congress before it any statement of the facts connected with these sales so as to show their regularity, their fairness, or the propriety of confirming the sales? Have we any opinion of any law officer of the Government in regard to them?

Mr. WILSON. We have reports from the tax commissioners who went on the lands, levied the taxes, and sold the lands. Certain lands were bid in. Certain other lands were set aside for the use of the freedmen, by order. Other lands, about six thousand acres, were set apart for the purposes of schools. They are rented now, I understand, for something like $12,000, the proceeds of which are used for the benefit of the people living on the islands. I think myself that this arrangement is the best we can make, and will settle a great deal of the practical difficulty we have there, and therefore I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is the question to be taken simply on striking out, or on inserting the other sections?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out the sixth section and inserting in lieu of it what is printed in italics in the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is it on inserting the sixth section in italics, or on inserting all these other sections?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out the sixth section and inserting all the sections printed in italics down to and including section twelve.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to make a suggestion before the vote is taken. In section eleven, after the word "lands" in line seven, I move to strike out the words "on the islands in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Lake." I do not know that it would alter the meaning of the section at all to strike out these words. The section provides for restoring to the former owners the lands which were seized by General Sherman, excepting those which have been sold for taxes on these particular islands. Now, I do not know that any other lands have been sold for taxes, except upon these islands. The Senator from Massachusetts thinks there are none. If that be so, it would not alter the effect of the bill at all; but if in point of fact lands had been sold for taxes which were not upon those islands, the section, as it reads, would require their restoration to their former owners. Congress, I think, would not undertake to do that, but would leave it to the purchaser of those lands, if he has purchased them at a tax sale, to maintain his title if he could, and not undertake to divest it. If there should be any other lands, it can do no harm to strike out the words, and, with the words in, it would limit the tax titles to those particular islands.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to the amendment, but still the making of it will effect nothing. Within the boundaries of General Sherman's order were these islands; and on them are the only lands that have been sold for taxes, and they are now in the possession of the Government. It was proposed to surrender up all lands covered by General Sherman's field order to the owners excepting the lands on those islands that had been sold for taxes. The Senator proposes to strike out the lands on these islands. There are no lands that were sold for taxes excepting on the islands named in the bill, as I understand. I have no doubt on that point; still I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If that is so, it cannot alter it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think there is another amendment that ought to be made in section twelve. After the word "States," in line five of that section, I move to insert "and not heretofore disposed of by the United States;" so as to make the section read:

The Commissioner shall have power to seize, hold, use, lease, or sell all buildings and tenements, and any lands pertaining to the same, or otherwise, formerly owned by or claimed as the property of the so-called confederate States, and not heretofore disposed of by the United States.

My object is to protect those who have purchased property that was seized and has been heretofore disposed of by the Government. There are some such cases. I happen to know of one where some lands were sold under the direction of the Freedmen's Bureau and purchased by third parties. Of course it is not intended to seize that property which has been parted with.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I propose an amendment in the ninth section, to strike out in line three the words "determine the validity of," and insert the word "examine." I presume the Senator having the bill in charge will not object to this. I do not think it would be fortunate to use words in this act which would confer upon any authority other than the established courts of the country the right to determine the validity of titles. If my amendment be agreed to the section will then read, "that the assistant commissioners for South Carolina and Georgia are hereby authorized to examine all titles to lands in their respective States which are claimed under the provisions of General Sherman's special field order," &c. It does not require the establishment of a title, and I do not think we ought to confer upon a commission the power to fix titles.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems to me that the word "examine" does not go quite far enough. I suppose the intention of this provision is to have the commissioners determine upon conflicting claims between the parties, not to pass in the legal sense upon the title as between the original owners of these lands and the persons who may claim them under General Sherman's field order; but they are to pass upon them in the nature of a land officer or of commissioners who were sent out in early times, I recollect, to examine the various grants which had been made to the early settlers in the Northwest under various resolutions and acts of Congress. Those commissioners were appointed by Congress, and they proceeded to hear testimony and make a report upon the claims of different parties to lands. They had them surveyed and set apart to them, and those titles have been held valid by the Government of the United States. I suppose that that is what is meant by the language here used. It is something more than to "examine;" it seems to me that word goes hardly far enough.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the following words accomplish what he thinks ought to be accomplished; if the commissioner examining the title finds in the particular party "a valid claim"—that is the language used in the sixth line—if he finds a valid claim a warrant is to be issued upon the direct tax commissioners. What is intended to be meant by "valid claim" I am not sure that I know; but it does not require the fixing of legal title.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose the Senator from Indiana does not consider that there is any legal title in this case. Certain persons, as far as I can gather, to the number of about nine hundred, under General Sherman's field order, have taken up portions of lands in Georgia and in South Carolina amounting to between twenty-five thousand and thirty-five thousand acres, according to the best information we have. We propose that all the land now occupied under General Sherman's order shall be released by the President to the original owners on the 1st of January next. This provision is that the assistant commissioners for Georgia and South Carolina, who are now General Scott and General Tillson, shall examine the titles or claims—I suppose "claims" is as good a word as "titles"—of the persons holding land under General Sherman's order, and decide among them who have complied with the terms of that order, and then to give the persons who have so complied a certificate of the fact. Then the tax commissioners are to survey the lands which have been bought in by the Government at tax sales and give titles to small tracts of that land to these colored persons in lieu of the claims they have under General Sherman's order. The assistant commissioners are to give a certificate so that they can obtain other land.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Elsewhere?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir. I do not think there is any objection to letting it stand in the form it is. If the language used had been "the validity of the claims," instead of "the validity of all titles," it would have been as well. I suppose it is only a sort of squatter claim anyhow. These persons went on to these lands in accordance with General Sherman's order. Our assistant commissioners are to decide who has obtained a claim or a title according to the provisions of that order, in order to give such parties a certificate of the fact, that they may go elsewhere and be compensated for removing from these lands, so that the President can restore them to the original owners.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is just the purpose that I supposed the Senator wanted to accomplish. He does not want to make the right of these men to depend on the validity of the title—a legal right to the land in fee-simple. He wants the Commissioner to examine the claims of these parties, and whichever party, as between contestants, has the better right, for the Commissioner so to adjudge, and upon that adjudication to give a warrant which may be located upon other land.

Mr. WILSON. That is precisely what we want to do.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then the words I suggest will accomplish it more certainly than the words used in the section. Let it read, "authorized to examine all claims to lands." If you require the Commissioner to adjudge that there is a valid, legal title, it will defeat the very purpose, because there is no legal title, but simply a right of possession during military occupancy, in my judgment. I modify my amendment by also proposing to strike out the word "titles" in the third line, and inserting "claims;" so as to read, "to examine all claims to lands."

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think it is my duty to call the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge to the twelfth section. That section provides—

That the Commissioner shall have power to seize, hold, use, lease, or sell all buildings and tenements, and any lands appertaining to the same, or otherwise, formerly owned by or claimed as the property of the so-called confederate States, and any buildings or lands held in trust for the same by any person or persons, and to use the same or appropriate the proceeds derived therefrom to the education of the freed people.

I wish to ask of the Senator whether he holds that the de facto government of the confederate States was such a body or State as that it could become the owner of lands. This section assumes that the so-called confederate States could become the owner of real estate; in other words, that that government had a legal existence for the purpose of acquiring title to land. I should think the Senator would hesitate before he would assume that position. That question is likely to arise in several shapes; I do not care to express any opinion about it; but it is proposed for the consideration of the Senator, I think, when he asks us to vote for the section. If that de facto government could not acquire land, if it was not a legal existence for the purpose of acquiring land, any deed made to it during the war was simply a nullity. If it had a legal existence in such a sense as that it could become the owner of lands, could be a grantee, then I presume the Government of the United States succeeds to that property; at least it would have a right to take possession of it.

Mr. WILSON. The confederate government somehow contrived to get into their possession buildings and lands. They had, I understand, in the State of Georgia alone what cost them more than $1,000,000 in buildings and lands for the purposes of their army—arsenals and other buildings. They had some very valuable buildings, property taken, used, and owned, or professed to be owned, by the confederate government. We have taken some of this property and sold it. This section simply proposes that we shall take possession of this property which, if anybody in the world has a title to it, I take it the Government of the United States has, and that it shall be used for the benefit of education, and that when this bureau ceases to exist, the balance, whatever there may be of it, may be turned over to any State where it exists as a school fund. I think it is a good way to dispose of that kind of property; and there will be several hundred thousand dollars worth of it, I have no doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment by filling up the blank after the word "section" in line eleven of section nine and in line four of section ten with the word "seven."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those corrections will be made, no objection being interposed. The question now is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the sixth section of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the sections which have been read as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in section [seven] thirteen, at the commencement of the section to insert the words "and be it further enacted," and to strike out:

Whereas we recognize the necessity and duty resting upon the Government, and resulting from the condition of freedom, of aiding freedmen to receive that needful education which oppressive prejudices, laws, and customs denied them when held in slavery: Therefore.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I believe the amendments reported by the committee are disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are.
Mr. WILSON. In section [four] five, on the fourth page, I move to strike out lines eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen. The provisions granted there are embraced in another section of the bill in the new, amended fourth section. The words I propose to strike out are:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on the recommendation of the Commissioner, to continue in office as surgeons of the bureau, with their present rank, pay, and allowances, the volunteer officers now employed, and to fill any vacancies with other volunteer surgeons, with like rank and compensation, unless suitable surgeons in the regular Army can be thus assigned to duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move in the first section, fifth line, to strike out the words "two years" and insert "one year," and on this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This relates to the duration of the present measure, and will continue the operation of the bureau fully four months after the adjournment of Congress. There will certainly be time enough at the next session to consider whether it is necessary to extend this exceptional and peculiar system for a greater period of time than is contemplated in the amendment submitted by me, which will extend it to about the commencement of July, 1867.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 6, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Guthrie, and Hendricks—6.

YAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Creswell, Dixon, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stewart, Van Winkle, and Wright—17.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to amend the fourteenth section by striking out all the section after the word "justice" in the thirty-eighth line.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And after such State shall be fully restored in its constitutional relations to the Government and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The effect of this amendment will be to continue the action of this bureau until the courts both Federal and State are in complete and uninterrupted operation within the States which will be affected by this measure. Now, sir, the question whether a State shall be represented in Congress or not, has no necessary connection with the question of the internal administration of justice in that State. In other words, the organization of the State and Federal courts may be complete, and their action uninterrupted and perfectly satisfactory without any adjustment or determination of the political relations between the State and the Federal Government so far as regards membership in the Senate and House of Representatives. Therefore, sir, it is perfectly absurd to make the continuance of this bureau as an instrument for the administration of justice dependent upon the future action of Congress with reference to the admission of members from any particular State.

If this measure, then, is to stand upon principle; if you are to have this exceptional jurisdiction and the exceptional powers contemplated by this bill; and if you intend that they shall be exercised because there has been, or is, or may be, an interruption of the ordinary course of justice either in the Federal or State courts—if this is what you intend, let your bill say so. My amendment will cause it to speak precisely that language, in conformity, I suppose, with the general object or idea upon which the measure is founded.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In addition to what has been said by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I want to suggest that I am not able to see the necessity of this section. If the civil rights bill has any force at all, I cannot see the necessity of repeating legislation at periods of two months to the same point. The civil rights bill is claimed to be a law, having the force of law, and it regulates the very matter, so far as I can now recollect, that the fourteenth section in this bill is intended to regulate. Are Senators not satisfied with the provisions in what is called the civil rights bill, or do they think that by reenacting the same matter it will acquire some validity? I heard of a client employing an attorney to bring a suit, who a few days afterward returned and asked if the suit was brought. He was told that it was, and then he handed out some more money as a retaining fee and said he wanted the man sued harder. [Laughter.] If it is necessary for Congress to legislate harder than it has already done in what was called the civil rights bill, perhaps this section is necessary. The same matters are found in the civil rights bill substantially that are found in this section. I think the whole section might be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As a matter of form, for I know it will not be adopted as the amendment just proposed was not, I move to strike out the fourteenth section.

The Secretary read the section, as follows:

Sec. [8] 14. And be it further enacted, That in every State or district where the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has been interrupted by the rebellion, and until the same shall be fully restored, and in every State or district whose constitutional relations to the Government have been practically discontinued by the rebellion, and until such State shall have been restored in such relations, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States, the right to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to have full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings concerning personal liberty, personal security, and the acquisition, enjoyment, and disposition of estate, real and personal, including the constitutional right to bear arms, shall be secured to and enjoyed by all the citizens of such State or district without respect to race or color or previous condition of slavery. And whenever in either of said States or districts the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has been interrupted by the rebellion, and until the same shall be fully restored, and until such State shall have been restored in its constitutional relations to the Government, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States, the President shall, through the Commissioner and the officers of the bureau and under such rules and regulations as the President, through the Secretary of War, shall prescribe, extend military protection and have military jurisdiction over all cases and questions concerning the free enjoyment of such immunities and rights, and no penalty or punishment for any violation of law shall be imposed or permitted because of race or color, or previous condition of slavery, other or greater than the penalty or punishment to which white persons may be liable by law for the like offense. But the jurisdiction conferred by this section upon the officers of the bureau shall not exist in any State where the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has not been interrupted by the rebellion, and shall cease in every State when the courts of the State and the United States are not disturbed in the peaceful course of justice, and after such State shall be fully restored in its constitutional relations to the Government, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In the best faith possible I wish to assist the Senator from Massachusetts in perfecting this bill as nearly as possible, and in that spirit I move to strike out all after the word "President" in the ninth line of the third section down to and including the word "bureau" in line fourteen. The words which I propose to strike out are:

And the Commissioner shall, under the direction of the President, and so far as the same shall be, in his judgment, necessary for the efficient and economical administration of the affairs of the bureau, appoint such agents, clerks, and assistants as may be required for the proper conduct of the bureau.

I was willing, under the leadership of the Senator from Maine, the other day, to give to the Secretary of the Treasury a good deal of discretion; but in that bill we limited the Secretary to $160,000, and said that in the use of that much money he should have a discretion, but on that question the Senator from Massachusetts, I think, and the Senator from Illinois were very earnest in their arguments to show that such discretion ought not to be given, but that when an office was to be created it ought to be done by law, and when a salary was to be paid it ought to be paid according to law. Even my confidence, following the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, was somewhat shaken by the earnest and able arguments of the two Senators to whom I have referred. Now, if they were unwilling upon principle—and they said they stood upon principle altogether, and not at all upon personal prejudice or jealousy of the Secretary—if upon principle they were unwilling to give that discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury in the payment of clerks already provided for by law, under a limitation as to the amount, how is it that these distinguished Senators can give to the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau an unlimited and unrestricted discretion and power in the appointment of officers? Where is the limit? He may, in his own discretion, appoint such agents and clerks as he shall think the necessities of the bureau may require. Shall he appoint one or ten thousand? That depends upon his discretion; and here distinctly it is proposed to give, not even to a Secretary, but to the head of a bureau, the power to increase the office holders of the country without limit or restriction. I have thought it to be my duty to call the attention of Senators to the question of principle that I consider involved in this proposition.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is very manifest that the Senator from Indiana supposes something is to be made in the country by these various motions which he makes. He made one a moment ago to strike out one of the sections of this bill, and he made a little speech upon it. He did not make the motion with any expectation that it would be adopted, not he. But what was his expectation? Was it possible that he thought somebody might be misled by that little speech that he made, when he said that the civil rights bill covered that thing and he wanted to know why it was necessary to reenact it? Is it possible that he supposes any one is to be misled now by the speech he has made about conferring these extraordinary powers upon the head of a bureau? Why, Mr. President, this is very unlike the proposition that was up the other day, which I opposed and which the Senator from Indiana voted for. It is very easy to show to any one who wants to see it the necessity for the fourteenth section of this bill. The civil rights bill is a bill to have operation in regions of country where the civil tribunals are established, where the rebellion is crushed, where the writ of habeas corpus is authorized, where martial law does not exist; but the Freedmen's Bureau is a part of the military establishment of the country; it is to have effect where the courts cannot operate, and this military tribunal, a part of the military establishment of the country, is for the purpose of preserving order, rendering justice, protecting the rights of person and property in those regions of country, like Virginia and Alabama, where the civil authority is not restored; where the President of the United States allows a man to qualify for office or not, as in his judgment and discretion he thinks proper; where he prohibits one officer to act as judge of probate in Mobile and another to act as an officer in Norfolk. He would not do that in the State of Indiana, where the Senator resides. He does not pretend to exercise any such authority there. Hence the necessity for the fourteenth section of this bill conferring judicial authority upon this portion of the military establishment of the United States where the country is governed by the military power.

Now as to the Senator's other amendment. This provision does not authorize the head of this bureau to give whatever salary he pleases.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I did not say that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know the Senator did not; but the bill for which he voted the other day did authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to give whatever salary he pleased. The Secretary could, under the bill that the Senator supported and voted for, pay $10,000 to a single individual. I opposed it because I would vest no such authority in the Secretary of the Treasury. I thought that it was a corrupting fund, not that he will use it that way, but it is a fund that may be used for corrupt purposes. I would not lead the Secretary of the Treasury into temptation; I would not corrupt the clerks by expectations of reward out of this fund placed in his hands and without limit.

But what is this proposition? This proposition is to employ certain clerks or agents at a salary of not less than $500 nor more than $1,200, limited expressly. But, says the Senator, the officer who is to employ these clerks may employ as many as he pleases. Not at all. He is limited by the President of the United States; it must be under his direction; and I know the Senator from Indiana has just as high a regard for the President of the United States as I have; at least, I trust he has. I believe he professes to have a regard for him, and he does not believe the President of the United States would abuse this authority; so that you have a guarantee here in an officer higher and above a Secretary. The Commissioner can employ nobody except it is done under the direction of the President, who shares the confidence of the Senator from Indiana. Therefore, I think he cannot apprehend that there will be any abuse under this provision of the bill. The amount of salary is limited. Certainly the services of a clerk ought to be worth as much as $1,200, which is the maximum, if he is a faithful clerk.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On the amendment which I have suggested I have but a word or two more to say to the Senate. I was a little surprised that the Senator from Illinois, in resisting the amendment which I have now proposed, should go back to the discussion of the fourteenth section of the bill. That was before the Senate a few minutes ago, and the Senator did not feel it to be his duty to discuss it; but to meet the proposition to amend the third section he discusses the fourteenth. Now, I am not able to see the connection between the two sections. I am not able to see the relevancy between the two subjects, but it was agreeable to the Senator, and not disagreeable to me, that he should make that argument. The Senator says that the fourteenth section is intended for a condition of society bordering on that of war, when the courts cannot exercise their powers in any particular community, and that the civil rights bill was not intended for that condition of society. I thought the civil rights bill was better adapted to that state of society than to a state of society when the courts of the States are in full operation.

The Senator has discussed the confidence which he has, and which I ought to have, in the President of the United States. I hope the Senator has as much confidence as I; not less. For much of the policy of the President of the United States I have the greatest respect. In what is known as his "policy" I have entire confidence, and give it my cordial support; but why does the Senator repeat that which has so often been alluded to in the Senate, the fact that the President of the United States has exercised, to say the least of it, in my judgment, a doubtful power in refusing to Commander Semmes the right to hold a civil office in the city of Mobile? Is the Senator dissatisfied with the action of the President in that regard, that he brings it up so frequently in the Senate? It was certainly desirable that that person should not hold the office; and if the President could bring himself to believe that he had the power to say he should not, I am gratified that he should do so. But I think it very strange that Senators who for the last four or five years have exercised and apologized for the exercise of powers not defined or delegated in the law should now be so earnest in their demand that the President shall stand exactly upon the letter of the law. The purpose of the President, I presume, meets with the approval of the Senator. Then, if it was a doubtful power, that Senator, according to the course he has pursued for several years, the purpose being a good one, ought to seek an apology for it rather than to criticize it.

The question now is simply whether the Commissioner shall have the power to appoint as many clerks and agents as he pleases; and I did not think that the Senator was happy in meeting that particular point. He says that the salary is fixed. I say to the Senator that the salary is not fixed. The number is not defined, and the salary is not fixed. This bill provides that the clerks and agents shall not receive less than $500 nor more than $1,200; but if the Commissioner chooses, he may give to one man $500 and to another man $1,200 for doing the very same thing. The Senator says he could not vote for the proposition of the Senator from Maine the other day, because it gave the Secretary of the Treasury the power to pay one man more for the same service than another; he might give one man $10,000 a year; but the amount in the aggregate was fixed in the bill. Here the number of officers and the salary are both left to the discretion of the Commissioner. I think that the proposition certainly will not receive the support of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WILSON. I take it we would all agree with the Senator from Indiana and fix the number of officers and define their pay if it was in our power to do so; but we do not know precisely the number of officers that will be needed and we cannot tell the exact amount of their duties. In one State it will be much larger than in others. We have, therefore, been driven to the necessity of allowing the Commissioner, under the direction of the President, to appoint these officers, "so far as the same shall be, in his judgment, necessary for the efficient and economical administration of the affairs of the bureau." The object is to have as few employes as it is possible to get along with, and to pay them at the cheapest rate. We authorize them, in order to avoid the necessity of appointing new men, to detail men from the Army. We provide, also, that the clerks appointed shall have a salary of not less than $500 nor more than $1,200, and the persons to be appointed will receive a salary somewhere between those two sums. I think the provision of the bill as it now stands is imposed upon us by the very necessities of the case. Wherever we can define the number of officers and fix their salaries, I think it is our duty to do it; but I think we cannot do it here; and I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is a pretty extensive power provided for in this bill. The exercise of it is very large. As the Senator from Indiana observed, the number seems to be unlimited and the pay not fixed. Ordinarily, I should be very much averse to granting such a power; but inasmuch as two very distinguished Senators who have carefully examined the subject—the honorable Senator from Massachusetts and the honorable Senator from Illinois—and the committee of which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts is chairman who have thoroughly examined the subject, have come to the conclusion, and tell us as the result of their examination, from their acquaintance with the subject and their familiarity with it, that they are satisfied there is an absolute necessity for the purposes of the Government that it should be granted, and as I have not examined the question, and cannot pretend to be able to correct them, I shall yield my opinions to theirs, according to my usual custom. Notwithstanding that they would not attach the slightest consequence the other day to my assertion and the assertion of the Committee on Finance that they had thoroughly examined the subject then under consideration, and in their judgment there was no other mode in which the business could properly be done, I am disposed to carry out my own principle of action with regard to committees instead of following their example. [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have one more amendment to suggest, and then as far as I am concerned the bill may abide its fate. I move to strike out all after the twenty-seventh line in the third section.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And all persons appointed to service under this act and the act to which this is an amendment, shall be so far deemed in the military service of the United States as to be under the military jurisdiction and entitled to the military protection of the Government while in discharge of the duties of their office.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I make this motion because I do not think that this bureau will in fact be a part of the Army of the United States; it will not be organized as a part of the Army; nor will it have the duties to discharge which belong to the Army. In no proper sense, speaking the truth, is it a part of the military force of the country; and to say that it shall be regarded as a part of the Army under the military law is simply to force it into that position. It does not properly belong there. It is civil service, to superintend civil rights, to protect civil rights, as it is claimed by the authors of the bill, and to secure men in their personal privileges, and ought not in any sense to be connected with the Army, so far as the government of the persons connected with it is concerned. This is the objection that I have to these words.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If that clause is to stand, and they are to be regarded as in the military service for protection, they ought to be regarded as in the military service so as to be subject to the Rules and Articles of War, to be liable to be tried and punished for any irregularity or improper conduct. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts whether the clause ought not to be amended in that way. If they are to be in the military service for protection they ought to be in the military service for trial and punishment.

Mr. WILSON. I think that is covered by the language of the clause. They are certainly so considered. Some of them are now under arrest, and are to be tried by court-martial. The provision is this:

And all persons appointed to service under this act, and the act to which this is an amendment, shall be so far deemed in the military service of the United States as to be under the military jurisdiction, and entitled to the military protection of the Government while in the discharge of the duties of their office.

I think the words "under the military jurisdiction" subject them to trial by court-martial for any improper conduct; and that is the object, to have the persons who are thus appointed tried by court-martial for any misconduct.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think it would be safe to amend the clause. The language, "under the military jurisdiction and entitled to the military protection of the Government," would perhaps protect them, but not subject them to trial.

Mr. WILSON. "Shall be so far deemed in the military service of the United States as to be under the military jurisdiction." They are to be in the military service so as to be under military jurisdiction; to be under the control of the military authorities, and of course to be tried by court-martial; and then it provides that they shall be "entitled to the military protection of the Government." I think it is right.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think this is a very objectionable measure, and regret to see it pass; but I am well aware that any argument that could be made upon it, at this stage of its consideration, would not influence its fate, and therefore I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate in its discussion further than to say that in the very nature of the thing, an institution of this sort cannot bring good either to the white or to the colored race, in my judgment. I do not believe that any bureau can be a success which sends men into a community to govern a part of that community. There is no society in New England, there is no society in the Northwest, which can be governed well for the country under a system like this. I think during the last six months we have had so much information in regard to the practical operation of this bureau as to call upon men to hesitate before they continue its existence for two years longer. My information upon the subject is, and it is that upon which I rely, that this bureau has been a cause of evil and disturbance in the southern States, and has not secured to the colored people that blessing which is any compensation to the country for the enormous expense it is upon the national Treasury.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 609) to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in Minnesota, ports of delivery;

A bill (H. R. No. 611) to provide for making the town of Whitehall, New York, a port of delivery;

A bill (H. R. No. 726) to extend to certain persons the privilege of admission, in certain cases, to the United States Government Asylum for the Insane; and

A bill (H. R. No. 727) declaratory of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue registers to vessels in certain cases," approved February 10, 1866.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (S. No. 313) to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glycin oil, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 179) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory, and also to the bill (H. R. No. 145) granting land to A. M. Jess, of Josephine county, Oregon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILSON. I hope not.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 26, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ABUSE OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. ALLEY. I am directed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to submit a resolution, together with a communication I have received from the Postmaster General. I hope there will be no objection to the introduction of the resolution at this time.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire if any further legislation is necessary to prevent frauds on the franking privilege, and to prevent abuses of the same, and report by bill or otherwise.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEY. I want the House to understand this matter. I ask that the Clerk read the communication of the Postmaster General showing abuses in the franking privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, June 14, 1866.

Sir: Complaints have been frequently made to this Department of frauds upon its revenues by the illegal use of the franks of members of Congress by claim agents and other persons in this city, to which the attention of Senators and Representatives, whose names have been so used, has been called. This abuse of the franking privilege has become a serious evil, lessening considerably the postal revenues and bringing reproach upon the Department.

The Postmaster General is powerless to arrest the evil while members of Congress permit their clerks or other persons to write their names upon envelopes and use or permit the use of fac-simile stamps, neither of which has the sanction of law.

I transmit herewith for the information of yourself and committee, and for such use as you may think proper to make of them, copies of two letters recently received at this Department from reliable parties, and copies of statements made by two claim agents to an officer of the Department, showing the manner in which they procured and used the franks of members in their business.

I should regard the repeal of all laws authorizing such privilege as most healthy legislation, in harmony with the principle on which the Post Office Department is organized, and promotive of good morals.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

W. DENNISON,
Postmaster General.

Hon. J. B. ALLEY, Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN,
No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK CITY, June 2, 1866.
DEAR SIR: We inclose herewith a letter just received from Milton Bradley, a reliable party residing in Springfield, Massachusetts.

We think the abuse of the franking privilege complained of is now carried on to an extent greatly detrimental to the postal revenue.

Not long since we received a letter from a party doing business in Connecticut which was inclosed in an envelope franked by an M. C.

Messrs. Holloway & Co. are doing business in Washington as patent agents, and have no more right to conduct their business through the mails free of expense than ourselves.

During the months of April and May we purchased over $600 worth of postage stamps at the New York post office, and if we could be allowed to secure the frank of an M. C. it would afford us great advantages.

We consider it to be our duty to call your attention to the subject.

Your obedient servants,
MUNN & CO.
Hon. WILLIAM DENNISON, Postmaster General.

SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, May 31.

GENTLEMEN: Having received three business circulars from D. P. Holloway & Co., under the frank of —, M. C., I have been incited to send the inclosed communication to your paper. It seems to me a downright swindle that such things should be allowed. It would be a very pretty arrangement for every business firm in Washington to have the name of some M. C. printed on their envelopes, as it would pay pretty well for printing.

If you see fit to publish my communication, and wish to say anything different in the same strain, do so; I will swear to it.

Yours, &c.,
MILTON BRADLEY.
Messrs. MUNN & Co.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN, POST OFFICE,
March 31, 1866.

Sir: The inclosed circulars or handbills of Storrs & Ellis, under the frank of —, M. C., have been sent me by the route agent. Is this properly sent? Does it come under the provisions of the law for franking privilege?

They have been sent to all postmasters in Wisconsin and Minnesota, some sealed and some unsealed.

Yours respectfully,
P. VAN VECHTEN, Jr.,
Special Agent Post Office Department.
To Hon. WILLIAM DENNISON,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

POST OFFICE,

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, March 31, 1866.

DEAR SIR: Herewith I inclose an envelope and contents, which seems to me to be not entitled to be sent under a frank, but which is but one of thousands that are passing in the mails. This one happened to be unsealed and disclosed its contents, but the others are closely sealed.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,
H. PARK,
Special Agent Post Office Department.
GEORGE WILLIAM MCLELLAN, Second Assistant Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

Cordial Storrs says the envelopes inclosing the business card of Storrs & Ellis, sent out by mail from their office under the frank of Hon. —, United States Senator, were franked by Miss —, a niece of the Senator, by his direction. That he (Storrs) called upon the Senator and asked if he would frank a package of these envelopes for him, to which he assented and directed Miss — to do it. The name was written on each envelope by her and returned to him (Storrs).

He has sent out not exceeding two hundred letters thus franked by Senator —, and has never asked any other Senator or member of Congress for their franks, and has never used any other than those above mentioned.

Dated April 9, 1866.
Sworn and subscribed this 9th day of April, 1866, before me,
JAMES LAURENSEN,
Justice Peace.

George E. Lemon states that the envelopes purporting to be franked by Hon. —, in which his business cards and circulars have been sent through the mails, were procured by him from John H. Alston, a clerk in the Interior Department. He had them in his possession and gave them to him (Lemon) to cover correspondence with his (Alston's) friends. Lemon does not know how he came by them, but supposes he procured them from Mr. —.

He has also sent out letters by mail containing his business cards and circulars under the franks of Hon. —, of Pennsylvania, Hon. —, of Ohio, Hon. —, and Hon. —, of New York. He did not procure these franks from the members themselves but from third parties, whose names he does not now feel at liberty to disclose, but is perfectly willing to do so to the above-named gentlemen.

He has also used the franks of a good many other members of Congress, which he has procured from themselves and not from third parties.

Signed,
G. E. LEMON.
In presence of St. JOHN B. L. SKINNER.
April 9, 1866.

POST OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, April 3, 1866.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find two letters bearing the frank of Hon. —.

Mr. — says the franks are forged, and he has no knowledge of the parties to whom the letters are addressed.

Respectfully, yours,
L. S. MORTON,
Assistant Postmaster.

S. J. BOWEN.

DANVERSPORT POST OFFICE, MASSACHUSETTS,
June 9, 1866.

The inclosed envelope, containing three circulars of the kind now inclosed, came in this morning's mail from Boston. It being directed "Postmaster," I supposed it on official business; but discovering that it was not, I laid it aside to proceed in opening the mail, and thus lost a portion of the envelope. On again examining the inclosure and envelope, which bears no official stamp, I felt convinced that the package had passed through the mail by fraud; and that the name, —, M. C., was probably forged.

I take the liberty to make this communication to the Post Office Department.

Very respectfully,
DAVID MEAD,
Postmaster.

POST OFFICE, MYSTIC BRIDGE,
COUNTY OF NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT,
June 12, 1866.

Sir: Inclosed I send a document I received this day. Please do me the honor to inform me if the Department allows such papers to be sent free of postage.

Sir, trusting that I am not asking too great a favor, I have the honor to remain truly your obedient servant,

J. A. RATHBURN,
Postmaster.

POSTMASTER GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

The resolution was adopted.

PRINTING TARIFF LAW.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which, under the law, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of this House five hundred copies of the existing tariff act.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, reported back Senate bill No. 20, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, with amendments; which were ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. BEAMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill and amendments were recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. MOULTON, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BAKER on account of illness.

DORENCE ATWATER.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, a resolution was passed yesterday referring to the Committee on Military Affairs an investigation into the conduct of certain officers of the War Department in the case of Dorence Atwater, and also two memorials on the same subject. I desire, after conference with my committee this morning, to say that the Committee on Military Affairs, from the pressure of unfinished business yet upon their docket, will be unable to give attention to a case of this kind, where witnesses must be examined and a somewhat extended investigation entered on. I ask, therefore, at the request of the Committee on Military Affairs, that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, as well as of the two memorials; that a select committee of five be appointed to investigate and report on this subject, suggesting as a very proper chairman of that committee the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] not now present, who introduced the subject to the attention of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of the following named gentlemen to constitute the select committee: Mr. ROBERT S. HALE of New York, Mr. FREDERICK E. WOODBRIDGE of Vermont, Mr. ANTHONY THORNTON of Illinois, Mr. HALBERT E. PAINE of Wisconsin, and Mr. JOHN W. LONGYEAR of Michigan.

PAYMENT OF TROOPS.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to provide for the payment of the sixth, eighth, and eleventh regiments of Ohio volunteer militia, of Cincinnati, &c.; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. KASSON. Were these men mustered into the United States service?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir. The payment is limited to thirty-one days.

Mr. KASSON. May we not violate the precedent?

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no violation of precedents. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. What special circumstances demand this special legislation?

Mr. BINGHAM. Simply because of the ruling of the Department that they are not within the provisions of existing law.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Are there no other cases like this?

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the report be read.

The report was accordingly read.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THIRTY-SEVENTH IOWA VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 18, for the relief of the thirty-seventh regiment Iowa volunteer infantry, reported adversely by the Committee on Military Affairs, was laid upon the table.

Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to pay the thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteers the same bounty that has been paid to the other soldiers serving in the United States Army. It is an exceptional case, being a regiment of men enlisted in the Army over forty-five years of age. The Governor of the State of Iowa offered this regiment to the Secretary of War on the 25th of August, 1862, and it was accepted. By an order of that date it was mustered into the service of the United States in December, 1862, and continued in the service until the end of the rebellion. After it was mustered into the service a portion of the regiment received bounty, but afterward, by the ruling of the Secretary of War, bounty was refused to the members of the regiment, and at its muster-out those who had received the bounty were compelled to refund it. The Committee on Military Affairs have made an adverse report upon this claim upon the ground that there was no law authorizing bounty to be paid to this regiment, which perhaps is true. Yet I think a liberal construction of the bounty law would give bounty to that regiment as well as to other soldiers mustered into the United States service. But, however that may be, this, I believe, is the only regiment that was mustered into the service for three years that has not received the $100 bounty granted to the soldiers of the United States.

Now, I appeal to the members of this House to grant to this regiment of men who enlisted in the Army of the United States in the dark hour of the history of this country, in 1862, and who continued to perform faithful service up to the close of the rebellion, the same bounty that has been given to other soldiers of the United States. They continued in the service, discharging the duties that would necessarily have been discharged by other soldiers if these had not enlisted. I think they are, from the nature of their services and the time in the service, entitled to the bounty proposed by this bill. They served from the 13th of December, 1862, till May, 1865, a period of two years and five months.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to add something to the statements made by my colleague. In 1863, after this regiment had been mustered into the service, it was discovered that it was not the intention of the Department to allow bounty to its members. An amendment was made to a Senate bill, upon the motion of one of the Senators from Iowa, providing for the payment of this bounty. That bill came to this House, and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The subject was placed in the hands of Mr. Odell, of New York, then a member of the committee, for investigation. He afterward told me that he had applied to the War Department to know what the intention of the Department was in relation to the bounty of this regiment, when he was informed that it was intended to treat the thirty-seventh Iowa infantry precisely the same as other regiments were treated. Not being satisfied with that, I made a personal application to the Secretary of War to know whether the information I had received from Mr. Odell was correct, when the Secretary informed me that no difference whatever would be made in relation to the pay of that regiment, either as regarded regular pay or bounty. Upon that the Committee on Military Affairs declined to recommend any further action, believing it to be entirely unnecessary.

Now, sir, the order or dispatch from the War Department accepting this regiment, I have in my hand, and it reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON CITY, August 11, 1862.

Sir: In reply to yours of 4th instant, proposing to raise a regiment of men of forty-five years of age, but "active and vigorous," for garrison duty, I am directed to say that such a regiment will be accepted.

By order of the Secretary of War:

C. P. BUCKINGHAM,

Brigadier General and A. A. G.

HIS EXCELLENCY SAMUEL J. KIRKWOOD,

Governor of Iowa, Davenport.

Under that order the regiment was raised. It was ordered into camp on October 10, 1862. It was mustered into the service on the 15th of December, 1862. It remained in the service until the 24th day of May, 1865, being a period of two years and five months and some days. I have here a statement of the service performed by this regiment; and let it be remembered that it was agreed that the regiment should be received for the performance of garrison duty alone. That was the order issued to the Governor of Iowa accepting the service of the regiment.

Now, as I have stated, on the 15th December, 1862, the regiment was mustered into the service of the United States by Captain H. B. Hendershott. On the 29th of the same month they left Camp Strong for St. Louis, Missouri, where on the 5th January, 1863, the regiment was placed on duty guarding military prisons, provost duty, and escorting troops to the front. They served at St. Louis, Missouri, till the last of May; on the Pacific railroad, in Missouri, guarding the same, from the last of May to the last of July, 1863; at Alton, Illinois, guarding the Alton military prison, from the last of July, 1863, to the 18th January, 1864; at Rock Island, Illinois, guarding the military prison there, from the 22d January to the 5th June, 1864; at Memphis, Tennessee, on picket duty, from the 9th June to the 27th August, 1864. From Memphis, Tennessee, the regiment was ordered to Indianapolis, where it remained a short time, when five companies were ordered to Cincinnati, Ohio, under command of Colonel Kincaid; three companies to Columbus, Ohio, under command of Lieutenant Colonel West; and two companies to Gallipolis, Ohio, under command of Major Allen. The duty performed by Colonel Kincaid's command at Cincinnati was guarding Lytle & Kelton's transportation barracks, guarding Government store-houses, and provost and transportation duty. The duty performed by Lieutenant Colonel West's command was guarding Camp Chase and escorting troops and prisoners to the front. The duty performed by Major Allen's command was guarding Government stores, scouting, and transportation. The regiment continued on duty as above stated until May 13, 1865, when the commands of Lieutenant Colonel West and Major Allen were ordered to join that of Colonel Kincaid at Cincinnati, Ohio, and on the 20th the regiment left Cincinnati, Ohio, en route to Davenport, Iowa, where on the 24th May, 1865, it was mustered out of service, in accordance with orders from the War Department, dated May 13, 1865.

Now, before the regiment was mustered out a part of the men had been honorably discharged, and those thus honorably discharged received bounty. But nearly all, if not all, of them had received twenty-five dollars of bounty when the regiment was originally mustered in, and when the regiment was mustered out as a regiment all those who had received twenty-five dollars only had it deducted from their pay, although the Secretary of War had at one time given assurances that the regiment would be treated just as other regiments raised at the same time. Now, if it had been understood at the time that the regiment was not to receive bounty for performing garrison duty, yet after the Government used them for purposes and different services, they are just as much entitled to bounty as the members of any other regiment. And let it be remembered that we have already provided bounties for regiments not strictly provided for by law, for all the colored troops and all the white troops but this regiment, which stands alone in the refusal of bounty.

Now, all we ask is that this regiment shall be placed upon an equal footing with other regiments. They served as well as other regiments and discharged their duties faithfully, and I hope the motion to reconsider will prevail and that the bill will be passed. I introduced this bill early in the session, and had hoped for favorable action on it soon after its introduction. I trust it will not be delayed longer, but that justice will now be done to these patriotic men.

Mr. ALLISON. I will now call the previous question unless some gentleman desires to speak upon the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to explain why the Committee on Military Affairs reported as they did.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw the call for the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, everybody knows the patriotism of Iowa as a State, and the patriotic course of her citizens, to say nothing of the patriotic gentlemen here who so ably represent her on this floor. But the Committee on Military Affairs felt constrained to report adversely upon the bill referred to them, to pay this thirty-seventh Iowa volunteer regiment their bounty, simply upon the ground of the information derived by correspondence with the War Department as to the terms under which the enlistment of these men was offered. It is true that reporting as we did, the thirty-seventh Iowa would not receive the $100 bounty given at that time to those who enlisted. It is equally true, however, that they were taken into the service with the understanding that they were not to receive that $100 bounty. In this respect they are in precisely the same condition with various other troops who have served their country and served their country well. And to go no further for an illustration, I will take the hundred days' men, some thirty-eight thousand of whom came from my own State, and as many more in the aggregate from other States of this Union, and who were supplied to the Government and mustered into service in a time of great emergency, thus enabling General Grant to carry on his campaign of 1864, and which without them would perhaps have been a failure.

There is, however, a bill which has passed this House and gone to the Senate for concurrence, which I trust it will obtain, equalizing the bounties of all soldiers who have actually rendered service to the Government. That bill proposes that every soldier, sailor, or marine who has actually performed such service, shall receive bounty at the rate of eight and one third dollars per month for the time they were actually employed during the period embraced between the commencement and the cessation of hostilities, covering a period of four years. That bill, if it shall pass, will embrace these Iowa troops; it will also take in the hundred days' men, and it will also take in as well those who were employed under peculiar circumstances, agreeing with the authorities and for themselves that they would not demand bounty, as those to whom bounty has been secured by existing law.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SCHENCK. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I merely wish to have justice done the members of this Iowa regiment. The gentleman says the members of this regiment agreed that they would not ask for bounties. Now, a part of this regiment, a considerable portion of it, was raised in my district; and I know that the uniform representation which was made by those who were recruiting was that the men would receive bounties. That was the impression and belief of the men when they enlisted in this regiment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no desire to go at any length into the correspondence in relation to this subject. I will, however, read a clause in the first communication made upon this subject. The decision made on the 5th of February, 1866, communicated from the War Department, after stating that this regiment was recruited for light or garrison duty only, and that the regiment thus authorized for a special service and in accordance with the regulations of the Department, was not to receive bounty allowance, the Adjutant General goes on to state:

"This was fully understood by the State authorities of Iowa, and was made known to the men enlisting in the organization, under telegram dated October 10, 1862, a copy of which was furnished the United States mustering officer at Davenport, as follows."

And then follows a copy of the telegram, stating that the men were to be mustered in on that condition, which telegram the mustering officer held at the time the men were mustered in.

Now, whether there has been any deception practiced or not I have nothing to say. We have only this authority from the War Department. What I was going on to say was that no injustice was intended to be done to these men. And unless the men of this regiment prefer the $100 bounty to what they would receive from the operation of the equalization bounty bill, it seems to me it would be just as well to leave them where we left the hundred days' men, amounting to some sixty-odd thousand in number of the eighty-five thousand who were enlisted, and others who entered the service for short periods of time, and who have thus far received no bounty, but depend upon the general equalization bounty bill to get bounties for the time they served.

Now, under that general bill, if this "greybeard" regiment served for two years, they will receive $200 instead of the $100 the bill under consideration would give them. Those who were honorably mustered out of the service at any earlier period, after serving two, five, ten, or more months, will receive bounty at the rate of eight and one third dollars for each month of their service. They will thus all be provided for under the general bounty bill. It was the consideration, in the first place, that they fell within the category of great numbers for whom no bounties are provided by law, and the most of whom have not come forward, as these men have, to claim bounty, including all the hundred days' men; and in the second place, the consideration that though they do not claim it and could not receive it under any existing law, they would all get it pro rata under the equalization scheme; it was these considerations that induced the Committee on Military Affairs to report as they did in this case.

Now, I do not wish to be considered as opposing any sense of justice of the House which may induce them to vote this bounty to this "greybeard" regiment. I only desire to put the House in possession of the facts which led the committee to come to the conclusion they did; and also to put them in possession of the general fact, or rather to remind them of it, that if the equalization bounty bill shall become a law, they will all get bounty.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to inquire if the members of this regiment, to whom it is proposed to give this bounty, will be embraced within the provisions of the equalizing bounty bill which has gone to the Senate. If so, then what reason is there for passing this special bill providing for this Iowa regiment, when they will come in under that general bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer that question by saying, in the first place, that the bill equalizing bounties has not yet passed the Senate.

Mr. SPALDING. It will pass.

Mr. ALLISON. In the next place, these men were mustered into the service of the United States for three years or during the war; and they performed faithful service for two years and five months under the order of the War Department without reference to the terms of the order mustering them into service. And they are entitled to the same bounty that has been paid to other faithful soldiers of the Republic.

Mr. SPALDING. Has this bill passed the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. It has not.

Mr. SPALDING. Then that argument fails.

Mr. ALLISON. If the general bounty bill fails there is no reason why these men, who have served in the Army for two years and five months, should not have the same bounty that has been paid to the soldiers. That is the reason why we propose the passage of this bill now. As my colleague [Mr. WILSON] has stated, we have already granted bounty to the colored soldiers of the Republic, and to every soldier who has served in the Army more than two years, except this thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteers. Now, I ask upon what ground can we make an exception against these men, when, although mustered into service for garrison duty only, they were subject to the orders of the War Department, and were actually required to go into the field, and did serve in the field, filling the places of those who had been ordered East for the purpose of reinforcing the army of General Grant. It seems to me that there can be no objection to paying these bounties to these men. And now I will call the previous question upon this bill.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope this bill will be postponed until the first Monday of December next, and then, if the general bill is not passed, we can pass this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. This bill can do no harm. Two years ago the bill passed the Senate of the United States to pay bounty to these soldiers, and it only failed to become the law because the Secretary of War said he could under existing law pay these soldiers the same bounty as other soldiers who had been mustered into the service for the same period of time. I demand the previous question on the motion to reconsider.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table was reconsidered.

Mr. ALLISON demanded the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ALLISON demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SPALDING demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—yeas fifteen.

Mr. SPALDING demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SPALDING and ALLISON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas twenty-four; more than one fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 81, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Cobb, Coffroth, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Grinnell, Hale, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Thomas Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McKee, McKuer, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, William B. Washburn, Welton, Whaley, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Dawson, Denison, Dumont, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Le Blond, Marshall, Marston, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Taylor, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, and Winfield—81.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Baxter, Blaine, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Culver, Darling, DeForest, Delano, Farnsworth, Perry, Garfield, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hart, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Ketcham, Latham, Lynch, McCullough, McIndoe, Newell, Nocli, Orth, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Taber, Van Arman, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Wright—71.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALT LAKE AND COLUMBIA RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 336, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Salt Lake City to the Columbia river, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SPALDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INSANE ASYLUM.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, presented a bill to extend to certain persons the privilege of admission, in certain cases, to the United States Government Asylum for the Insane; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that civilians employed in the United States quartermaster and subsistence departments who may have become or may hereafter become insane in such employment, shall be admitted the same as persons belonging to the Army and Navy to the benefits of the asylum for the insane in the District of Columbia. The following classes are to be admitted to the asylum under the order of the Secretary of War: 1. Men who while in the service of the United States Army and Navy have been admitted into the said asylum, and have been thereafter discharged therefrom on the supposition that they had recovered their reason, and have within three years become again insane and have no adequate means of support. 2. Indigent insane persons who have been in the same service and have been discharged on account of insanity. 3. Indigent insane who have become such within three years after discharge from such service from causes which arose during and were produced by said service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMBROSE L. GOODRICH AND NATHAN CORNISH.

Mr. FARQUHAR, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the amendments to House joint resolution for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to House resolution 77, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish, for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from that part of their first amendment which provides "that the amount to be allowed shall not exceed $20,000," and that said amendment be so modified as to read, "Provided, That the amount to be allowed shall not exceed $10,000."

That the House concur in the Senate amendments as modified.

JOHN CONNESS,

L. M. MORRILL,

C. R. BUCKALEW,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN H. FARQUHAR,

D. C. MCUEER,

W. B. FINCK,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of this House one thousand extra copies of the tariff bill lately reported.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, also reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of this House, five hundred copies of the existing tariff act.

NITRO-GLYCERINE.

Mr. ELIOT called for the regular order of business.

The House accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the regular order of business during the morning hour, being the calling of committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments Senate bill No. 313, to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glynoil oil.

The amendments reported by the committee, mostly of a verbal character, were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed an act (S. No. 353) for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the mission church of the Wyandotte Indians, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had passed an act to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ISSUE OF REGISTERS TO VESSELS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill declaratory of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue registers to vessels in certain cases," approved February 10, 1866; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the act approved February 10, 1866, entitled "An act further to regulate the registering of vessels," shall not be deemed or construed to affect in the least the operation of the act approved December 23, 1852, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue registers to vessels in certain cases," but that the same shall be in full force and effect, anything in the act first aforesaid to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. If the gentleman from Massachusetts is going to explain the bill I have nothing to say. I only wanted to know how he expects that it will change the existing law. It does not appear from the bill itself.

Mr. ELIOT. I will state that some years ago there was a law passed which authorized, in case a foreign-built vessel was wrecked upon our shores and was purchased by an American owner and an expense equal to three times the consideration money was put upon the vessel, the registry of that vessel as an American bottom. On the 10th of February, 1866, this Congress passed an act requiring that where vessels had changed ownership during the rebellion, which had been American and had been placed under foreign protection, those vessels being repurchased by the American owners should not be entitled to American registers except by act of Congress. In point of fact, such was the law before, as I believe, but there was a misunderstanding or doubt at the Treasury Department, and it was deemed advisable to make the law certain, and so the act of February last was passed. Now, since that time, it has been contended at the Treasury Department that the "wreck act" of 1852 was in some way interfered with by the act of February, 1866. Well, it was not the intention of the Committee on Commerce to interfere at all with that "wreck act," as it is called, and in order to remove all doubt upon that subject this bill simply provides that the act of February 10, 1866, shall not be construed to limit the operations of the act of 1852. That is the whole story.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

REGISTRY OF VESSELS.

Mr. ELIOT also, from the same committee, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry or enrollment and license to certain vessels; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read.

Mr. PIKE. I would like to inquire what are the circumstances requiring the passage of this bill.

Mr. ELIOT. The vessels to which this bill refers are all of them, I believe, with one exception, vessels built in Canada for the purpose of being used in the lake trade, which have been purchased by Americans and which since the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty, it is found, of course, impossible to use advantageously without American registers. There is one exception to that, a schooner which was wrecked and which, being wrecked, was purchased by an Englishman. No bill of sale was made; I mean no custom-house bill of sale, but a bill of delivery, and the vessel being wrecked, was raised and being found to be but little injured, was put in order, and sold on the spot to its present owners. They found upon application at the custom-house that although the vessel had never sailed under any foreign flag at all, yet that the momentary ownership by a foreigner prevented their obtaining an American register, and this enables them to do it. With that exception, the vessels are all foreign-built.

Mr. PIKE. I would inquire what rule the committee have adopted, and whether they propose to admit any foreign-built vessel and sold bona fide to American owners to an American register. If that rule is to obtain, if we are to import foreign-built vessels in this indirect way, and thus in effect repeal the navigation acts, we should tax these vessels as we do other importations. Let them be assessed forty per cent. or thirty per cent. or such ad valorem percentage as may be deemed proper. I am not disposed to interfere with these particular cases, for I know nothing about them; but it seems to me that this admission of foreign-built vessels by wholesale to American registers does in effect repeal the navigation acts of the country.

Mr. ELIOT. The Committee on Commerce have no idea of entering upon any such legislation as that. It has so happened, since the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty, that quite a number of vessels—almost all, without exception, small vessels, used upon the lakes and in the lake trade between this country and Canada—it has happened that quite a number of these vessels, being the property of Americans, and being purchased now by Americans, have been seeking the protection which American papers would give them. The Committee on Commerce have confined themselves almost exclusively to the consideration of those cases, having considered no others, except very exceptional cases. The gentleman, I think, need not apprehend that the Committee on Commerce will recommend any legislation tending to affect at all the navigation laws of this country. Certainly, so long as I may be a member of the committee, no such recommendation will be made without protest on my part.

Mr. PIKE. I want to make one more inquiry of the gentleman. I understand that during this session some thirty vessels have already in some way been admitted to American registers. I should like to inquire whether that is true.

Mr. ELIOT. I should think not. I think that if the gentleman would say fifteen or twenty he would be nearer the fact.

Mr. PIKE. The gentleman stated that all of these vessels are foreign-built except one. I ask him to designate that one.

Mr. ELIOT. It is the M. C. Rowe, a vessel from Gloucester, Massachusetts.

Mr. PIKE. I will inquire whether she was "whitewashed," as it is termed—whether she took a foreign register for the purpose of avoiding the risks incident to the war.

Mr. ELIOT. I wonder that the gentleman should make that inquiry. I should be the last person to recommend the granting of a register in such a case.

Mr. PIKE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to make a motion to amend by providing that these vessels shall be assessed at thirty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ELIOT. I cannot yield for any such purpose. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

On the passage of the bill, there were—ayes fifty-one, noes not counted.

Mr. LYNCH called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WHITEHALL, NEW YORK.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 611) to provide for making the town of Whitehall, New York, a port of delivery, with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that the town of Whitehall, in the State of New York, which by existing law is a port through which imported merchandise may be exported in bond and for drawback to the adjacent British North American Provinces, be constituted a port of delivery within the collection district of Champlain, and that a deputy collector as now authorized by law shall reside there, and shall receive the same compensation as is now paid to the deputy collector now stationed at that port.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HALE. This bill, as I understand, does not propose to divide the district of Champlain or create any new office.

Mr. ELIOT. It simply makes Whitehall a port of delivery. That is the whole of it.

Mr. HALE. It does not provide for any new office?

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir. The letter which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read will give the gentleman the information he seeks.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 14, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 6th instant, transmitting for my views "House bill 611, proposing to make Whitehall, in New York, a port of delivery;" and to reply that by the act of January 10, 1849, chapter fourteen, (9 Statutes, 341), and the proclamation of the President of March 2, 1849, (9 Statutes, 1002,) the privilege was extended to Whitehall to export to the British Provinces goods with the benefit of drawback; and it seems to me that its location and commercial importance make it a proper point for a port of delivery. As no additional expense is incurred by the measure there can be no reasonable objection to it.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. T. D. ELIOT, of the Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

The bill was passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 609) to constitute Omaha and Nebraska, in the Territory of Nebraska, ports of delivery.

The bill, which was read, provides that Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, shall be constituted ports of delivery, and shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States; and there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at each of said ports, who shall, in addition to his own duties, perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments of surveyor prescribed by the act of Congress approved on the 2d of March, 1831, providing for the payment of duties on imported goods at certain ports therein mentioned, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places." It is further provided that the towns of Omaha and Nebraska City shall be annexed to and made a part of the collection district of New Orleans, and all the facilities and privileges afforded by the act of Congress of March 2, 1831, shall be extended to the ports of Omaha and Nebraska City.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

First amendment:

Insert after the word "Nebraska," at the end of line three, the words "and St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota."

The amendment was agreed to.

Second amendment:

Insert after the word "city," in line seventeen, the words "and St. Paul."

The amendment was agreed to.

Third amendment:

Insert at the end of line twenty-two the words "and St. Paul."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The amendment to the title reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read, "A bill to constitute Omaha and Nebraska, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in Minnesota, ports of delivery."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill (H. R. No. 391) entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general in Idaho Territory."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 179) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory; and

An act (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 297) for the relief of the owners of the British vessel Magicienne;

An act (S. No. 374) for the relief of James P. Johnson;

An act (S. No. 353) for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the mission church of the Wyandotte Indians; and Joint resolution (S. No. 113) for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Cuyahoga river over and upon the Government piers at Cleveland, Ohio.

PORT OF ENTRY, PUGET SOUND.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to change the port of entry in Puget sound; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that from and after the 1st day of October, 1866, the port of Port Angeles, in the district of Puget Sound, in Washington Territory, shall be abolished as a port of entry, and that Port Townsend shall be established as the port of entry and delivery for that district.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PILOTS AND PILOT REGULATIONS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill relating to pilots and pilot regulations; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that no regulations or provisions shall be adopted by any State of the United States which shall make any discrimination in the rate of pilotage or half pilotage between vessels sailing between the ports of one State and vessels sailing between the ports of different States, or any discrimination against vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, or against national vessels of the United States; and all existing regulations or provisions making any such discrimination are annulled and abrogated.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Does that apply to river pilots? They are now under State laws.

Mr. EGGLESTON. It only applies to ocean pilots.

Mr. ELIOT. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to prevent States from passing pilot laws discriminating in favor of their own State and against other States, discriminating against vessels which come from ports in other States to ports in the given States, and vessels which come from one port to another in the same State, and discriminating against national vessels. That is the object of the bill. If it passes the effect will be to annul all regulations which tend to make such obnoxious discriminations. In the laws of some States there are provisions which discriminate against vessels which come from the Atlantic coast, and make discriminations in favor of vessels which come from the Pacific coast; which discriminate in favor of vessels sailing from port to port within their own State and against vessels which sail from ports in other States to ports in their own State. The object of the bill is to prevent that.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to any bill which proposes to prevent any unfair discrimination. Now, the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New York fix certain prices they allow pilots to charge for bringing vessels in and taking them out of port, and I do not think the Government of the United States should interfere with the regulations of the States. I ask whether this practically interferes with the laws of the States in reference to the charges of pilots.

Mr. ELIOT. Not at all, beyond the extent I have stated. The bill is a simple one and I ask it be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not wonder my colleague from the first district [Mr. RANDALL] wished to have this bill read and its provisions explained to the House, as it affects the commerce of the Delaware river, which runs alongside his district as well as my own. The bill seems to look to this. The State of Pennsylvania has its own pilot laws. They regulate the charges of pilots for piloting vessels up the rivers in our own State. This is recommended by the Committee on Commerce, and it is desirable the bill should be passed so that these pilots shall bring vessels into the Delaware river just as if they brought them from one port to another on the river. I think it is just, and my colleague need not be alarmed about its interfering with the laws of Pennsylvania in reference to pilots, unless in providing the charges shall be the same.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. If all the gentleman has stated in his explanation were in the bill it would be a different matter; but the object he says he seeks to accomplish is not borne out by the language of the bill. I do not think the terms used are as plain as they ought to be; and if the object be as stated, I do not see why gentlemen should object to adding a proviso to the effect that the Federal Government shall not attempt to control or interfere with State laws in reference to these pilots. Now, I am not aware that any abuse has been complained of in reference to these pilots. I do not know that any petition has been presented on the subject, and therefore I do not see why this bill has been brought here.

Mr. O'NEILL. I presume this originated from some of the western States.

Mr. ELIOT. It was introduced by the gentleman from California, [Mr. McRUER.]

Mr. O'NEILL. The object the gentleman who introduced this bill sought to accomplish I presume to be this: that pilots on the Atlantic coast shall not charge large fees for piloting vessels into our eastern ports coming from California, and that the pilots there shall be bound to take our vessels at the same charge as for piloting a vessel from one port to another in California. This law seeks to correct State laws in cases where discrimination is made against vessels coming from other States.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think I have at last got at the reason which induces this legislation. If the gentleman from California who introduced this bill desires a remedy for evils in California, it is not necessary that we should pass a general law reaching river and ocean pilots, who are not liable to the charges made against pilots in California. These constant changes in our laws in relation to commerce are not desirable. In Pennsylvania we have in a great measure conformed to the requirements in this particular, and there are no discriminations. We do not want any change, so far as I know, and I would like, if possible, to have the Delaware river excepted from the action of this bill. We do not desire any further legislation on this subject.

Mr. McRUER. I supposed this bill was so simple in its provisions and so just that it would not require any discussion or explanation. There are upon our statute-book only two laws of the United States affecting the question of piloting. One is the law of 1798, I think, which says that each State may establish her own pilot laws, not in conflict with any act of Congress. The only other act is that which allows vessels to enter the ports of New York or New Jersey as they like. Therefore there is nothing on the statute-book preventing any State from passing a pilot law discriminating against the vessels of any other State.

Now, sir, under the present act Pennsylvania can pass a law that will give the whole carrying trade to vessels owned in Pennsylvania. I seek to provide that no State shall discriminate against the vessels of any other State, but if they choose to exempt vessels of fifty or one hundred tons the exemption shall operate against vessels of all the States. Now, I know that States have discriminated in their laws against the vessels of other States. It was so on the Pacific, and I dare say it may be so or has been so on the Atlantic. This bill does not seek to regulate the rights of pilotage. It only provides that they shall be equal as regards vessels coming from any of the States.

Mr. ELIOT. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HARRIS. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAMES OF VESSELS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported adversely on Senate joint resolution No. 52, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat City of Richmond to City of Portland, and the schooner Lucinda Van Valkenburg to Camden; and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. PIKE. My colleague not being in, I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote just taken.

ISSUE OF AMERICAN REGISTERS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the same committee, reported adversely on Senate joint resolution No. 101, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue American registers to the barks Marget and Golden Fleece; and the same was laid on the table.

PAY OF INSPECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

On motion of Mr. ELIOT, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the pay of inspectors of customs; and the same was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

DISMAL SWAMP CANAL.

Mr. EGGLESTON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a joint resolution in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal Company; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read in full, as follows:

Whereas the United States are interested in the Dismal Swamp canal, connecting the waters of the Chesapeake with the sounds of North Carolina, by holding eight hundred shares of the stock of the Dismal Swamp Canal Company; and whereas the canal should be kept open as a navigable highway without further outlay on the part of the United States: Therefore,

It is resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to sell said stock, at auction or otherwise, in such manner as will best protect the interest of the United States in said canal, and will insure that the same will be kept open as a navigable highway without further expense to the Government: Provided, That the instruments and papers effecting such sale in the manner aforesaid shall be approved by the Attorney General before the delivery thereof.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. EGGLESTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with amendments, Senate bill No. 222, further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes.

The amendments reported by the committee were of a verbal character, except the following proposed as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of this act shall not be deemed to affect any action, or proceeding, or indictment pending at the time this act shall take effect, but the same shall be tried and disposed of and judgment or decree executed as if this act had not been passed.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LE BLOND. Has this Senate bill ever had any consideration in this House until today?

The SPEAKER. It was taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the committee has reported it back with amendments.

Mr. LE BLOND. It is a very large bill, and I think it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ELIOT. The effect would be to kill it. I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Treasury, sent to the committee within a week, expressing a strong desire that the legislation on this subject should be completed. It is a pretty important bill, and ought to be passed; it has already been delayed too long.

Mr. LE BLOND. For that reason I think it ought to have more consideration. If to have it considered will defeat it, then it ought to be defeated. That is the strongest reason in the world why it should have some consideration. I presume there are none outside of the committee who have had an opportunity under the press of business to give this bill the consideration which its merits demand. I certainly think that a bill of this magnitude, involving so many interests, ought not to pass without more consideration than has been given to it.

Mr. ELIOT. In reply to the remarks which have been made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] I would say that probably there has been no bill presented to the House during the session upon which more careful labor has been bestowed than upon the one now reported from the committee. The subject was carefully examined in the Committee on Commerce on the part of the House even before the bill had passed the other branch of Congress. It was considered then because it was known to be important that the bill should be put upon its passage or be brought before the House for its consideration at as early a moment as practicable.

After the bill had passed the Senate it was, upon my motion, I believe, directed by the House to be printed, and it has been upon the files of members ever since. Since that time it has been under examination in the Committee on Commerce, and I believe there is no provision in it about which I am not prepared to give information to the gentleman from Ohio or any other member upon the floor of the House who may desire it. It is a bill of some length, and unquestionably of a great deal of importance. It has been found very difficult on our frontier during the last two years to prevent the system of smuggling which has been going on and increasing day by day. The custom-houses are defrauded and the Government is cheated. The officers of the Government, wide awake as they may have been, have found themselves wholly unable to check the smuggling which has been continued there, so that it has been found imperatively necessary to have an examination of the laws on the statute-book concerning smuggling, and to embody in the law provisions which, as it is believed, will successfully enable the officers of the Government to administer the laws and collect the revenue.

Now, sir, if this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole, it is perfectly well understood that it would go to its grave. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] probably does not intend any such fate for it as that. If there is any provision in the bill that does not meet his approval, I am prepared either to defend it or to abandon it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I can say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] that I by no means wish to defeat this measure. But I know it is a very difficult matter to regulate these things upon the frontier in the West. Some things may be treated as smuggling and punished criminally by this law that should not be so treated and punished. I know it is a very easy matter to regulate these things with foreign Governments. But when it comes to our frontier there are a great many things there that might be treated criminally under this bill which I think should not be so treated, and which, if so treated, would cripple the interchange of commerce between the Canadas and the United States. And it is only with reference to that matter that I particularly desire the further consideration of this bill.

I cannot call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to any particular feature in the bill now that to my mind would be objectionable, from the fact that I have not yet given it that consideration that the subject really demands. I think but few members have done so, or have found themselves able to do so, in the present condition of the business before the House. But if the bill was allowed to be considered in Committee of the Whole, or in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and the bill was read section by section, the attention of members who represent different localities would be called to the different provisions of the bill, and there might be some important and proper amendments made. That is my only object in asking further time for the consideration of this bill.

TAX BILL.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask unanimous consent of the House that the Senate amendments to the internal revenue bill be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the morning hour cannot be interrupted by any other business.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Cannot unanimous consent be given merely for the reference?

The SPEAKER. It is an interruption of the morning hour to ask unanimous consent for anything.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING—AGAIN.

Mr. ELIOT. I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to offer a couple of amendments to this bill before the previous question is called.

Mr. ELIOT. It was understood in committee that my friend and colleague on the committee [Mr. HUMPHREY] should have an opportunity to offer two amendments to this bill, though I would say that the committee cannot recommend the adoption of those amendments. But, in pursuance of the arrangement made in the committee, I will yield to allow the gentleman to propose his amendments.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to amend section two of this bill, in line seven, by inserting after the word "district" the words "where he or they shall suspect there are goods, wares, or merchandise thereon, subject to duty, or which shall have been introduced into the United States in any manner contrary to law."

I also move to amend section four by striking out the words "and the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution, to be judged of by the court before which the prosecution is held."

Mr. ELIOT. I would ask the gentleman if those are all the amendments he desires to offer.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to make some explanation of those amendments.

Mr. ELIOT. Very well, I will withdraw the call for the previous question for the present.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire the attention of this House for a very few moments, and particularly of such members as are lawyers, to the fourth section of this bill. One of the amendments which I have offered proposes to strike out the words "and the burden of proof shall lie upon the claimant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution, to be judged of by the court before which the prosecution is had." This bill, as it now stands, proposes to incorporate into the criminal law, as it shall be administered under this bill, a principle entirely new, a principle which has never been adopted in the administration of criminal law for the punishment of crimes in this country in respect to any offense whatever. This question was discussed in the Senate at considerable length, and I think it is worthy the consideration and discussion of the House or of any other body where members are called upon to settle a question of criminal law as remarkable as this.

This section makes provision for the punishment of crime, and having declared that the doing of certain acts shall be regarded as a crime, it provides that "the burden of proof shall lie upon the defendant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution." This language is taken from the law as it has existed and still exists in relation to civil proceedings for the purpose of obtaining property which has been seized under the law and which the Government seeks to forfeit. In such a case, the claimant comes into court and says, "This property is mine;" he resorts to legal proceedings to determine the question of ownership. The law, as now settled, simply requires in a case of that kind that the Government shall give proof that there was probable cause for the seizure, and it then becomes incumbent upon the claimant to show the facts which go to establish his right. In the criminal law no such rule has ever prevailed. It is the pride and boast of this nation, as it has been for ages one of the glories of the country from which we derive the great principles of the common law, that, in the administration of criminal justice, the presumption in favor of the innocence of the defendant commences when he is put on trial and continues down to the time when a verdict of guilty is rendered. In all criminal trials the prosecution must establish beyond all reasonable doubt the guilt of the accused; otherwise a verdict of "not guilty" must be returned. This just and beneficent principle of the common law it is proposed in this bill to abandon. This Congress is asked to enact that, with reference to the cases covered by this bill, the showing of probable cause by the prosecution shall throw upon the defendant the burden of proof.

Now, I desire to ask the attention of the House to the definition of what constitutes "probable cause," so that members may see what is necessary to be proved for the purpose of putting a prisoner in such a position that he must be declared guilty by the court unless he be able to produce affirmative proof of his innocence. I read from Conkling's Treatise on the Practice of the United States Courts:

"It may be added that the term 'probable cause,' according to its usual acceptation, means less than evidence which would justify condemnation, and in all cases of seizure has a fixed and well-known meaning. It imports seizure made under circumstances which warrant suspicion. In this, its legal sense, the court must understand the term to have been used by Congress."

Now, the conviction of a man under some of the provisions of this bill will send him to prison for a term not less than one year, and in the discretion of the court may be ten years. Yet all that is necessary for his conviction is simply that the prosecution shall prove "circumstances which warrant suspicion" against the defendant, when, unless he produces on his part satisfactory affirmative proof of innocence, the court directs the jury to render a verdict of "guilty."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that among a civilized and enlightened people, in a country where the criminal law is administered according to those just and righteous principles which should always control its administration, no interest of commerce, no interest of the revenue can warrant the adoption of so odious a rule as that proposed to be enacted by this bill.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired; and the bill goes over until to-morrow morning.

ABOLITION OF USURY LAWS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade to the Congress of the United States, praying for the abolition of legal restrictions upon the commerce in money; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

A. M. JESS.

The first business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 145) entitled "An act granting land to A. M. Jess, of Josephine county, Oregon."

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

First amendment:

On page 2, in lines two and three, strike out the words "three hundred and twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and sixty."

Mr. THAYER. I move that the House concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

On page 2, in line ten, strike out the words "revert in" and insert the words "revert to."

Mr. THAYER. I move that the House concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. THAYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in;

and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 179) entitled "An act amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory."

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Add the following as a new section:
Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, approved January 14, 1865, entitled "An act in relation to the county of Skamania, be, and the same is hereby, disapproved."

The amendment was concurred in.

TAX BILL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I would make a motion to non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate, if I supposed that such a motion would meet the approbation of the House. But not anticipating that that motion would receive the approval of a majority of members I move that the amendments be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. PIKE. I hope that the gentleman will move to non-concur, and let the bill go at once to a committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope that will not be done. This is a very important bill.

Mr. PIKE. I know that it is an important bill; but that is a good way to dispose of the question.

Mr. STEVENS. There are a good many of these amendments that ought to be disposed of in the House. They involve some very important questions.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe I will persist in the motion I have made.

The motion was agreed to; and the amendments were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD, EASTERN DIVISION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 317, to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864.

The bill was read a first and second time.

The bill provides, in the first section, that the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, shall be authorized to designate the general route of their road, and to file a map thereof, as now required by law, at any time before the 1st day of December, 1866; and upon the filing of the map, showing the general route of the road, the lands along the entire line thereof, so far as the same may be designated, shall be reserved from sale by order of the Secretary of the Interior. The company, however, are to be entitled to only the same amount of the bonds of the United States to aid in the construction of their line of railroad and telegraph as they would have been entitled to if they had connected their line with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude, as now required by law. It is provided also that the company shall connect their line of railroad and telegraph with the Union Pacific railroad, but not at a point more than fifty miles westwardly from the meridian of Denver, in Colorado.

The second section provides that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized to locate, construct, and continue their road from Omaha, in Nebraska Territory, westward, according to the best and most practicable route, and without reference to the initial point on the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, as now provided by law, in a continuous completed line, until they shall meet and connect with the Central Pacific Railroad Company, of California; and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, of California, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, are authorized to locate, construct, and continue their road eastward, in a continuous completed line, until they shall meet and connect with the Union Pacific railroad. It is further provided that each of the companies shall have the right, when the nature of the work to be done, by reason of deep cuts and tunnels, shall, for the expeditious construction of the Pacific railroad require it, to work for an extent of not to exceed three hundred miles in advance of their continuous completed lines.

Mr. STEVENS. This is a very short bill; and I gave notice yesterday that I would call it up to-day and ask a vote upon it. It in fact does not propose the enactment of a new law; it is simply designed to correct a mistake in an act already passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment. I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I differ with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] in reference to the construction of this bill, although if the construction which he adopts be correct I have no serious objection to the measure. I desire that the gentleman shall agree either that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, with leave to report at any time, or that it be made a special order for some early day, or that he will consent to an amendment which I hold in my hand. I propose to add to the first section of the bill this additional proviso:

And provided further, That no mineral lands shall be included in the grant hereby made, but the same shall be reserved to the United States; that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect the right of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to receive the bonds provided for in the act of July 1, 1862, and of July 2, 1861, to aid in the construction of the Union Pacific road on its entire line from Omaha to the point of its connection with the road of the Central Pacific railroad, of California, and that bonds shall not be issued to the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, on a greater number of miles than are embraced in the line of said road between the Missouri river and the one hundredth meridian, as indicated in the map heretofore filed by said company in the Interior Department.

I will state what I regard to be the effect of this amendment. The grant provided in the first section of this bill is a new grant of lands, and it is to reserve from the operation of that grant any mineral lands which may lie within the limits of the grant. It will be observed, by the language of the first section of this bill, that it is provided the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, is authorized to designate the general route of their road, and to file a map thereof, as now required by law, at any time before the 1st day of December, 1866; and upon the filing of the said map, showing the general route of said road, the lands along the entire line thereof, so far as the same may be designated, shall be reserved from sale by order of the Secretary of the Interior.

My construction of that is that it makes a new grant of land on the new line. It grants the entire body of land without designating by odd or even sections. It includes all the mineral lands lying within the grant. I do not think that is what my friend designed, but I think that would be the effect of the language used. I am told by those friendly to this bill they do not intend to deprive the Union Pacific Railroad Company of the aids provided in 1862 and 1864 in the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad from the one hundredth meridian of west longitude to connect with the California road. If that be the case then they intend to do just what I seek by this amendment which is this: that the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall, notwithstanding the passage of this bill, have the aids provided in those sections for the completion of this road.

I have no objection to the change made in the California road. If that company want to build the road faster than the Union Pacific Railroad Company, I say let them build it, for the country wants this road completed at as early a day as possible. So if the California company can build their road to Salt Lake City before the Union Pacific Railroad Company can get their road there, I say let them build it. Its completion at the earliest possible day is what we want. But I do not want them deprived of the aids provided in 1862 and 1864.

I am told by the friends of this bill that its object is as is stated in my amendment. If that be so, I am not asking more than they concede is already provided for in this bill. But I differ with them in the construction that will be given to the language used, and therefore I ask that my amendment be adopted.

There is one other thing. I am told by the friends of the bill that they do not intend to provide for issuing more bonds to the Kansas company than is already provided for in the legislation of 1862 and 1864. I am willing that legislation should rest where we placed it at those periods. I am willing that company shall have the bonds we have already provided. I say, therefore, they shall receive bonds to the entire amount for the construction of the road from the Missouri river to the initial point on the one hundredth meridian of west longitude. If they wish to push it further south, let them do it. I think it would advance the interests of the country. They say, too, they do not ask any more bonds.

There is one view in connection with the existing law I wish to present to the House, because it is on that point difference of construction springs up between myself and those who advocate the bill in its present form, and that is this: under the law as it now stands the company which reaches the one hundredth degree first is authorized to construct the Union Pacific railroad. Now, if the Kansas company reach the one hundredth degree first, of course, under this provision of law, it will be authorized to construct the Union Pacific railroad. What effect follows that? Simply this, that by being authorized to construct the Union Pacific railroad all the subsidies provided in present legislation for the construction of a Pacific railroad from the line commencing at the Republican fork and running westward to connect with the California road will pass down to the Kansas road, and the line on the Platte valley route is deprived of all subsidies westward of the one hundredth degree. Now, I am told that it is not the design of the friends of this bill to accomplish that result, and I give them credit for stating precisely what they desire to effect. The only difference between us is as to the construction to be given to this bill in connection with the law as it now exists. Now, sir, I hope that inasmuch as this company which is building the road west from Omaha by the Platte valley route have completed already over one hundred and twenty miles of that road, and are laying their track at the rate of a mile and a half a day, they will not be stopped in the construction of that work.

If this bill means what it is contended it does mean, it cannot affect the Platte valley route or the Union Pacific Railroad Company. But if it means what I insist it does mean, and what I claim would be the construction put upon it if the question should be thrown into the courts of law, then it would destroy this enterprise entirely. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will accept one of the three propositions which I have made: either that the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, with leave to report at any time; or that it should be set down as the special order for consideration at an early day, so that we may have a discussion of the important questions involved in it; or that he will allow me to offer my amendment now. I do not want to interfere with the object which these gentlemen say they have in view; I have no such intention. I only desire to protect rights which now exist. I am willing that gentlemen shall have such changes in our legislation as they desire, provided they do not affect existing rights. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will give his assent to one of the propositions I have made.

Mr. STEVENS. Either of those propositions is death to this bill. I do not suppose he so intends, but that would be the effect. Suppose you send it to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad; from what I saw of the votes of that committee yesterday the bill would never get back.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman will allow me, I will change my suggestion, and move that it be referred to that committee with instructions to report it back within a certain number of days.

Mr. STEVENS. I will make a proposition, and I hope the gentleman will agree to it. I remember to have read of the Trojan horse, and I do not care to be caught by any such contrivance at this time. I propose that the gentleman shall draw up an explanatory act in the very language that he has suggested here, and that when we have passed this bill he shall forthwith introduce that act explaining what this bill means, and I for one will vote for it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman, then, why he objects to permitting this amendment to go upon the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. For a reason as plain as daylight, that if you put it on this bill it will have to go back to the Senate, and that would be its death.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should like to know how the gentleman knows that.

Mr. STEVENS. That is my information, and I shall act upon that information. There is not a proposition contained in this bill that differs from the original bill; not one.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania explain why the setting down of this bill for discussion on a given day would kill it?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not see how setting it down for discussion on a particular day would do any good.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the gentleman to say that it would be the death of the bill. Upon what ground? How could it injure the bill to have it fairly discussed, so that it could be understood on all sides?

Mr. STEVENS. I suppose that every man who desires to understand it knows what it is now. I am sure that my intelligent friend from Massachusetts understands it.

Mr. DAWES. I will say frankly that I am not in favor of the bill, but I feel that if it were set down for fair discussion on some day, perhaps some of us could so explain it to the House that the House would understand its merits. But the gentleman says that that would kill it.

Mr. STEVENS. No, it would not kill it, if the House understood it. But my friend is so good at mystifying that he might possibly so encloud it that some gentleman would vote against it, without knowing what it was. But let me go on and state that this bill is nothing more than a correction of an error in the original law to which it is a supplement.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman if under the present bill the Kansas Company or the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, should reach the one hundredth meridian first, and then should continue the construction of the Union Pacific railroad, what amount of lands it would be entitled to, and whether there is anything in this bill which would deprive that company of the right of doing that thing after it reached the one hundredth meridian further south than was contemplated in the original bill: whether, if it continued to construct the Pacific railroad westward from the one hundredth meridian, it would not be entitled to the $16,000 in bonds per mile.

Mr. STEVENS. I will state exactly what all the provisions are. There are three laws referred to in connection with this matter, each of which, I think, I have had some share in drafting, being chairman of the committee that reported them. The Union Pacific railroad starts from an initial point upon the one hundredth degree of longitude to be fixed by the President, a point which never has been fixed. The various branches—the Omaha road and the Kansas road—were originally to unite on that initial point with that railroad, and they were to unite within certain points on the banks of the Kansas and of the Platte.

Mr. HIGBY. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the first section of this bill contemplates anything more than an extension of the time within which the maps of those roads are to be filed.

Mr. STEVENS. That is everything it does.

Mr. DAVIS. Does not this bill change the route which has been laid down on the maps already filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will allow me to go on with the history of this matter he may, perhaps, understand it better. Originally these branch roads were to go to the initial point on the one hundredth meridian. The route of the Kansas branch, ending at Fort Riley, was to be fixed by the President. Two years were allowed them to file their maps in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of having the route designated. The President never fixed the route. Sometime after, in 1864, application was made to the House to allow any one of these branches that chose to do so to unite with the Union Pacific railroad anywhere they chose west of the one hundredth degree of longitude, provided they received no more bonds than if they went to the one hundredth degree. The act of 1864, which I hold in my hand, gave either of these branches a right to unite with the Union Pacific railroad and go westward as far as they pleased without reference to the initial point, provided they should have no more than $16,000 per mile up to the one hundredth degree. That was the law last year. It extended the time for filing the map. After this Kansas route had been extended as far as Fort Riley, and had already one hundred and sixteen or one hundred and twenty miles in running order, they came to the conclusion that the best route was upon Smoky Hill branch, which the engineers had long before believed to be the proper one. They filed maps for the purpose of taking up the Smoky Hill route, but the Attorney General decided that the maps were filed too late, not having been filed within the three years required. I do not think the opinion of the Attorney General was correct, because the initial point had never been fixed. The Kansas branch now comes and asks us to give them until the 1st of December next to file their maps and designate the route, the same as if it had been done within the first three years.

That is the whole provision of the bill. So far as the Kansas route is concerned it expressly says that they shall receive no more bonds than if they had gone by the other route. They only ask the right to file their maps between this and December next, and to take the same advantages under the law to which this is a supplement that those two acts gave them before. If any member will read those laws, he must have an anxious desire to see a difference if he can pervert it to mean anything but what I have stated.

Now, with regard to the main line, the California and Central Pacific railroad—I think that is the name—were authorized at first to build their road to the Nevada line, and then through Nevada to the eastern line of Nevada; and then there was a general provision allowing that company, if they could get there before the Union Pacific line got there, to go on eastward until they met the construction of the Union Pacific road. But if the Union Pacific Railroad Company failed to make it, then this company was to go on the whole way and make it themselves. That was the law as it stood in 1864. In that year, in the enactment to which I have referred, there was inserted a provision that the California company should go on one hundred and fifty miles this side of the Nevada line. How that provision got in that bill there is very great diversity of opinion. I do not want to make a statement; I do not want to give any recollection about it.

Mr. HIGBY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] yield to me for a moment to have read an extract bearing upon the point to which he refers?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the Clerk to read the extract I have marked in the paper which I send to his desk.

The Clerk read the following extract from the remarks of Senator CONNESS, as published in the Daily Globe of the 20th instant:

"Mr. President, I ask the attention of every Senator in the Senate to the statement I am now about to make, and I challenge contradiction of it. How did that provision of law obtain? How did it come to be the law? I will tell you, Senators. In 1864 the Senate passed a Pacific railroad bill; I had a copy of it before me this morning. The House of Representatives passed another. The Senate refused to pass the House bill, and the House refused to pass the Senate bill; and the matter was referred to a committee of conference upon the questions of disagreement. In neither of those bills did this arbitrary condition that I have named, confining one of these great companies to one hundred and fifty miles east of the California line, occur. It was not in either bill; there was not a word or a title of it in either. I was a member of the conference committee. We met in the room of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. The honorable Senator who is now Secretary of the Interior was chairman of that conference. I sat there pending that entire conference. Point by point the differences between the two Houses were arranged and agreed upon, and I undertake to say here that that arbitrary condition now in the law, and in the law when it was printed, never was considered in that conference. It was stolen in through the corruption of some parties and the clerk who eventually made up the report. The report of that conference committee was presented here on the last day of the session and compelled to be adopted without examination. What I state cannot be contradicted, and the Senate and Congress ought to justify itself by a close inquiry as to who dared to make laws for the Congress of the United States."

Mr. STEVENS. Although my recollection is precisely that of the Senator, of whose remarks the Clerk has just read an extract, yet I shall make no charges against anybody. But by some means that law was made to provide that the California road should stop one hundred and fifty miles this side of the Nevada line; to stop unconditionally, no matter whether the Union Pacific railroad reached that point or not. Now, one object of the bill under consideration is to correct that, and to allow the California Railroad Company to go on until it meets the road constructed by the Union Pacific Railroad Company; to allow each company to see which can build the road the fastest. If it shall be that the California company builds the fastest, then let them go on; if the Union Pacific Railroad Company builds the fastest, then let them go on. The object is to restore the law to what it was intended to be, and to what it should be now. Now, in regard to the other part of the bill, there can hardly be any objection to it—I mean the initial point agreed upon—and therefore I have nothing further to say upon it.

Mr. DAWES. It is my desire to have such a discussion of this bill that I can clearly understand what it is; if it does not mean any more than the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] claims for it, I do not know that I shall oppose its passage. But I cannot, with my present knowledge of the bill, come to the same conclusion that the gentleman does; and I find that others put the same construction upon the bill that I do. I only desire to understand fully what the bill is; that is the sole reason why I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to consent that it may be assigned for consideration to some day certain, when it may have a fair discussion.

And I ask that for the further reason that I find the bill on my file and the Senate bill now under consideration are two very different bills. How far that difference affects the actual meaning of the bill I cannot tell. I find upon my file a Senate bill No. 317, and until five minutes ago I supposed that was a true copy of the bill under consideration at this time. But I have just compared the printed copy on my file with the bill at the Clerk's desk, and I find that they are two very different bills. I understand that there is in circulation about the House, among some of the members, another print of this bill, which I am told is a private print and not a public print. I do not know how far members may be misled by confounding those two bills. I suppose the real state of the case to be this: the bill I hold in my hand is probably the printed copy of the bill as it was first reported to the Senate, the other is a printed copy of the bill as it finally passed the Senate.

Now, I do not know there is any real difference between the printing of the bill at the Clerk's desk and this printed copy which I hold in my hand; but it is a good reason why we should have a fair discussion of this bill on a day certain. If a fair discussion of this bill shall show there need be no apprehension in reference to the construction that will be given to it, then it will pass more certainly. If, however, a fair discussion shall indicate there is good ground for the doubt alleged, then the gentleman ought to join with us in making that certain which seems uncertain.

Mr. STEVENS. Let me appeal to the House. Is there anything unreasonable in the proposition I have offered that if this bill shall pass then the gentleman from Iowa shall introduce and pass his amendment in the shape of an explanatory joint resolution?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman makes that suggestion to me, I will say in reply, if, as the gentleman says, we should adopt this amendment it would defeat the bill in the Senate, why would not the amendment be also defeated in the Senate if sent to them in the shape of an explanatory joint resolution?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not say it would be defeated if sent to the Senate as an independent measure.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If this will be defeated with the same thing in it, I would like to know whether the Senate would not be likely to defeat an independent bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I will just go so far as to pledge that the friends of the bill shall vote for it. But, Mr. Speaker, I will proceed with what I was saying. I had shown how the one hundred and fifty got in. That is given up. Then there is nothing more than the initial point. In reference to this we have the evidence of the engineers and attorneys at Omaha.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to state here in connection with what the gentleman has said that I do not care what the Omaha men or their attorneys may have agreed to. I am not representing that company or any man in the company; I am representing the interests of the country connected with that road.

Mr. STEVENS. I trust I shall be allowed to proceed. I ask any gentleman whether, if the Kansas company got to the one hundredth meridian before the other, they could not go on. In this bill it does not say a word of it. But it is answered by a former bill which I have here, and the twelfth section of which I would be glad if some gentleman would read for me.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, then read the section, as follows:

"Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company, now known as the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, shall build the railroad from the mouth of Kansas river, by the way of Leavenworth; or, if that be not deemed the best route, then the said company shall, within two years, build a railroad from the city of Leavenworth to unite with the main stem at or near the city of Lawrence; but to aid in the construction of said branch the said company shall not be entitled to any bonds. And if the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall not be proceeding, in good faith, to build the said railroad through the Territories when the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company, now known as the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, shall have completed their road to the hundredth degree of longitude, then the last-named company may proceed to make said road westward until it meets and connects with the Central Pacific Railroad Company on the same line. And the said railroad from the mouth of Kansas river to the one hundredth meridian of longitude shall be made by the way of Lawrence and Topeka, or on the bank of the Kansas river opposite said towns: Provided, That no bonds shall be issued or land certified by the United States to any person or company for the construction of any part of the main trunk line of said railway west of the one hundredth meridian of longitude, and east of the Rocky mountains, until said road shall be completed from or near Omaha, on the Missouri river, to the said one hundredth meridian of longitude."

Mr. STEVENS. That law provided if the Union Pacific Railroad Company did not honestly prosecute their work, when the Kansas road reached their part, the Kansas company might go on and build it. Here, then, you see what was intended, and this bill gives no new privilege. This bill leaves it precisely where it was before. So I say, sir, there is not one single thing contained in this bill, so far as the Kansas route is concerned, that is not contained in the law and supplement, except giving time to file a map until December.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman will allow me another suggestion. Under that twelfth section of the act of 1864 the Kansas company would be, as I stated in my first remarks, authorized to build the Union Pacific railroad from the one hundredth meridian until they met the California road. Now, sir, that road was upon the route by way of the Republican fork. This bill provides they may select any other route, that is they need not go by the Republican fork; they need form no connection.

Mr. STEVENS. The law of 1864 allowed them to take any other route. If the gentleman will read it he will find it there.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is one of the grave questions that ought to be discussed.

Mr. STEVENS. No grave question except the question of sending it to the grave. That is the only question there is in it.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. I beg leave to say to the members of the House that from the very inception of the location of the initial point of the Omaha branch of this railroad, I have been specially and personally interested in this Pacific railroad. I visited Washington and saw the President in relation to the establishment of this initial point of the Omaha branch; and from that time to this there is no part of it that has not fallen under my observation or that has not been to me a matter of special interest. During the last fall I traveled entirely across the plains on the Omaha route and returned by the Smoky Hill route, and I have some knowledge of the topography of all that region east of the Rocky mountains.

Now, I ask the attention of the House to the provisions of this bill. As regards the second section of the bill there seems to be no question at all. It has been conceded in the debate in the Senate, which I have examined, that through somebody's impropriety there was a forcible violation of the intent of the former law of Congress touching the construction of this Union Pacific railroad; that while Congress intended to encourage the rapid construction of the Pacific railroad by providing that it should be built both from the east and from the west as rapidly as the two companies could do it, by some means or other it was provided in the report of the committee of conference that the western portion should not be permitted to proceed more than one hundred and fifty miles from the eastern boundary of California. It seems to be conceded that that was wrong and a violation of the intent of Congress, and that it needs to be corrected. And while nobody disputed that in the Senate, I have yet to hear any person announce on this floor his opposition to it. So much for the second section. It is admitted that that section should be adopted by the House.

And now, in regard to the first section. It simply provides "that the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, is hereby authorized to designate the general route of their said road, and to file a map thereof, as now required by law," (not as this law provides, but "as now required by law.") "at any time before the 1st day of December, 1866." It simply fixes the time when they may comply with the existing law, and nothing more thus far. It then provides that "upon the filing of the said map, showing the general route of said road, the lands along the entire line thereof, so far as the same may be designated, shall be reserved from sale by order of the Secretary of the Interior." What lands? The lands granted by the terms of the original act. This act does not create the grant. It makes no grant to the railroad company. It is the lands to which they are entitled under the terms of the original grant. It only provides that these are to be reserved from sale; not to be granted to the company. It makes no grant of land at all, but simply provides for their reservation from sale as soon as the route shall be located.

Mr. ALLISON. Will my colleague allow me to ask a question? I understand him to say that the first section of this bill does not make an additional grant of land. He may be correct in that. But I wish to ask him whether or not under the provisions of this section this eastern division of the Pacific railroad may not make a connection with the Union Pacific railroad at a point fifty miles beyond Denver city.

Mr. KASSON. I shall come to that as soon as I reach it in the section.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, it also provides that they shall have lands within twenty miles on each side of this road, including mineral lands. If that be true, will they not be entitled to lands until they unite with the Pacific railroad, fifty miles beyond Denver?

Mr. KASSON. I will answer that as I go on, if the gentleman will allow me, and I will not omit a point.

This simply provides, as I stated before, that the lands are to be reserved from sale. There is not one word of grant from beginning to end of the bill. I have taken the pains to compare the printed copy which I hold in my hand with the written copy on the Clerk's desk, and it is word for word identical. Now, that being the fact, that it simply reserves the lands from sale along this line when the map shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, it takes no right from the United States reserved under the original grant. West of the point of divergence, from the route up the Republican, I am sorry to say there are mighty few lands that will be occupied for years to come by tillers of the soil. That, to my mind, is certain, from personal knowledge of the ground. The demand for land entries west of that point will be very limited.

Then comes the proviso to the first section, as follows:

Provided, That said company shall be entitled to only the same amount of the bonds of the United States to aid in the construction of their line of railroad and telegraph as they would have been entitled to if they had connected their said line with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude, as now required by law.

Not one dollar of United States bonds additional is granted to them.

And provided further, That said company shall connect their line of railroad and telegraph with the Union Pacific railroad, but not at a point more than fifty miles westwardly from the meridian of Denver, in Colorado.

I have now read the entire first section. The bill also has reference to the fact, as now required by law, of a connection with the Union Pacific railroad, but it may be at a point west of Denver city not exceeding fifty miles, if they can find a route that will enable them to do it.

Now, sir, as to the propriety of giving them this right. I traveled from the top of the snowy range of the Rocky mountains by Denver city, up Cherry creek, down the Big Sandy, and across by the "Cheyenne wells" to the head of the valley of the Smoky Hill river, thence down the Smoky Hill by Forts Ellsworth and Riley; and I have only to say that if for this same grant, without one additional dollar of United States bonds, and with nothing additional but the grant of land, there is any man or set of men who are willing to take that land and build that road in preference to going up the Republican and crossing over the divide between the Republican and Platte to the Omaha route, near the one hundredth parallel, I say it is a duty we owe to the people of this country to allow it to be done.

It is not a question of cost to the United States. Everybody who has studied the topography of that country knows that you cannot make farms except along the infrequent margins of the rivers for the whole distance between the eastern border of the plains and the foot of the Rocky mountains. Why, sir, even between Denver and the base of the Rocky mountains, some fifteen miles, you have no farms except by the aid of irrigation, where the water flows through the ditches of the engineer. It is only thus that they are enabled to supply the requisite moisture for their wheat and corn.

Now, sir, I will in few words finish what I have to say, and leave the bill to the care of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.]

Mr. DAWES. I wish to inquire of the gentleman, if this bill passes, whether this company may not file a new map anywhere without any limitation.

Mr. KASSON. They may file a new map in accordance with the provisions of the law passed during the last Congress, and with this limitation, that they must connect with the Union Pacific railroad at a point not more than fifty miles westward of Denver city.

Mr. DAWES. Is there anything requiring a connection within fifty miles of Denver city?

Mr. KASSON. There is a requirement of a positive connection with that road not more than fifty miles westward of Denver city.

Mr. DAWES. My printed copy of the bill is different from yours.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman's printed copy is not authentic, as he will find if he will take the one I have, and which I will pass over to him for examination, as I am through with it. I hope he will excuse me from further interruption, because I am occupying the floor by the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.]

Now, let me add, in conclusion, that it is of the utmost importance to the interests of the country that there should be some competition in the transportation of freight across the plains to the Rocky mountains. We paid last year nearly ten million dollars for our military supplies and freight in connection with operations against the Indians, the freight being the principal item. And if we do not allow competition in transportation, the benefit of this great Pacific railroad to the people of the United States will be diminished at least one half. And that explains why I am in favor of a decent liberality toward these two lines, in order to increase our facilities for reaching the miners North and South and supplying their wants. We want no single great railroad monopoly of freight and passenger traffic. Let the vast mineral regions have the great benefit of competition in supplying all their demands.

Mr. STEVENS resumed the floor.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STEVENS. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining of his hour.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot yield; I prefer to go on. These offers of gentlemen around me for a little longer time seem to be fair enough; and they are especially commended to my magnanimity when I consider the action of these gentlemen yesterday. From some accident, in consequence of mere debility and indisposition on my part, we had lost what was our right, and they had gained an unfair advantage. When we appealed to them to let this bill take its present position, so that it might be considered by the House, these very gentlemen, including the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] refused to consent to it, a thing I never before saw perpetrated upon any member of this House. And now those gentlemen ask us to be magnanimous, and allow them to have some advantage which they have not and to which they are not entitled.

Sir, as I have already said, and as has been stated by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] this bill asks for nothing but what is fair and just; and I honestly believe all these propositions for delay are intended merely to defeat the bill. I believe these efforts are not intended to secure the amendment and improvement of the bill, but to secure its final defeat; and I therefore feel no difficulty in taking the course I do. Sir, when a measure is before this House affecting the interests of the whole country, affecting the great thoroughfares through Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and all those States, and I hear gentlemen say that it does not go to Chicago—in fact saying, "If it does not go to Chicago I am opposed to it; but if it does go there I am for it;" when I hear that style of argument I cannot understand what magnanimity those gentlemen can expect. It is a mere question of interest, a mere gouging, like boys playing at marbles, in order to see which one shall get the advantage of the other, instead of the legislation of the Congress of the United States for a great nation. When I see such sentiments as these acted upon, and gentlemen, honorable gentlemen, attempting to hold an advantage which was got by accident, as it was in this case, I cannot understand how it is that those offers have any other object than that which they attempted on yesterday, in my judgment, to carry out so unfairly. I therefore call the previous question on the bill.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman must excuse me.

Mr. PRICE. I want to state to this House that this bill has never been printed.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not yield.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 71, noes 32.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 98, nays 36, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Conkling, Cullom, Dawson, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eekley, Eggleston, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McKee, McKuer, Meaurio, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Seofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upton, Bart Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, and Winfield—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Raymond, Rogers, Schenck, Sloan, Starr, Strouse, Taber, Van Aernam, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Wright—48.

So the bill was passed.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. MILLER said: On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. INGERSOLL. If he were here he would vote for the bill, while I should vote against it.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERICAL FORCE OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire—

The SPEAKER. The House some time ago resolved to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, and is now engaged in the execution of that order.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to report a bill from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. KASSON. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, Senate bill No. 282, entitled "An act to reorganize the clerical force of the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes."

Mr. SPALDING. I trust that the gentleman will not ask the House to take action on that bill at present. It will occupy considerable time; and I think we ought to dispose of the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. KASSON. I do not propose that the House shall take action on the bill at the present time. I move that the bill be recommitted, and that the substitute reported by the committee be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, AND SANTA FE RAILROAD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 320, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads and telegraphs in said State,' approved March 3, 1863."

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire that this bill shall be considered at the present time.

The bill, which was read at length, provides that whenever it shall be deemed impracticable or inexpedient to construct any portion of the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe railroad in the manner required by the act of March 3, 1863, and whenever the Governor of the State of Kansas shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that upon such portion, in lieu thereof, the railroad company have constructed a road suitable for the running of a steam traction engine with its train of cars over the same, the grant of lands made in the act of March 3, 1863, shall be confirmed to the State for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the road, and in all other respects as in that act provided. The amount of lands granted in the act, when applied to the construction of such steam traction road, is to be three alternate sections of land per mile, designated by odd numbers, on each side of the road; and patents are to issue upon the completion of every twenty miles of road upon the certificate of the Governor.

The second section authorizes and empowers the company to construct the roadway from the boundary line of the State of Kansas, through the Territories of the United States, on the most eligible route to Santa Fe, in the Territory of New Mexico, and to such Government forts in that Territory as the President of the United States may approve. There is granted to the company the right of way through the public domain to the extent of two hundred feet on each side of the road. And for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the roadway and its equipment, and to secure the safe and speedy transmission of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and supplies over the road, the same amount of land, not mineral, (but not excluding iron or coal,) is granted to the company as is provided in the first section of the act, and upon the same terms and conditions, but upon the certificate of a commissioner, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, that the conditions have been complied with.

It is provided in the third section that the grants are made only upon condition that the road shall be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, with all necessary culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, stations, and watering places, and other appurtenances, including engines and cars sufficient to move not less than fifty tons, or two hundred passengers, in one train, at a rate of six miles an hour.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and if it be in order, I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TROWBRIDGE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to explain briefly the provisions of this bill and the reasons in favor of its passage.

In 1863 a grant of land was made to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Atchison, in that State, to Santa Fe, in the Territory of New Mexico. That was a grant of ten sections to the mile. It has been discovered by a company who have taken those lands from the State of Kansas that on that route there are four or five hundred miles of treeless desert over which it has been decided it is altogether impracticable to build a railroad. The company have proposed to put upon that route, over that portion where a railroad cannot be constructed, what is called a steam traction engine; that is, an engine capable of running upon an ordinary dirt road or a macadamized road without the necessity for rails.

This bill proposes to reduce the grant of land from ten sections per mile to six sections per mile. But the company are not to receive this grant till they have built and equipped the road in such a manner that a train of fifty tons or two hundred passengers can pass over it at the rate of six miles an hour. I may remark, in passing, that the bridges for this road will cost as much as the ordinary railroad bridges, for this traction engine is much heavier than an ordinary locomotive engine. This grant of land is no greater than grants which Congress has heretofore on several occasions made for the construction of ordinary wagon roads. The land proposed to be granted is the same which has heretofore been granted to this company for the construction of a railroad; but the amount of the grant is now reduced.

It is claimed by competent authorities that these steam traction engines are no longer an experiment; that they have actually been proved to be a success. I have here some testimony on the subject which I will read. A London scientific journal, devoted to engineering, remarks in a recent number:

"It should be even more widely known than perhaps it is, that traction engines are now working in all parts of the kingdom, and that when sent from the makers to the purchasers, at distances of even one hundred to five hundred miles, they always go on their own steam. They work both up and down inclines as steep as one in six, and often go over ground where horses would sink. They are employed in the Government dock-yards, and by the large engineers for hauling weights up to forty tons; and we last week gave an account of the removal of a great block of Cornish granite, intended for the base of the Wellington memorial at Stratfieldsaye, a total load of forty tons, hauled for some miles by a traction engine." * * * * * "We cannot but think that, with so many of these engines now at work, the time is not distant when some of the present restrictions upon the use of steam on common roads will be removed."

A later number of the same journal, describing the operation of one of the traction engines, remarks:

"We have had these engines in all sorts of difficulties—hills such as traction engines were never before taken at, bad roads, over which they have had to travel through soft, shifting soil, and to cross running streams; we have had them sunk up to their tenders in soft places, but have never had them yet stuck fast, nor in any difficulty out of which they could not extricate themselves without aid and without breakage."

Experiments with engines of this sort have been made in this country. I have here the testimony of scientific men who witnessed such an experiment in Brooklyn. They declare their entire confidence in the practicability of the traction engines as a means of transportation. From among the numerous letters before me, I will detain the House by reading only the following:

HEALTH OFFICERS' DEPARTMENT,
QUARANTINE, STATEN ISLAND, February 16, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: It affords me great pleasure to state that on the 4th of December, 1863, I attended an exhibition of your "steam horse" on De Kalb avenue, in the city of Brooklyn, and was exceedingly gratified with its performance. I must confess that I was very skeptical as to the practicability of your invention until I witnessed this exhibition.

All doubts, however, have vanished, and I feel assured that you have attained what, if prosecuted to completion, is calculated to be of immense value to the world, and of untold wealth to yourself and friends who have aided you in carrying out your enterprise. I have entire confidence in your ultimate success, and I assure you that if I had the means at my command very little time would be lost in completing your machine and setting it to work, either in plowing or in traveling over our western plains.

As it may be of some assistance to you in inducing others, who have the means, to assist you in perfecting your machine, and carrying out your contemplated enterprise, I will state what I saw the machine do.

I saw it travel over an ordinary road in the suburbs of the city of Brooklyn, with portions of the running gear in an incomplete condition, with a very inferior quality of fuel, and with an imperfect boiler and blower, at the rate of certainly ten miles an hour. I then saw you travel over a soft meadow, when the frost was just leaving the ground, at the same rate of speed, and witnessed with perfect surprise the entire ease with which you controlled the movements of the machine among the crowd, about as readily as a driver would an ordinary team of horses. I then saw you hitch on two blocks of granite, weighing not less than eight or ten tons, and travel off with entire ease over the soft ground, in which the wheels sank about six or eight inches, at about the speed of eight or nine miles per hour, and at the same time directing your course with a precision which perfectly astonished all who witnessed its performance, and not a doubt was entertained of your entire success in your enterprise by the many scientific gentlemen who were on the spot at the time.

ALEXANDER N. GUNN, M.D.,
Health Officer, New York.

JESSE FRYE, Esq.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if there is any reason to suppose that the vast desert region to which I have referred can be traversed by steam, we shall do well to make this grant of land and allow the experiment to be made. If the company should fail they will obtain no part of the land, and if they should succeed they will receive no greater grant than those which have heretofore been made to aid in the construction of ordinary wagon roads in various parts of the country.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to ask the gentleman what reason there is why this bill should not take the ordinary course. Why should it not be referred for investigation to the appropriate standing committee of this House?

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I did not suppose there would be any opposition after I stated the object of the bill. As it is late in the session I requested the Committee on Public Lands, to whom it would naturally go, to examine it, and I understand they make no opposition to it. But the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands will state how this is.

Mr. JULIAN. I wish to state to the House that I have not waived any objection or any right to object to the passage of this bill without reference to the committee in the ordinary way. This traction engine is something very novel, and it seems to me it would be exceedingly shipshod legislation to pass the bill without sending it to the committee, without that consideration in the Committee on Public Lands provided for by the rules of the House. If the previous question be not seconded I shall move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. THAYER. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not under the circumstances press the passage of the bill at this time.

Mr. JULIAN. I will state that the Committee on Public Lands will be called on Thursday next.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. The chairman of the committee certainly said if some members of the committee would examine this thoroughly he would make no objection to it. I am afraid the reference of the bill to the committee at this late period of the session will send it to "the tomb of the Capulets."

Mr. THAYER. I hope the House will refuse to transact business in this manner; that it will refuse to second the call for the previous question, and then refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JULIAN. I did agree, if the members of the committee examined the bill and made no objection to it, I myself would not make any; but since then two or three members of the committee have come to me and asked that it should be referred.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I demand the previous question in order to test the sense of the House.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I shall be forced, if the gentleman will not allow a reference to the appropriate committee, to move that the bill be laid upon the table.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. As it seems to be the wish of the House, I will agree to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw my motion to lay on the table, and move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ABBY GREEN.

The SPEAKER next laid before the House Senate joint resolution No. 112, for the relief of Mrs. Abby Green; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee of Claims.

POST-ROAD BILL.

The next bill on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 369, to establish certain post roads; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

STATE DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 110, to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask that the joint resolution be put upon its passage. It authorizes the Secretary of State to hire a suitable building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State, and that such sum of money, not exceeding $50,000, as may be necessary toward defraying the expense of such hiring, the transfer of the public archives, and the fitting up of the building or buildings, be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. It is necessary that it should pass at once, as the Treasury Department is about to be extended over the ground where the State Department now stands.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I insist that the joint resolution should first be considered by a committee.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. It has been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and they recommend its passage. I have the letter of the Secretary of State, together with his estimates for this temporary occupation. I trust it will go through at once, so that the work on the Treasury Department may not longer be suspended.

Mr. RADFORD. Is there not room in the new Treasury building for the State Department? I remember to have heard something of this when I was a member of the committee at the last session. From the information I then received I was led to believe there was room in the Treasury Department or in Win-der's Building.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I will state for the benefit of my friends on the other side of the House that the committee investigated this subject at this session and came to the conclusion this appropriation was necessary, as no room could be provided for the State Department in any of the public buildings. I will state that the two Committees of the House and Senate on Public Buildings and Grounds have examined this question thoroughly, have visited the Treasury Department and the State Department, and have come to the conclusion unanimously that there is no other way but to provide a temporary building for the occupancy of the Department of State.

Mr. RADFORD. I would ask the gentleman if there are not rooms already fitted up in the Patent Office building sufficient to accommodate the Secretary of State?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I think not.

Mr. RADFORD. I think there were last year, and I do not know that the building has grown any smaller since then. I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out $50,000, and inserting in lieu thereof $25,000.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask that a letter from the Secretary of State on this subject be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, June 14, 1866.

SIR: In reply to the inquiry contained in your note of yesterday, I have the honor to state that it will be difficult to estimate, with any exactness, what amount will be necessary to defray the expenses of the contemplated removal of this Department to temporary buildings. Taking into consideration the rent, fitting up generally, removing of archives, &c., I should think the sum of $50,000 would not be an overestimate for the first year.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

HON. LYMAN TRUMBULL, United States Senate.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I did not yield for the amendment of my friend from New York, and I now demand the previous question.

Mr. RADFORD. Then I must move that the joint resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. THAYER. I hope the gentleman from Maine will at least give us an opportunity to vote on the amendment. I do not see why the House should not have that opportunity.

Mr. RADFORD. All I ask is a vote on my amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. All I can say is, that this is the estimate of the Secretary of State, and that the adoption of the amendment would defeat the entire measure. If my friend from Pennsylvania will go to the State Department and see the vast accumulation of papers there, including all our treaties with foreign nations, he will see that they ought to be removed to a fire-proof building, or one that can be made fire-proof. In my judgment the estimate of the Secretary is within bounds, and if that amount is not required it will not be used.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has moved to lay the joint resolution on the table, and that motion is not debatable.

Mr. RADFORD. I withdraw my motion temporarily, and I hope the gentleman from Maine will allow this subject to be debated fully.

Mr. THAYER. We all know that if we appropriate $50,000 that money will be spent; whereas it will be the easiest thing in the world, if the $25,000 should fall short, to put the balance in the deficiency bill of next session. I do not believe that it will require $50,000 to provide temporary accommodations for one year. But if our views shall turn out to be erroneous, it will be easy to make up the deficiency hereafter. I am opposed to voting such large sums of money without any better foundation than the loose estimate which has been read to the House. I hope the House will insist on economy in this matter.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I will leave the matter to the House, although my own idea is that the Secretary of State having examined the premises which he is to occupy, and having made this estimate, his judgment is better than ours on this question. But I will yield to the gentleman from New York to make his motion.

Mr. RADFORD. I renew my amendment, and wish only to say that I assert, without fear of contradiction, that rooms equal to those now occupied by the Secretary of State can be hired in the city of Washington for $5,000 a year.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I demand the previous question on the joint resolution and the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. RADFORD's amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title: when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho, and of Daniel Wellington and J. C. Dorsey for extra services in carrying the mails.

LAND GRANT TO KANSAS.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 285, granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I hope the bill will be passed over informally. There is a similar bill at this time under consideration before the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JULIAN. I prefer that the bill should be referred to the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will state to the House that a bill of the same character as this is now before the Committee on Public Lands, and the friends of the measure prefer that this bill should remain upon the Speaker's table. I can see no necessity for its reference.

Mr. JULIAN. There is so much hasty legislation here that I am not willing to forego the security of a reference.

The question was put upon Mr. SPALDING's motion; and there were—ayes 52, noes 17; no quorum voting.

And then, on motion of Mr. STEVENS, (at four o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BANKS: The memorial of Rev. D. Eglington Barr, chaplain of the United States colored volunteers, for compensation for property destroyed by engineers in constructing defenses at Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

By Mr. BROOMALL: The petition of many citizens of Chester county, Pennsylvania, asking for such a change in the tariff and tax laws as will enable American labor to compete successfully with foreign.

By Mr. BUNDY: The petition of John Brown, Samuel Spence, and 72 others, operatives in Gaylord & Co.'s rolling-mill at Portsmouth, Ohio, for an increase of the tariff to protect them against the effects of pauper labor of Europe.

By Mr. GRIDER: The petition of Dory Nell, of Metcalfe county, Kentucky, for indemnity and relief. Also, the petition of the trustees of Southern College, of Kentucky, at Bowling Green, for indemnity and relief.

Also, the petition of Elias Dunbar, of Russell county, Kentucky, for indemnity and relief.

By Mr. JULIAN: The memorial of Harly Ingersoll, and others, citizens of Michigan, praying the enactment of national insurance laws.

By Mr. O'NEILL: A petition, numerously signed by merchants, business men, and officers of the customs of the city of Philadelphia, with the plan of the alterations, asking that the "Pennsylvania Bank Building" belonging to the Government may be altered for the accommodation of the appraiser's department; and also asking for an appropriation for that purpose.

By Mr. TAYLOR: The petition of J. S. Underhill, of the city of New York, asking for relief for extra expenses incurred in working nights and Sundays upon the iron-clad steamer Keokuk, to hasten the construction of that vessel.

By Mr. VAN HORN, of New York: The petition of citizens of New York city, asking equal laws in relation to inter-State insurance.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 27, 1866.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM T. JOHNSON, of Washington, D. C.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. YATES as the committee of conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th of June, 1867.

NORTHERN KANSAS RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. POMEROY, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. RIDDLE as the committee of conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 145) for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of the United States, farmers and mechanics and laborers in American manufacturing establishments, praying Congress to watch over and promote the interests of the people by amending the tariff so as to protect American labor to the extent of the difference of the cost of capital and labor here and abroad, with the addition of the taxes paid by American industrial products, from which the foreign are free; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer the petition of the St. Domingo Mining and Commercial Company, having its office and place of business at New York. The petition is signed by S. De Witt Bloodgood, president, F. W. Newbold, secretary, and H. W. Bonsall, vice president, and is attested by the seal of the company. In this petition they ask that Congress may take steps in order to secure the establishment of a United States naval station at some convenient place in the West Indies, for the use and advantage of our squadrons cruising in the adjacent seas, and they propose that for that purpose land may be obtained in the bay of Mancinilla or elsewhere in the northern part of the island of St. Domingo. They represent that this place is specially adapted for a naval station. I offer this petition and ask for its reference, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Samuel H. Madden, and other citizens of Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, praying that the tariff law may be so amended as to afford better protection to American labor; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 380) to incorporate the Washington County Horse Railroad Company, in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 280) to repeal an act entitled "An act to retrocede the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, to the State of Virginia, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 447) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell a portion of the Fort Leavenworth military reservation to the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, for a public park have instructed me to report the bill back to the Senate with a recommendation that it do not pass. The committee are of opinion that it would not be for the interest of the military service that any further portion of that military reservation should be sold or disposed of by the Government.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 151) authorizing the purchase of Dugan's work on Infantry Tactics, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Margaret M. Ransom, of Norwich, Vermont, praying for an increase of her pension, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 705) for the relief of George W. Bush, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 701) granting a pension to Mrs. Imogene Buckingham, of Edgar county, Illinois, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mercie E. Scattergood;

A bill (H. R. No. 699) for the relief of James L. Perham;

A bill (H. R. No. 700) for the benefit of John W. Jones;

A bill (H. R. No. 702) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte E. Reed;

A bill (H. R. No. 703) for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Lynch; and

A bill (H. R. No. 704) for the relief of Joel Farley.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 692) increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a memorial of the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and common council of Georgetown, praying that the aqueduct may be allowed to remain as a bridge, and that a suitable draw may be constructed in it so as to admit of the free passage of vessels, reported a bill (S. No. 395) relating to the aqueduct bridge of the Alexandria Canal Company over the Potomac river at Georgetown, in the District of Columbia; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 65) to amend an act to extend the charter of the Washington and Alexandria railroad, passed March 3, 1863, reported it with an amendment.

W. H. HAMRICK.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 158) providing for the settlement of accounts of W. H. Hamrick, to report it back to the Senate without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass; and if there be no objection I should be glad to have it put upon its passage now. It is a very small matter and will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to settle the accounts of the late Wyatt H. Hamrick, lieutenant and quartermaster of the thirty-ninth Ohio volunteers, upon equitable terms, and upon the best evidence available.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply state that this officer had property put in his hands, and within a few hours afterward was killed in battle. This is a resolution to settle his accounts. The Government owes him money, instead of he owing it to the Government.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOODWARD AND CHORPENNING.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up for consideration House joint resolution No. 123, which was reported yesterday by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 123) for the relief of Elizabeth Woodward and George Chorpenning, of Pennsylvania, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The resolution provides for the payment of $32,325, in equal moieties, to Elizabeth Woodward, widow of Absalom Woodward, and George Chorpenning, for destruction of property by Indians between Salt Lake and California prior to the 1st of July, 1852; the moiety paid to Elizabeth Woodward to be for the use of herself and her four children. It also provides for the payment of $30,670 to George Chorpenning for property destroyed by Indians between Salt Lake and California prior to the 1st of April, 1856; and the amount thus paid is to be deducted from any annuities now due or that may hereafter become due to the Indians inhabiting that territory.

The Committee on Indian Affairs reported the bill with two amendments. The first amendment was in section one, line three, to strike out "$32,325" and to insert "$28,175."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section two, line two, to strike out "$30,670" and to insert "$26,370."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire whether this joint resolution is accompanied by a report. If so, I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there is no written report accompanying the joint resolution.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to learn whether anybody knows anything about what the facts are. It seems to me a resolution of this kind ought to be accompanied by a report. There ought to be something to go upon the record explaining it.

Mr. CONNESS. There is a House report.

Mr. GRIMES. Then I ask that the House report be read.

Mr. CONNESS. It is very long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is no report from the House on the files of the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator having the resolution in charge whether it has been customary for the Government to pay for losses of property caused by depredations of the Indians except in cases where the Government is indemnified by the Indian annuities going to the Indians that did the wrong.

Mr. MORRILL. This resolution provides for that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am told that this resolution provides for that deduction. I did not know that.

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir, it does. This resolution comes from the House of Representatives. After mature deliberation on the evidence that was before them, the House committee reported in favor of the payment of $63,000. I do not pretend to be fully informed upon it, and only brought it up by the consent of the gentleman having it in charge—

Mr. CLARK. Who had it in charge?

Mr. WADE. The Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW,] who wished that I would move to take it up. It was before the committee, I believe, yesterday, and after full deliberation they made their report upon it, and amended the House bill by decreasing the amount very much. Some of the gentlemen of that committee are present, and I suppose they can answer any questions in regard to it. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] can explain it much better than I can. I know that the committee have deliberated upon the evidence in the case very fully; and the only question, as I understand, that was pending before that committee was the question as to the amount of damages that should be allowed for certain property that was destroyed by the Indians at the time mentioned in the resolution. The right to such damages, I believe, was conceded by all, both in the House and in the Senate; but our committee cut down the damages considerably, some eight or nine thousand dollars, from the amount allowed by the House. Of course it turned on a mere estimate of the damages, derived from various witnesses, as to the value of the property destroyed. I believe that is the only question there is pending, and I suppose it is a question about which men would form different judgments. Different men would form different estimates as to the value of the property destroyed. The committee I know to be an exceedingly vigilant one, and one that would be very apt to take care of the interests of the Government in a question of this kind. The amount is pretty large, and the matter received the deliberate judgment of the committee, as I know they had it under consideration for some time. I have read the testimony in regard to the damages, and I think that there is in it room for any tribunal to vary somewhat. If I was to judge myself, however, I should suppose that in estimating the damages the House had made nearer an average of the testimony than the Senate committee, who cut it down; but that is not for me to say. It was before the committee for examination, and their judgment, of course, is infinitely better than mine on such a subject. I think there is no reason to object to the resolution unless gentlemen want to overhaul all the evidence.

Mr. GRIMES. There is no question but that there has been, as the Senator from Ohio says, very mature deliberation in this case. Congress has been deliberating on it, to my knowledge, seven years, and I believe it had been here some years before, for it was an old claim when I took my seat in the Senate seven or eight years ago. It may be full of merit; I do not pretend to say how that is; but the Senator does not state to us the facts in regard to it upon which we are called on to base our amendment. What I want is a legitimate, proper report from a committee, so that we can read it and see what we are doing.

Mr. CONNESS. Permit me to say that there is a House report accompanying this joint resolution. I had it and read it, but cannot put my hand on it now. It states with considerable preciseness the merits of the whole case, and it would be well, perhaps, before the Senate acts on it to get that report.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The House report is among the papers. It was before the Committee on Indian Affairs. There is a whole bundle of papers, and the member of the committee who has the bill in charge knows all about them.

Several SENATORS. He is not here.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should not think it advisable to call up the bill in his absence.

Mr. CLARK. The Committee on Indian Affairs, who had this matter in charge, deputed it to one of their members for examination and examined it very thoroughly themselves; but that member, the Senator from Pennsylvania, is not in the House at the present time. I think it had better go over and not be called up in his absence, but be called up when he is here, so that he can explain it.

Mr. WADE. I have no objection to its lying over.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that it be postponed with a view of taking up Senate bill No. 357, the telegraph bill.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 394) to establish certain ocean post routes between the United States and Europe, and to regulate the transportation of the mails thereon, and to reduce the expenses thereof; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to say that I introduce the bill by request, without committing myself at all to the measure.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 396) for promoting the growth of forest trees on the public lands; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 397) for the relief in certain cases therein named of settlers in Kansas and on the line of the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POMEROY. I think that bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I think there is only a question of public lands in it.

Mr. HOWARD. I have no objection to that reference.

Mr. CONNESS. I think it is altogether probable that there will be some wish to insert a provision in it connected with the Pacific railroad legislation, and growing out of the late bill passed. With that view, I think it had better go to the Pacific Railroad Committee.

Mr. POMEROY. If it has anything to do with the road, let it take that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

TELEGRAPH LINES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 357) to aid in the construction of telegraph lines, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend the bill by striking out in section one, line three, the words "the national" and inserting "any;" and in the same line by striking out "a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York April 16, 1866," and inserting "authorized to be organized under the laws of any State in this Union;" so as to make the section read:

That any telegraph company authorized to be organized under the laws of any State in this Union shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States, &c.

The purpose of the amendment is to make a general law on the subject of telegraphs, which will allow any company that may be organized under the authority of any State in the Union to establish telegraph lines, instead of confining it to one particular company—to put them all on a par.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa, I believe, rather meets my idea; but the select committee who reported this bill at the time they were considering this matter thought it better to take up this company, which showed at least an inclination to enter into competition with the great and powerful corporations now existing, rather than to adopt any general system which might be superseded hereafter. The purpose of this bill is simply to enable this particular company to engage in this competition, believing that they have now the power and the means to do it. I do not myself, however, see any objection to this amendment, unless it would tend to cripple their operations.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not think it will have that effect.

Mr. SHERMAN. My purpose has always been to extend these rights to all incorporations, because the fourth section of the bill provides—

That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to prevent Congress from granting to other telegraph companies such powers and privileges as are hereby conferred; and Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

So far as I, as an individual Senator, am concerned, I am not opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa; but I am not authorized to accept it, because the committee thought it better to confine at present the operation of this bill to a single company. If the amendment is to be adopted it ought to be that "any company now in existence or hereafter authorized"—

Mr. GRIMES. It covers that now. "Any telegraphic company authorized to be organized."

Mr. SHERMAN. Say "now organized or authorized to be organized."

Mr. GRIMES. Well, I will accept that modification.

Mr. HARRIS. Why not say "any telegraph company?"

Mr. GRIMES. I would rather say one authorized by the law of some State. "Any telegraph company" might be a mere private association. "Now organized or authorized to be organized" is my amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. So as to include all existing companies and all hereafter organized?

Mr. GRIMES. I will say "now organized or authorized to be organized under the laws of any State in this Union."

Mr. CLARK. Why not say "now or hereafter organized?"

Mr. GRIMES. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa whether it would not accomplish his purpose better to leave the bill as it stands and say in the fourth section "the privileges hereby granted to the National Telegraph Company are also conferred upon all other companies organized under the laws of the several States?" I think that would be better.

Mr. CONNESS. The difficulty of that is this, it appears to me: this company is a joint stock company organized under the laws of the State of New York; they have a very large capital, as they state themselves in some of the prospectuses accompanying this matter; though they may not have any immediate benefit to their company from the passage of this bill, they expect a great indirect benefit by reason of the credit that it will give their company. In other words, it is proposed by the passage of this bill for this particular company, to enhance the value of their stock in the market. Now, Mr. President, I hope that Congress will not pass an act with that view, nor having that effect; but that instead of doing it, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be accepted. If you are to pass an act that there be free trade in telegraphing from the start, very well; if you are able to give advantages or facilities for telegraphing in the United States, give them alike to all. Then this company have any benefits that can be derived from the legislation of Congress that they are entitled to have. I hope the Senator having the bill in charge will consent to the change.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one idea that ought not to be forgotten. This company or any other company starting in the telegraph business has got to enter into competition with a powerful consolidated corporation, with a capital stock of from forty-five to fifty million dollars—a company now receiving a gratuity from Congress on a line from here to San Francisco, with their agents scattered all over the United States, with their arrangements made with the railroad companies throughout the United States; and it is no idle task for any new company to enter into this kind of competition. I do not wish to say it to discourage any one, but the probability is that in such a competition there will be a good deal of capital lost before the business is put on a stable footing. We know, as a matter of history, that the United States Company and the American Telegraph Company, I believe, both started as rival institutions to other companies, but they are now all consolidated in one great company; so that any company entering into the race must expect to meet a powerful competition. It has been shown by the experience of telegraph companies that a line established even on the most favorable location, say between Washington and Boston, starting alone, would not be able to compete with these powerful companies, because they can do all the business of telegraphing between these leading points for nothing, and so drive out of existence the rival company, unless that company is able to extend its branches to the leading cities of the United States.

Some of the gentlemen connected with this National Telegraph Company organized in New York are men of property and wealth, who have embarked in this enterprise, and they intend to take this hazard upon themselves in order to make this competition with a view to establish a telegraph line. This bill provides that after they have established this line, they shall not do as other companies have done, sell out to the existing monopoly, but shall continue to stand upon their own footing as an independent company. At the same time we reserve the power in Congress to alter, amend, or repeal their charter, or to give the same rights and privileges to other companies.

Now, I say, as an individual Senator, not representing the committee upon this matter, that unless it would tend to weaken their effort to create a company, I would be perfectly willing to see this privilege extended to all telegraph companies, including the present one; but I do not think it is exactly fair, under the circumstances, now to give this privilege to an existing company who are seeking to monopolize the whole business, and who do now monopolize the whole business, when it is manifestly the interest of the Government to build up new rivals to compete, if possible, with the existing corporation. I am willing, however, to take the sense of the Senate, without any further debate upon the question, whether they desire to make this legislation general or special. My impression is, that it would accomplish the object of the bill better to confine it to this one corporation, and then to extend it gradually if other companies desire to enter into it. But if it is the sense of the Senate to make it general now, I am perfectly willing to abide by that decision.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I believe it was on my motion that this matter was brought to the attention of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and was afterwards referred to the Postmaster General for an opinion and for data. Subsequently a special committee was organized in this body to examine the question more completely. I am free to say that the report of that committee, as far as it goes, submitting a bill for the organization of a new company, does not fulfill, in any manner, the idea which I had in the premises; that is, the propriety of the Government taking this subject of telegraphing in hand as a legitimate postal business, reducing it to a uniform rate and establishing a minimum of charge. I believe that much can be accomplished, and will be accomplished yet. The leading foreign Governments have recently moved in this direction, and I believe that the Government of the United States will have to come to that at last as the only means of curing the evils under which the telegraphic system now labors—a vast monopoly and an enormous public burden.

Since I had occasion to bring this subject to the attention of the Senate, the companies then in existence have gone on and consolidated themselves still more closely, until, I believe, there is now a single control that governs the whole subject, rendering competition an impossibility. Under that aspect of it, I shall have but little objection to this bill which has been introduced by the committee, or to any other bill which proposes to facilitate the organization of another company. I think, therefore, the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa is a very good one, as that will enable all the companies that may see fit to organize to go into this business, and, in so far, break the force of the monopoly. I shall therefore favor the amendment, and shall offer no objection to the bill itself, although it comes so far short of the true remedy for the evil. It may prove an entering wedge, preparing the way for a final consummation, when under Government control the telegraph shall be open to all as cheaply and as extensively as are now the facilities for transmitting messages by the mails.

I have one other word to say in regard to the communication of the Postmaster General. I think he has shown himself in that communication utterly unworthy of the position which he holds as a public officer so far as a comprehension of the necessities of that service goes. I think that he has exerted himself rather to throw before us details antagonistic to the project than to seek out and collate any information that would bear out the enterprise. Substantially he has collocated and presented here only the replies of the different telegraphic companies which are directly interested in this monopoly, and who have arranged their figures to suit their interests. He has given, it is, true the statement of Mr. Prescott, in which he endeavors to rebut and deny his own published works and published statements on this subject—details and facts given by him when he did not anticipate that any such movement as the present would place his publications in antagonism with the interests of the telegraph companies. How unfair the whole of this farrago of figures which has been laid before us is, may be gathered from a single remark; and that is in the statement of Mr. Prescott, who is combating his own published works heretofore, and says:

"I will dismiss this brief review of his (Mr. Brown's) speech by adding, in regard to his suggestion, 'that the telegraphic charges on ordinary commercial correspondence may be made as inexpensive as the present postal rates,' that the messengers receive more than the price of a letter stamp for delivering each dispatch, and that the Government tax upon the gross receipts of the telegraph companies averages more per message than Mr. Brown's estimate of the entire expense."

I believe that the Government, in its charge of three cents per letter, undertakes not only to transmit those letters to distant parts of the country, but it also undertakes the delivery to the individuals in cities of those letters themselves; so that the assumption here that more is given to the messengers for delivering telegraphic dispatches than the Government postage is simply ridiculous. Government carries them and delivers them both for postal rates, and yet makes money. They could deliver them just as easily as the Government delivers its letters, and just as cheaply. Therefore, it is clear that the illustration has no bearing at all, and is delusive and tricky. The same may be said of the statement "that the Government tax upon the gross receipts of the telegraph companies averages more per message than Mr. Brown's estimate of the entire expense." What bearing has that on the cost of telegraphing? The Government tax averages more per message than my estimate of the expense of telegraphing a dispatch because the telegraph company charge such an enormous price for every dispatch that it makes the tax amount to more than they could really be carried for. That is the answer to the attempted illustration. But it is not my intention this morning to make any extended reply to the hostile criticisms on my remarks which the Postmaster General has deemed it proper to gather up and present here under the disguise of a report. I will do that at some future time, when I shall renew the motion I have heretofore made, urging upon the Government the extension of its postal system so as to embrace telegraphic messages.

I do not think it probable that anything will be done at the present session in this connection, in the face of the adverse report which has been presented by the Postmaster General, and I shall therefore have no objection to taking up the bill which has been reported by the special committee, and doing what may be done in that behalf. I give notice, however, that I shall renew at the next session of Congress the attempt in this behalf.

Let me say, however, in conclusion, that I think the Postmaster General has reflected more discredit upon himself as a public officer in this connection than perhaps has transpired in regard to any high public functionary in this Government for a long period of time.

Those who have heretofore held the position of Postmaster General have endeavored to signalize themselves by defending it against the inroads of monopolies, by advancing the service, by giving to it the money-order system, the free-delivery system, the registration system, by facilitating the convenience of the people, and by carrying forward the service instead of standing in their places and repressing by illiberal and unfair reports every effort that may be made to extend and expand its usefulness and scope. And then such reasons as are lugged in to sustain this consolidated telegraph despotism, and prevent Congress from legislating for the relief of the people! Take one illustration. He says in his report:

"As the result of my investigation, under the resolution of the Senate, I am of the opinion that it will not be wise for the Government to inaugurate the proposed system of telegraphs as a part of the postal service, not only because of its doubtful financial success, but also its questionable feasibility under our political system."

Doubtful financial success? Pshaw! and that in the face of corporations that have expended themselves from five millions, which may be held to represent their construction account, to fifty millions, which is the proposed capital stock on which they design to base their dividends. And again, "feasibility under our political system;" as if the hearings of our political system had anything to do with determining whether the Post Office should send its messages and letters on the rail or on the wire, by post roads or by telegraph lines. It is too ridiculous for further comment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I regret very much the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri, because I know them to be unjust, so far as this bill is concerned. I know that Governor Dennison, the present Postmaster General, desires to promote the very object the honorable Senator from Missouri desires to promote, the extension of the telegraphic system and its eventual absorption by the Government of the United States; and therefore all his remarks on this subject are very unjust. The Postmaster General was called upon for information by a resolution of the Senate, I think introduced by the honorable Senator himself. Where would he get that information? He sent letters to all the leading persons engaged in the business, to the men themselves who had interest, on both sides. He addressed the persons who were interested in this very project of creating new competition. The whole of their replies were sent to him, and he communicated them to Congress. He has given, himself, no opinion on the subject. He has stated that on account of the large cost of establishing a Government system he does not think it should be done now. He shows by the figures he sends us that it would cost from ten to twenty million dollars, and perhaps more, to establish this system now, and he thinks we have not sufficient information to engage generally in the business. In that opinion he may be wrong; but upon the information that he gathered he probably was not wrong. He sends the whole of that information to us. I desire to state further that I submitted this very bill, reported from the special committee on the subject, to Governor Dennison, and it meets his hearty approval. He examined it carefully, and thought we ought to do that much, and be prepared to do more from time to time, as the system might develop itself. The whole system is new; it is but a little over twenty years since the first telegraphic message was sent across the wires between Baltimore and Washington. We must first get a rival or private competition with the existing company to reduce prices, and then, perhaps, after awhile the Government may do as the republic of Switzerland has already done, assume the whole telegraphing. In the little republic of Switzerland telegraph messages are sent by the Government precisely like postal letters, at a uniform charge of one franc per message. The British Government are now considering whether in Great Britain they will not do the same thing by Government, and I have no doubt that in a year or two telegraphic messages will be sent by the Government, precisely as the Government sends a letter of the citizen all over Great Britain; and eventually I hope we shall come to the same thing. As it is now, it costs two dollars to send a message from Washington city to my home, in the center of the State of Ohio. It costs now more than it did the first year the telegraph was established in this country. The great company that has now nominally fifty millions of capital, probably represents ten or fifteen millions of property; all the rest is accumulated profits or watered stock. It is manifest, therefore, that this bill or some measure to create competition ought to pass.

But I only rose now to reply to what I consider an unjust personal remark on Governor Dennison, in this connection. He, I have no doubt, favors the object of this bill; indeed I know that he favors this bill itself, and he favors the object which we all seek. The remarks of the Senator, so far as Governor Dennison is concerned in this connection, are unjust.

Mr. BROWN. I said nothing about Governor Dennison favoring this bill, but I said he had thrown the whole weight of his position as Postmaster General against this reform of the postal service.

Mr. SHERMAN. Only by communicating information, reports from interested parties.

Mr. BROWN. And by expressing his decided opinion that it was not feasible under our political system.

Mr. SHERMAN. At present.

Mr. BROWN. He does not say "at present."

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator has given too much force to the language of Governor Dennison. The honorable Senator from Missouri has been absent during most of the time we have been considering this matter; and although he takes it very much to heart, I think if he had been here and had conferred with Governor Dennison he would have found that he is not so much opposed to this system as the Senator imagines he is. I think he is prepared to aid and give the aid of his office at any time to extending the telegraph system and cheapening the rate of telegraph messages.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am opposed to this bill and to all this system of legislating so as to create corporations by the national Government, or to extend the rights of corporations created by the States. It interferes with existing corporations in the land, whether they be railroads or whether they be canals or corporations established for any other mode of conveyance or transit. I do not think under this system of government we have any business with such legislation in Congress. The avowed object here is to give the company named in this bill the advantage of the national Government and of a national charter against existing corporations in which it is said there have been some forty or fifty millions of capital invested during the last twenty years. Sir, we have an immense system of telegraphing throughout the United States, which is vastly convenient to the citizens. Now, the object of this bill is to break down that whole fabric by creating a counter-corporation, with the favor of the United States, extending to all the States of the Union. Let this company in New York, if it is so rich and so powerful as it is claimed to be, build its line of telegraph and enter into competition in the States, and let us give them no sanction by Congress. Let us not interfere with the enterprise and capital of the people and the arrangements which the States have made for transmitting information.

If this system of legislation is tolerated, we shall be here engaged in granting charters to interfere with the private rights that are granted by the States, and to break down the profits of the large amount of capital that has been invested in telegraph lines, in railroads, and perhaps in canals, and after awhile in bridges. We cannot tell where this thing is to end. I think this Government has quite enough to do to manage the national affairs, without interfering with the internal affairs of the States, which belong properly to State jurisdiction and State regulation.

I am opposed to this whole measure. I do not think the time has come for the General Government to embark in the business of telegraphing. I agree with the Postmaster General on that point. We have not transacted the business committed to us in such a very economical way as to make it desirable that, before we get out of debt, we should try our hand upon these new enterprises and new undertakings. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, but I shall vote against the whole measure.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I incline to think that I also shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, but after all I am in doubt in my own mind whether the Government ought to take telegraphing away from the people and put it under its own control, or whether it should not rather give back the post office to the people and let the Government have nothing to do with it, but let the people run the whole concern, post office, telegraph, and all. I think we shall arrive at that point some day—we are not educated up to it yet—when we can dispense with the whole Post Office Department and let the people take care of the transmission of their own letters, just as they do of their own merchandise.

But, sir, I do not think we can dispose of this question to-day. It is too important in all its bearings to be discussed and acted upon, and disposed of now. I think it had better be postponed. I move that this bill be postponed until to-morrow, for the purpose of going on with other matters.

Mr. SHERMAN. This matter has been fully considered by the Post Office Department and by the special committee on the subject. The bill has been twice before the Senate, and it is now up again. Let me say another word to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. There is not a single power conferred by this bill upon the new company that is not already conferred upon the old corporations. Every provision of this bill has been already granted by law to the old existing corporations, and besides that they have $40,000 a year from the Government of the United States as an express monopoly. They have already got from this Government without objection every provision in this bill, and besides that an annuity of $40,000 a year. I hope we shall at least put this new company that proposes to compete with them upon an equal footing with them without an annuity, and that is all this bill does. I hope the bill will be disposed of.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope we shall finish this bill to-day. I have always found that after we discuss a bill and then lay it aside and have it come up a second time, we have the debate to go over again. Now this, I believe, is the third time this has been before the Senate, and I hope we shall take a vote upon it and conclude it. I feel no great interest in the measure, because I think the bill is so drawn that it is useless for any good purpose for the company when they get it. They get no exclusive privileges; they get no particular rights; and I do not believe capitalists will invest in it after the bill is passed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am indifferent whether this bill be disposed of finally to-day or at some future time. I hope the Senate will reject a bill like this; but if it is to be adopted, and this policy entered upon by the General Government, we may as well do it to-day as to-morrow or some future time. I was not aware that the Congress of the United States had ever extended to other telegraph companies the privileges that it is proposed to grant by this bill. I know that in the State of Indiana the telegraph companies construct their lines and conduct their business under State law.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The honorable Senator from Indiana will allow me to interrupt him and to suggest that, on my motion, it is preferable to take the sense of the Senate on the point whether the bill is to be postponed or whether the discussion is to go on to-day. Let us settle that point before we go into discussion.

Mr. GRIMES, [to Mr. DOOLITTLE.] What do you propose to bring up? Anything?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There are other matters that ought to come up to-day; and besides, I gave notice yesterday that I should move early to-day for an executive session, because one of the treaties yesterday was not disposed of. I could not keep the Senate here long enough yesterday to dispose of it. I hope this bill will be allowed to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will only stand in the way of other business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection to the postponement. Of course a bill of this sort is not to pass without investigation and discussion. If the Senate wishes to take up something else, I shall not be in the way of that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should be very glad to call up the House bill to fix the number of judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and to change the judicial circuits. I have been trying to get the floor to move to take it up for several days; but there are so many of these telegraph lines and railroad companies and land-grant railroad companies that it has been impossible to do any other business for, I should think, several weeks. I hope this bill will be postponed or voted upon and got out of the way in some shape so that we may do some other business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us take a vote on it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is very clever in the Senator from Ohio to propose to just take a vote on it.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the postponement I mean.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought the Senator wanted the vote on the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall come to a vote on the bill pretty soon. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Guthrie, Hendricks, Howard, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Connors, Harris, Kirkwood, Nesmith, Norton, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Wade, and Williams—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, Wright, and Yates—16.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment a bill (S. No. 317) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled

'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 18) for the relief of the members of the thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteer infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 725) to provide for the payment of the sixth, eighth, and eleventh regiments of Ohio volunteer militia, of Cincinnati, Bard's company of cavalry, and Paulsen's battery, during the time they were in the service of the United States in 1862;

A bill (H. R. No. 728) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry or enrollment and license to certain vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 729) to change the port of entry in Puget sound;

A bill (H. R. No. 730) relating to pilots and pilot regulations; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal Company.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 110) to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed an enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish, for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho, and of Daniel Wellington and J. C. Dorsey, for extra services in carrying the mail; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

COURTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill (S. No. 382) to change the place of holding court in the northern district of Georgia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the district court for the northern district of Georgia shall hereafter be held at Atlanta, instead of Marietta.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOODWARD AND CHORPENNING.

Mr. WADE. I move now again to take up the joint resolution which was under consideration this morning, but which was laid aside until the Senator from Pennsylvania should come in.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 123) for the relief of Elizabeth Woodward and George Chorpenning, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Committee on Indian Affairs have reduced the appropriations contained in the House joint resolution, by the sum of $8,450, by putting a reduced valuation on the animals proved to have been lost in the mail service. That is the only change made in the resolution. Otherwise it stands precisely as it came from the House of Representatives.

A bill or provision for the relief of the claimants formerly passed the House of Representatives at three different sessions. On two of the former occasions the subject was not acted upon in the Senate for the want of time. On the third occasion, after the passage of the measure in the House which included this proposition, a part of it was struck out by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, at the instance of the late Judge Collamer, for the reason, and only for the reason, that it was a subject not pertinent to the consideration of that committee but appropriate to the consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was also his opinion that it was properly a legitimate subject for examination and assessment by the Indian department, and he suggested that the case should be laid before that department. For that reason the first section of that bill containing four sections in relation to the carrying of this mail was stricken out. Subsequently the claim was examined by the Indian department and rejected upon certain technical grounds, not affecting its merits, and leaving open, in my opinion, the whole question of the legal obligation of the Government, under the existing law, for the consideration of Congress.

Now, sir, the House of Representatives have again passed a measure for the relief of the claimants, differing only from the first measure to which I have alluded in the fact that it covers an additional period of time. That covered a period extending through 1851 up to July, 1852. The present resolution and the last bill which passed the House of Representatives and remained unacted on in the Senate included a period of time extending up to March, 1856. This subject has been reported upon by the House Committee on Indian Affairs. I hold that report in my hand, and if the Senate desire to pause for a full examination of this claim upon its merits, it will, I suppose, consult the convenience of members and save time to have that report of the House committee read.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the reading of that report if it is not too long. It seems to be a very old claim, and I should like to know how it differs from a great many other cases where parties lost property on the plains, so as to entitle these persons to precedence.

The Secretary read the following report made in the House of Representatives by Mr. A. W. HUBBARD on the 27th of April:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of George Chorpenning, submit the following report:

The committee have carefully reviewed the facts as set forth by the proofs in the case, fully concurring in the views expressed by the respective Committees on Indian Affairs of the Thirty-Fifth, Thirty-Seventh, and Thirty-Eighth Congresses, and report that it is fully established that George Chorpenning and Absalom Woodward were contractors for carrying the United States mails from California to Salt Lake, in Utah Territory; that they were the first persons ever engaged in transporting the mails through that country, commencing as early as May 1, 1851, and connecting at Salt Lake with the line east, formed the first "overland mail line" ever established across the continent; that in the performance of these duties they were compelled to pass regularly through the Indian haunts of the country; that the mail parties or trains were repeatedly attacked, men killed and wounded, mules, horses, and other property stolen and destroyed by them; that in November, 1851, Absalom Woodward with his escort of four men were attacked and murdered by those Indians, and all the property in their charge destroyed. The petitioner, Chorpenning, continued to carry the mail for Woodward and Chorpenning down to the 30th of June, 1852, and on his own account since.

The proof is sufficient to establish that from the commencement of the service down to the 30th of June, 1852, eighty-three mules and horses and other property, valued at $3,275, were killed and destroyed by the Indians, together with a large amount of money on the person of Woodward when he was killed. The proofs also establish that from June 30, 1852, to April 1, 1856, eighty-six mules and horses were killed or stolen, and property of the value of $570 destroyed by the Indians. For this property George Chorpenning and Absalom Woodward are entitled to indemnity from the Government.

It has been the policy of the Government to regard the Indians within its limits, and not subjected to the legislation of any of the States, as distinct but imperfectly organized political communities, under the control and protection of the Government of the United States.

The intercourse of the whites with the Indians is regulated by law, and all persons going among them in the service or by the special license of the United States are under its protection. If such persons are injured by the Indians they have no redress by resort to judicial tribunals, for none such exist among the Indians; and such persons are strictly prohibited from obtaining redress by reprisals, but the Government promises to pay their losses.

It is unnecessary to review the series of laws passed to effect these objects. The act of 30th of June, 1834, (5 Statutes-at-Large,) is the last of the general series, and is now in force. By the seventeenth section of this act it is, among other things, enacted that if any Indian or Indians shall, within the Indian country, take or destroy the property of any person lawfully within such country, such person may make application to the superintendent, agent, or sub-agent, who on being furnished with the necessary proof shall, under the direction of the President, make application to the nation or tribe to which such Indian or Indians belong for satisfaction; and if such nation or tribe shall refuse satisfaction in a reasonable time, not exceeding twelve months, such superintendent shall make return of his doing to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that proper steps may be taken to obtain satisfaction for the injury; and in the mean time the United States guaranty to the party so injured an eventual indemnification: Provided, First, if the party seeks personal satisfaction or revenge he forfeits his claim for indemnification; second, if the claim is not presented in three years it is barred. If the Indians receive an annuity, the claim is to be paid from the annuity; if the Indians do not receive an annuity it is to be paid from the Treasury. The seventh section of the Indian appropriation bill, passed the 27th of February, 1851, is as follows, namely:

"Be it enacted, That all the laws now in force regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, or such provisions of them as may be applicable, shall be, and the same are hereby, extended over the Indian tribes in the Territories of New Mexico and Utah."

Woodward and Chorpennig were lawfully in the Indian Territory. They were there by authority, and in execution of the laws of the United States, and in the actual service of the Government. As such they were entitled to rely on its promises of indemnity.

They did not seek private satisfaction or revenge for injuries sustained by the Indians, but cultivated, as far as was in their power, a friendly feeling with them. They made known their losses to the superintendent and agent, Brigham Young, the superintendent, reported the death of Woodward; J. H. Holeman, the agent, in his affidavit gives an account of the murder of Woodward; says the Indians admitted their attacks on Hanson's and other mail trains, because they had first been attacked by the whites, but did not pretend that the persons in charge of the mail trains had attempted to injure them; says he could not attempt to state the number of mules killed or the amount of property taken from the mail trains, but the Indians themselves admitted they had killed many. In the letter of 13th February, 1858, written by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to an attorney of the parties, the Commissioner says, "that Messrs. Chorpennig and Woodward were lawfully in the Indian country where and when their property was lost is admitted. But then the tribes to which the offending Indians belonged cannot be said to have been in amity with the United States; the petition itself styles them as hostile Indians. When the intercourse act was passed, it was with reference to the Atlantic tribes, but few of whom were west of the Missouri; and treaty stipulations were necessary to place them technically upon a footing of amity; and in addition to that, it was required that they must be on terms of actual friendship. This law, inapplicable as it is in many respects, has been extended, without amendment, over the tribes of the Pacific coast by the act of February 27, 1851, and in regard to them the same construction must be given as in the case of those for the government of which it was originally intended."

"There is nothing to show that the requirement of the law, that the proofs of the losses should be submitted to an agent to be laid before the Indians, was ever complied with. It is true that reports to this office from the Governor and ex officio superintendent of Indian affairs for Utah and from Agent Holeman show that they were cognizant to some extent of the losses complained of, and it is admitted that it would, under the circumstances, have been perhaps impossible to identify the tribes to which the offenders belonged, and impracticable as well as useless, had they known, to have adopted the regular and exact courses prescribed, or to have submitted the matter to them, but the law is imperative that it should be done."

Your committee are of opinion that only so much of the law of 1854 as was applicable to the Territory of Utah was extended over it by the seventh section of the act of February, 1851. At that date the Territory of Utah was unexplored. What Indian tribes inhabited or made it a place of resort was then, and for a long time afterward, unknown to the Government, and no treaties of peace and amity had yet been made. So much of the law as looked to a regular course of transactions with them as known to savage communities under the regular treaties of peace was wholly inapplicable.

The preparation of documents stating the losses and the tribes to which the assailing Indians belonged was not, in the opinion of the committee, applicable to these Indians, and was impracticable. All the sufferers could do was to report the injuries to the superintendent and agent, and claim the protection of the Government. This the committee are satisfied has been done.

But the committee are further of opinion that so much of the law of 1854 as prohibited the injured party from seeking private satisfaction or redress for his wrongs did apply to the Territory of Utah, and also so much as promised payment by the Government did apply. The party was restrained from seeking private redress to preserve the country from an Indian war, and this restraint was the consideration of the promise of indemnity. The Government, by this law, took the matter in its own hands. It restrained the injured party from seeking redress, and promised to make good his losses.

Your committee are of opinion that George Chorpennig and the widow of Absalom Woodward, deceased, are entitled to compensation for the losses sustained, and, as no annuities are payable to these Indians, the parties are entitled to payment from the Treasury.

The number of mules and horses lost, as stated above, is eighty-three mules and horses of Woodward and Chorpennig, killed prior to July 1, 1852, and eighty-six mules and horses of George Chorpennig, killed from July 1, 1852, to April 1, 1856.

By the proofs in the case, as well as the corroborating statements of the honorable Senators and Representatives in the Thirty-Fifth Congress from the State of California, these animals are proved to have been worth from two hundred dollars to five hundred dollars each. These prices, upon first impression, may seem extravagant. But when your committee take into consideration that this was in the days of fabulously high prices for everything in California, together with the strong array of proofs upon the subject, they cannot but regard it as fair and reasonable. Besides, the route lay over the mountains and through the barren deserts between California and Salt Lake, and none but the very best stock could endure the severe hardships incident to the service. For, in addition to the length of the trip, there were changes of grass, water, and climate, which would soon break down the constitution of any but superior animals; and when such were obtained, they were doubtless worth to the contractors from two hundred dollars to five hundred dollars each.

Your committee, therefore, think it reasonable and just to take the sum of $350, the difference between $200 and $500, as the average value of each animal, and thus ascertain the eighty-three mules and horses lost by Messrs. Woodward and Chorpennig to be worth $29,050. To this must be added $3,275 for their property lost. This does not include the money lost when Woodward and his party were killed.

On the eighty-six mules and horses lost by George Chorpennig individually from July 1, 1852, to April 1, 1856, they place the same average value of $350, making this loss $30,100, to which must be added, for the loss of other property, $570, making $30,670.

Your committee, therefore, recommend that the sum of $32,325 be paid to George Chorpennig and Elizabeth Woodward, wife of Absalom Woodward, and that the further sum of $30,670 be paid to George Chorpennig.

To these ends your committee report the accompanying joint resolution, and recommend its passage.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representative were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 729) to change the port of entry in Puget sound—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 730) relating to pilots and pilot regulations—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 728) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry or enrollment and license to certain vessels—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 609) to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in Minnesota, ports of delivery—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 611) to provide for making the town of Whitehall, New York, a port of delivery—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 726) to extend to certain persons the privilege of admission, in certain cases, to the United States Government Asylum for the Insane—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. No. 727) declaratory of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue registers to vessels in certain cases," approved February 10, 1866—to the Committee on Commerce.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal Company—to the Committee on Commerce.

BOUNTY ON IOWA TROOPS.

The bill (H. R. No. 18) for the relief of the members of the thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteer infantry, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, if there be no objection.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to put that bill on its passage without a reference, if there be no objection. We passed it once and the House has just passed it now. It is to pay the bounty due to a regiment of Iowa troops.

Mr. GRIMES. I hope it will be considered now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for the payment to the members of the thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteer infantry of the same bounty provided by law or which may hereafter be provided by law, to soldiers enlisted into the volunteer forces of the United States during the year 1862; and in case any of the members of the regiment are dead or may die before the payment of the bounty it is to be paid to their representatives in the same order provided by law for the payment of bounties in other cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNTY ON OHIO TROOPS.

The bill (H. R. No. 725) to provide for the payment of the sixth, eighth, and eleventh regiments of Ohio volunteer militia of Cincinnati, Bard's company of cavalry, and Paulsen's battery, during the time they were in the service of the United States in 1862, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill is precisely like the other to pay for some troops that were called out in the service of the United States in 1862. We have already provided for one regiment of them, and a bill passed the other day on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky providing for Kentucky troops. I hope the Senate will allow this bill to pass at once.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I very reluctantly made no objection to the passage of a bill a moment ago; and now we see the consequences of that precedent. Here is a bill that has never been read in the Senate, a bill that has never been considered by any committee of the Senate, and I submit to my friend from Ohio it is a very dangerous species of legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there was any objection I would not insist on its passage now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that there is any objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was fully considered by a committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Has it been considered by any committee of this body?

Mr. SHERMAN. The whole subject of this particular class of troops has been.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is out of order, unless by universal consent the bill is before the Senate. Is there any objection to its present consideration?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object to its being considered until it goes to some committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

ACCOMMODATION OF STATE DEPARTMENT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 110) to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State; which was in line six, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the sum appropriated for the hiring and fitting up of a suitable building or buildings for the Department of State $25,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 221) relating to lands granted to Minnesota to aid in constructing railroads, and they were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

TRANSPORTATION OF NITRO-GLYCERINE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 313) to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glycin oil.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have examined the amendments proposed by the House to that bill, and they are merely in the verbal phraseology of it, and are perfectly satisfactory to me and I have no doubt are to the rest of the committee. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

WILLIAM HICKEY.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That there be paid to the legal representatives of William Hickey, late Chief Clerk of the Senate, $300 to defray his funeral expenses, and that they be paid the balance of his salary as Chief Clerk for the year in which he died.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 113) for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Cuyahoga river over and upon the Government piers at Cleveland, Ohio.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 145) granting land to A. M. Jess, of Josephine county, Oregon;

A bill (H. R. No. 179) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory; and

A bill (H. R. No. 391) to create the office of surveyor general in Idaho Territory.

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1) to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MORRILL to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia as a substitute for the bill. The amendment to the amendment was in line seven, after the word "therein" to insert "and excepting persons who may have voluntarily left the District of Columbia to give aid and comfort to the rebels in the late rebellion;" so that, if amended, the amendment of the committee will read:

That from and after the passage of this act, each and every male person, excepting paupers and persons under guardianship, of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who has not been convicted of any infamous crime or offense, and who is a citizen of the United States, and who shall have resided in the said District for the period of six months previous to any election therein, and excepting persons who may have voluntarily left the District of Columbia to give aid and comfort to the rebels in the late rebellion, shall be entitled to the elective franchise, and shall be deemed an elector and entitled to vote at any election in said District, without any distinction on account of color or race.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person whose duty it shall be to receive votes at any election within the District of Columbia who shall willfully refuse to receive or who shall willfully reject the vote of any person entitled to such right under this act, shall be liable to an action of tort by the person injured, and shall be liable on indictment and conviction, if such act was done knowingly, to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year in the jail of said District, or to both.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall willfully interrupt or disturb any such elector in the exercise of such franchise, he or they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not to exceed $1,000, or be imprisoned in the jail in said District for a period not to exceed thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the several courts having criminal jurisdiction in said District to give this act in special charge to the grand jury at the commencement of each term of the court.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the mayors and aldermen of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, respectively, on or before the first day of March in each year, shall prepare a list of the persons they judge to be qualified to vote in the several wards of said cities in any election; and said mayors and aldermen shall be in open session to receive evidence of the qualification of persons claiming the right to vote in any election therein, and for correcting said list, on two days in each year, not exceeding five days prior to the annual election for the choice of city officers, giving previous notice of the time and place of each session in some newspaper printed in said District.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That on or before the day of — the mayors and aldermen of said cities shall post up a list of voters thus prepared in one or more public places in said cities, respectively, at least ten days prior to said annual election.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the officers presiding at any election shall keep and use the check-list herein required at the polls during the election of all officers, and no vote shall be received unless delivered by the voter in person, and not until the presiding officer has had opportunity to be satisfied of his identity, and shall find his name on the list, and mark it, and ascertain that his vote is single.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, before we proceed with this bill, which of the two measures he proposes shall be finally passed—the one placing this District under the charge of commissioners, reported some time since and which was particularly considered some days ago, or this one extending the suffrage? I think the public good would be subserved by the able and well-considered bill we had under consideration a few days ago placing this District under the charge of a board of commissioners. I think any person who has examined the subject and lived in this city for a short period and observed the situation, will be satisfied that that is the kind of legislation we really need. I should like, before we proceed with this bill, to know of the chairman which one of the two measures he proposes to press.

Mr. MORRILL. I was quite disposed, on another occasion, to take the sense of the Senate on the bill referred to by the Senator from Nevada, but the Senate seemed to have some apprehensions that, at this late day in the session, it would hardly be practicable to consummate that measure; besides, I was admonished by my honorable friend on my left, the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] that he had a very decided preference that we should proceed with the consideration of the bill now under consideration, as being the first in order.

Mr. STEWART. You had better inquire of him if he intends to vote for either.

Mr. MORRILL. And for some other reasons which were rather hinted at than stated. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] also seemed to have such a preference. Thinking, therefore, that it was possible I might not succeed in getting the attention of the Senate to the bill referred to by the Senator from Nevada, and considering that this bill was reported to the Senate among the earliest that were introduced at the commencement of this session, and considering, moreover, as I believe, the general expectation in the country that Congress should not adjourn until some action upon this subject had been taken, I concluded to ask the attention of the Senate to this bill.

Perhaps I ought to say, before asking the consideration of the Senate further, that I propose to offer some amendments to this bill further to qualify it. As reported to the Senate it provided for unrestricted and, I believe, what would be called impartial and perhaps universal suffrage in the District, as applicable to all males of the years of majority. I propose to qualify it by requiring that persons to be entitled to the elective franchise in this District shall be able to read and write; further, that persons who served in the military or naval service of the country during the rebellion shall have the right to vote; and a further qualification disfranchising all persons who entered the service of the confederate States against the Government of the United States. With those qualifications I made up my mind that it was my duty, having charge of this bill, under all the circumstances, some of which I have alluded to, to ask the consideration of the Senate to the subject. I am not particularly desirous of going on with it now, if gentlemen want further time. Otherwise I should like to have the consideration of the Senate to-day. The subject is one that has been very much discussed; and in the limited, qualified form in which I propose to put it, I had hardly anticipated much objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. If the amendment to the amendment is still within my reach I will move to insert it after the word "offense" in the fourth line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made in the insertion of the amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire what bill we are amending. There are so many of them that I really cannot understand them. Are we at work on the original bill, or the bill as reported by the committee?

Mr. MORRILL. On Senate bill No. 1, on an amendment to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The amendment that is now offered is to the committee's amendment?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then it does not come in on line four. As I have it printed here the word "offense" is on line six.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator has the wrong copy.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have what purports to be Senate bill No. 1, reported by Mr. MORRILL, with amendments, namely, "strike out the parts within the brackets and insert those printed in italics." Is that the bill you are at work upon?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir. The bill on which we are now acting is the one reported on the 12th of January last.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to say one word on the amendment that is offered by the Senator from Maine. I do not object to the temporary disfranchisement of those who have been in arms as a matter of precaution or safety for the District; but if it is intended by this amendment to set the precedent that all who have been engaged in the rebellion, or who may have left this District to become engaged in the rebellion, are to be disfranchised for all time to come, then I shall not be disposed to concur in it, and for this reason: I believe that the theory of universal suffrage goes upon the idea that it renders innocuous those who have been engaged in the rebellion heretofore; that their facility for getting up rebellion originated in the fact that a large portion of the community was disfranchised; that if it had not been for that fact they could not have succeeded; and that if you are going to have permanent peace and safety for the country you will only assure it by removing those disfranchisements and making suffrage equal and impartial, and that that will be in itself a substantial guarantee for the peace of the country in the future. Sir, I believe that doctrine. I believe that impartial or universal suffrage is the only reconstruction that will give us safety in the hereafter. I believe, furthermore, that if it is not adopted to-day, it will be simply remitted to the agitations of parties and the conflict of sections, and perhaps extending over a term of twenty years, it will simply defer that long our arrival at a period of repose and safety.

Now, sir, I am free to say, for my own part, that I prefer to take the amendment as it comes from the committee without any qualification. I do not wish the suffrage restricted permanently on the ground of action of this sort during the rebellion. I do not wish the suffrage restricted by any educational qualifications; nor do I wish it restricted by any property qualications. I want it simple and absolute, a right of human nature, which is as much a right as any other of self-defense in political communities or out of political communities. I therefore simply signify that I prefer the amendment as it comes from the committee without the additional qualifications which the Senator now proposes.

Mr. WILLEY. Is the proposition of the Senator from Maine susceptible of amendment at present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an amendment to an amendment, and not subject to further amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY. Is that proposition now susceptible of amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend the amendment by inserting in section one, line seven, after the word "therein," the following words: "and who can read the Constitution of the United States in the English language and write his name."

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not think I would object to this amendment but for the insertion of the word "English." There are a great many very well-educated men who cannot read in the English language, or write their names in English.

Mr. MORRILL. If they are citizens they ought to be able to read the English language.

Mr. POMEROY. They are Germans. There are in my State a great many Germans who are educated, loyal, patriotic, and radical, but they cannot read the English language. They can write their names, but they cannot write their names in the English language. They write them in German; that is, they have the German spelling and the German letters. I do not know but that it is necessary in this District to insist that persons who enjoy the franchise should write in English; but I have yet to learn that a man is any more of a patriot by writing in English than he would be by writing in German or some other language. I have believed that a man was an American as truly when he became so from choice as though he was so from necessity. The Senator from Maine and myself were born here; but we could not help it. There is no great merit in that. But the man who becomes an American from choice, who looking over the ocean and seeing America, learning of our institutions, breathing somewhat of our freedom, longing to identify himself with us in this great struggle for self-government, comes here and voluntarily assumes the duties of a citizen, enters our Army, and carries our flag to victory; I say such a man, if he cannot write a word in English, is an American; he is a patriot; he is loyal; and he should be entitled to vote.

I should not like to defeat this amendment by proposing an amendment to it, but I certainly believe it would be stronger and better by striking out the word "English" and letting it stand, "who can read the Constitution of the United States and write his name."

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "in the English language."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is an amendment to an amendment, and it is not susceptible of further amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Then I will say, while I am up, that I do not think it right to insert the words "in the English language" here. I think it a great mistake. We ought to say nothing about that, and I see no sort of sense in putting in the words "who can write his name." What has writing to do with voting? Many men of rare intelligence and character, from physical causes, cannot write their names, owing to paralysis or some cause of that kind. In some of the States where they have made this rule, they have provided for such persons by adding the words, "unless prevented by physical causes." I do not see any reason for the insertion of these words, "in the English language." I think the whole thing is trifling. I do not believe in putting in any of this matter about reading. We put it in our constitution a few years ago in Massachusetts, although we have not to-day probably a thousand voters in the State who cannot read and write; and it has been quoted for us and against us from that time to this. I have attended elections in the State for thirty years, and I never knew the test put, and I do not suppose it has ever been put. I voted against it then, and I am opposed to it now. I do not believe a word of it. Still, if I could not get a suffrage bill through without it, I would consent to it. But why tell a German, a man of intelligence and character, that he must read the Constitution in the English language? Why say to the Frenchman, or to any other foreigner who comes here, that he must be able to read and write in the English language? I think it is all wrong. In my opinion we had better meet the question squarely on the manhood of the case.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not at all particular about the phraseology. I think it not unlikely that the influence of Massachusetts in this instance was a sort of malign influence to which I ought not to have yielded. I found this provision in the constitution of Massachusetts, and I did not suppose that her honorable Senator would feel quite at liberty to repudiate it here.

Mr. WILSON. I voted against it there.

Mr. MORRILL. But outside of Massachusetts there is a reason that occurs to me why we should require those who exercise the elective franchise to read the English language. It is the language of this country. There is none other recognized in the publication of the laws.

Mr. BROWN. You are mistaken.

Mr. MORRILL. I am speaking now of the laws of Congress. The Constitution of the United States is not furnished by Congress to anybody except in the English language. The five years' quarantine, within which a foreigner is to have an opportunity to learn our institutions, are sufficient, if he is intelligent, to learn the English language, and to enable him to read the Constitution, and therefore it is no hardship. I believe for the sake of unity, unity in our civilization, unity in our language, unity in our sentiments and opinions, that we ought to inculcate as a standard and a formula that the laws should always be printed in the English language; and so far as any qualification is concerned, certainly our civilization is worth but little in its influence and its effect upon aliens and foreigners, if at least we do not require them to speak our language. That is the reason that influences me more than anything else, and leads me to desire the adoption of some such proposition. At the same time, I do not think it of importance enough to divide our friends upon that subject; and in order to accommodate the question to the views of gentlemen I am perfectly willing, if it is within my power, to modify the amendment by striking out the words "in the English language;" so that it will read, "and who can read the Constitution and write his name."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered, it requires general consent to make the modification. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment to the amendment is so modified.

Mr. GRIMES. It occurs to me that the adoption of this amendment may involve us in this trouble: I do not know how extensive the foreign population may be in this District; but I suppose that the adoption of this amendment, if it shall be adopted, will have a considerable reflex influence upon the public sentiment of the States, and may lead to the adoption of similar amendments, or to the agitation of the question whether similar amendments should be adopted there. Take as an example one of the western States, the State in which I have the honor to reside. We have a population made up from every one of the German principalities and Powers—Swedes, Norwegians, Danes; some Russians, some French, some Spanish, and some Portuguese. They have different dialects of the different languages that are peculiar to their country. Now, if such an amendment as this were adopted in that State as a part of its legislative law on the subject of elections, how would it be possible for it to be administered? The Constitution of the United States probably could not be found published in one third of the languages that are spoken in that State.

It is said that these people after having undergone a novitiate of five years ought to be able to read the English language. That is the case with those who come to the country young. Those who come here under the age of eighteen, or probably under the age of twenty-five, learn the English language in the course of five years so as to be able to speak it well, and generally to read it; but the man who comes here in mature life never learns to read it, and hardly ever learns to talk it, unless he was before he came here a thoroughly educated man. A large majority of the population that come to this country from abroad belong to the peasantry of the country from which they came. They have a limited education, as a general thing; but they have passed that period of life when they are qualified to acquire with any sort of correctness another language, and to be able to speak especially so difficult a language as the English language.

Mr. MORRILL. I have stricken that out.

Mr. GRIMES. I know it does not require them to read in the English language, but it requires them to read the Constitution in some language. You will not find the Constitution published in one half of the languages that are spoken by these different people in the country. Will not the adoption of such an amendment lead to complications and troubles if it is put upon that basis? That is the point I raise.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the honorable Senator that it seems to me the obvious answer to that is, that this provision applies to the District of Columbia, and if it should have the reflex influence in a general way that he supposes, of course no State would be disposed to adopt it as a formula where a portion of the people are situated as the honorable Senator supposes. Whatever its general influence might be, it would not have the effect to influence the legislation of such a State.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Maine for one moment. It seems to me there is some misunderstanding in regard to the bill now before the Senate. If I remember aright, the bill that the Senator has called up was first reported from the committee. Then, on motion of the Senator from Illinois, who is now by my side, [Mr. YATES,] it was referred to the committee again; and, according to my recollection, the committee reported back, then, the House bill, a bill that has already passed the House, on this subject, and our chairman was directed to put that bill on its passage at as early a day as possible. Now, I understand that the chairman, instead of putting the House bill on its passage, brings forward the other bill, which had been recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia, on motion of my friend, the Senator from Illinois. It seems to me there is some misapprehension.

Mr. MORRILL. The misapprehension is in the facts. The honorable Senator has not the facts in his mind.

Mr. SUMNER. Perhaps not; I thought I had.

Mr. MORRILL. With his permission, I will state the facts.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill was sent to the committee by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.] It will be seen that it is Senate bill No. 1, the first bill on this subject or any subject that went to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Some weeks afterward—months, possibly—a bill came from the House, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. In the mean time, however, this bill had been reported back to the Senate with restricted suffrage, requiring the qualification to read and write. Upon the motion of the Senator from Illinois, it was re-committed, and that qualification stricken out, and reported back to the Senate in the condition we now find it. That is the history of it. Afterward we acted upon the bill which came from the House, and the committee instructed me to report it, which I have done, and it now lies upon the table. That is the history of the two bills. We have, therefore, before us this bill, which was the first, is the first on the Calendar, first considered, first reported back by the committee; and then we have the House bill, which contemplates unrestricted suffrage.

In further justification, if any were necessary, why I should take up the bill first in order, first reported, and first on the Calendar, I have an additional reason to assign. It will be remembered that some five or six months have passed since those bills were reported. It is needless to say, to a perfect understanding of the whole thing, that the bill which comes from the House is not an election bill, and confers no right of voting whatever on any man, woman, or child, in this District beyond what they now have. It is a mere declaration of a right to vote. The committee so regarded it at the time and I believe we gave our consent to it at the time, chiefly upon the ground—some of us, at least—that perhaps at that early period a declaration of that sort might do good. But months have passed away, and very great changes have been wrought since that time, I do not say in the sentiment or opinions of the country, but in the action of this Senate. We have had before us the whole question of reconstruction, and this question among others involved in it, during this period; and, as having some influence on my mind, within the last four weeks, a delegation of very intelligent gentlemen, I may say with the utmost propriety—I speak without distinction of color—called upon me, from different parts of the country, to urge me to take up this precise bill.

Mr. SUMNER. The first bill?

Mr. MORRILL. The one we have now under consideration, saying that it was, they believed, the bill which the colored people in this District most desired to pass; that they were in favor of limited, qualified suffrage.

Mr. BROWN. Those not limited were in favor of limiting the others.

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; these men had no rights that were not common.

Mr. BROWN. The fellow that could read and write was willing to limit the man who could not read and write.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know what their motives were, but they were intelligent enough to vote and comprehend the question. I only mention that—I do not know that it ought to have any influence—as one of the facts which led me to feel that it was my duty to present this bill to the consideration of the Senate and to propose these amendments. I intended before asking the vote of the Senate on the question to say what I have now said; that there are two measures before the Senate: one provides for qualified suffrage and is an election bill; and the other is a declaration of the principle of universal suffrage, but confers no right. Of course, if the Senate prefer the second, then we can lay this aside and proceed to the consideration of the bill which came from the House; but having been persuaded myself that we had better proceed to the consideration of this bill, for the reasons I have stated, I felt not only authorized, but quite obliged, to bring the bill in its present shape before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I move to postpone this bill and all other prior orders and take up Senate bill No. 257, which we nearly completed the other day, and which can be disposed of before the hour for going into executive session. We cannot arrive at any result to-day on this bill.

Mr. POMEROY. What is that bill?

Mr. STEWART. It is the bill to regulate the possession of the mineral lands, which we nearly perfected the other day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. STEWART. I will withdraw the motion if the Senator desires to go on with this bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Let us go on and pass this bill.

Mr. WILSON. We can pass it to-day, I think.

Mr. STEWART. In my opinion, it had better go over.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope this bill will not be laid aside. I object on general principles; after we have discussed a bill for awhile and got ready to pass it, to lay it aside, not because I want to antagonize this bill with any other; but as we have it under way, I think we had better proceed with it.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Kirkwood, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Sherman, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, and Williams—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Conness, Davis, Grimes, Guthrie, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Norton, Rice, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wilson, and Yates—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Cresswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Wright—15.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLEY. I move to amend the amendment reported by the committee by striking out all after the word "that," at the beginning of the first section, and insert the following:

In all elections to be held hereafter in the District of Columbia, the following described persons, and those only, shall have the right to vote, namely: first, all those persons who were actually residents of said District and qualified to vote therein at the elections held therein in the year 1865, under the statutes then in force; second, all persons residents of said District who have been duly mustered into the military or naval service of the United States during the late rebellion, and have been or shall hereafter be honorably discharged therefrom; third, male citizens of the United States who shall have attained the age of twenty-one years, (excepting paupers, persons non compos mentis or convicted of an infamous offense,) and who, being residents of the ward or district in which they shall offer to vote, shall have resided in said District for the period of one year next preceding any election, and who shall have paid the taxes assessed against them, and who can read, and who can write their names.

On this proposition I deem it my duty to address the Senate somewhat at length; and in asking this indulgence at the hands of the Senate, I desire to state that I am ready to proceed now or at any time that will suit the convenience of the Senate. I understand there is a desire to go into executive session pretty soon; I do not wish to interfere with that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If it will not interrupt the remarks of the honorable Senator from West Virginia, I will now submit the motion that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILLEY. I am entirely willing to submit to the wishes and convenience of the Senate, either to proceed now or to give way to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, as the Senate may desire. To me it is a matter of perfect indifference.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If it is entirely acceptable to and is considered as courteous on my part by the honorable Senator from West Virginia, I will move an executive session.

Several SENATORS. Not now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield the floor to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WILLEY. Certainly, sir.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, the discussions which the bill now under consideration has excited, both in Congress and in the country, have embraced a wider range of thought and argument than was strictly in order. More has been said and written upon the propriety or impropriety of bestowing the elective franchise upon the negro in the States lately in rebellion than upon the proposition directly involved in the bill itself. In the latter case there can be no doubt about the power of Congress. Our authority to pass the bill will not, I suppose, be controverted. In the former case there can be as little doubt, in my judgment, that Congress has not the power by legislative enactment to confer the right of suffrage on any class of people, black or white, within the jurisdiction of any of the States. I know that it is said that the Constitution provides that "the United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government," and that no form of government can be republican which withholds the right of suffrage from a class of persons simply on account of their color. But this very clause of the Constitution, it will be observed, does not clothe Congress positively with the power or the duty of regulating the qualifications of electors in the States. The most liberal construction which can be placed upon it, favoring the idea advanced, is, that Congress may withhold its recognition of a State, or refuse the admission of a State, until it shall be satisfied that the government of the State is republican in form. But it seems to me it is now too late to raise the question.

The advocates of this construction of the Constitution have been very remiss, to say the least of it, if the power which they claim has really been conferred on Congress. They have allowed the infraction of what they regard as a fundamental principle of republican government by almost every State in the Union to remain unchallenged and unredressed until the present time. Sir, nearly every State in the Union, at some period of its history, has excluded persons from the elective franchise in consequence of race and color; and that exclusion remains in full force now in a large majority of the States. And, sir, the question may well be raised whether an interpretation of this clause of the Constitution which would clothe Congress with authority to regulate the right of suffrage in the States would not itself be a destruction of republican government. Suffrage is the fundamental principle of republican government. Therefore, if you deny the right of a State to regulate this franchise for itself, how can it be truly republican in fact? But without further remark in this behalf, I respectfully submit that it is only necessary, in order to refute this latitudinarian idea of congressional power, to quote another plain provision of the Constitution itself. It is as follows:

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

It seems to me that this clause excludes all rational controversy respecting the power of Congress to regulate the qualifications of electors by statutory enactment. And, in my judgment, the wisdom of thus leaving with the States the right of regulating suffrage is as manifest as the authority conferred upon them to do it is plain and undeniable. It avoids all conflict between the nation and the respective States as to the qualifications of the electors of State officers and Federal officers, and thus secures more harmonious relations between the States and the national Government. Besides, the States must necessarily be the better judges of the limits to which suffrage may be judiciously extended therein, having due regard to the public welfare and safety; for it is quite obvious that it might well be bestowed upon a class of voters in one State, when it might be imprudent and dangerous to give it to the same class in another State. For instance, the great State of New York may receive little detriment from the predominating proportion of vicious and dissolute population in the district of the "Five Points," but if the proportion which that population bears to that district existed all over the State it might well suggest much more stringent restrictions upon the qualifications of voters than the constitution of that State now contains. Of the necessity of such limitations the States respectively must be better able to judge than the nation at large. How could we know what the welfare and safety of California or Oregon might require in this respect? But on this question, in regard both to power and to expediency, hear the contemporaneous expositions of the framers of the Constitution.

Mr. Madison, in No. 52 of the Federalist, says:

"The first view to be taken of this part of the Government relates to the qualifications of the electors and the elected.

"Those of the former are to be the same with those of the electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislatures. The definition of the right of suffrage is very justly regarded as a fundamental article of republican government. It was incumbent on the Convention, therefore, to establish and define this right in the Constitution. To have left it open for the occasional regulation of the Congress would have been improper for the reason just mentioned. To have submitted it to the legislative discretion of the States would have been improper for the same reason, and for the additional reason that it would have rendered too dependent on State governments that branch of the Federal Government which ought to be dependent on the people alone. To have reduced the different qualifications in the different States to one uniform rule would probably have been as dissatisfactory to some of the States as it would have been difficult to the Convention. The provision made by the Convention appears, therefore, to be the best that lay within their option. It must be satisfactory to every State, because it is conformable to the standard already established or which may be established by the State itself. It will be safe to the United States, because, being fixed by the State constitutions, it is not alterable by the State governments, and it cannot be feared that the people of the States will alter this part of their constitutions in such a manner as to abridge the rights secured to them by the Federal Constitution."

Mr. Hamilton, in No. 60 of the Federalist, says:

"The qualifications of the persons who may choose or be chosen, as has been remarked upon another occasion, are defined and fixed in the Constitution, and are unalterable by the Legislature."

It is my opinion, therefore, that the advocates of congressional intervention to regulate the right of suffrage in the States, whether loyal or disloyal, by mere legislative enactment, have no warrant for the authority they claim in the Constitution, but are seeking to exercise a power expressly prohibited by the Constitution.

If the discussion had been confined to the operation of this bill, these remarks would hardly be pertinent. But the question has been discussed in its bearing upon the whole country, and it is avowed that what we do upon this measure is designed to have a bearing on the general policy of the nation. But the power of Congress to pass this bill is, I suppose, undeniable. Congress has complete jurisdiction over the District of Columbia; and here it is only a question of justice and expediency.

If it had been left to my judgment, Mr. President, I should have said that whether this measure was in itself wise or unwise this was hardly a proper time to introduce it. We are in the midst of mighty events. The order of society all around us is disorganized. There is a painful sense of uncertainty filling every heart and mind. New, vital, and most difficult questions are thrust upon us, which must be decided. Anything not essential in itself, or very material to the welfare of the nation, or a considerable part of the nation, if it is calculated to complicate our difficulties, or inflame party passions or sectional animosities, had better be left, it appears to me, to a more propitious hour. It is true that this bill is limited to this District in its operation. Nevertheless it has and is designed to have a national significance. The moral influence of our action here is intended to reach every State. But, wisely or unwisely, the question is before us and we must meet it. And, sir, in taking my position to-day I do it with the understanding that it may possibly terminate my connection with this body and with public affairs.

But, sir, acting in obedience to the convictions of my judgment, I shall leave the result, so far as it shall affect me personally, to take care of itself. If I am right the truth sooner or later will vindicate my course. If I am wrong, I shall at least have the consolation of knowing that I erred from no selfish motive. I will not, I cannot now, whatever may be the consequences, shrink from what I trust I may be pardoned for saying, has been the sacred rule of my life—a conscientious adherence to whatsoever I believe to be just and true. Therefore reiterating my belief that Congress has no power to interfere with the right of suffrage in any State; that I shall oppose all congressional legislation assuming to exercise any such power; and recalling the fact that the bill under consideration is confined in its legal operation to the District of Columbia alone, I solicit the attention of the Senate to some further remarks on the principles and policy involved in it. In doing so I wish to treat the question fairly, and so to deserve a candid and impartial hearing here and elsewhere.

Mr. President, I do not concur in the opinion so boldly avowed by some Senators that the proposition to extend the right of suffrage to the African race in this District is so plainly right as to be unquestionable. I regard it as one of the most difficult and important questions ever submitted to the consideration of Congress. It involves the future welfare of two races here and elsewhere, and perhaps the very existence of one of them on this continent. It is not, in my judgment, consistent with a wise and enlightened statesmanship to seek to evade its embarrassments by mere emphatic declarations that its propriety is incontrovertible. There is no argument in simple asseverations, however vehemently made or dogmatically expressed.

This question of suffrage has been discussed with great ability and research during the past few weeks. History, philosophy, law, and metaphysics have been laid under liberal contributions to illustrate it. The debate has been adorned with great eloquence and learning on both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. President, I shall be unable to commend my views to the Senate by any of these attractive and fascinating adjuncts. My aim shall be to present the conclusions which are warranted by plain, common sense. And, sir, I begin with the proposition, which I believe has not been seriously controverted, that suffrage is not a natural or absolute right. If it were so the controversy would be at an end; for I think it would be hard to demonstrate that we would be justifiable in withholding from any member of society what he had a natural right to enjoy.

But, sir, it seems to me that the order and economy of divine Providence plainly indicate that citizenship must necessarily be subject to limitations. The universal law of self-defense, belonging to communities no less than to individuals, involves the principle of restricted suffrage. If we look abroad over the earth we cannot fail to see, from its physical structure and geographical divisions, that distinct communities and separate nationalities are inevitable. It is divided into continents and islands and zones and sections, separated by oceans and seas and mountain ranges, indicating a most palpable providential design of distinct and independent communities. Then there are radical differences in systems of religion, forms of civilization, manners, customs, language, and race. Some are pagans, some are Christians, some are Jews, and some are savages. It would, therefore, be impossible, even if the physical barriers referred to were out of the way, to extend one safe, consistent, and useful empire over the entire globe, embracing so many heterogeneous elements of society. Different nationalities do, therefore, seem to be absolutely necessary, and to be according to the divine will; and therefore they must be warranted by natural and absolute right, and consequently include the power to ordain and enforce whatsoever regulations shall be deemed essential to preserve their peace and integrity and promote their happiness and prosperity. On this principle, I imagine, our naturalization laws are based; and these laws imply that no person belonging to any one of these communities has the right to incorporate himself into the body-politic of any other community without its consent and without complying with such conditions as shall be prescribed for his admission. On this foundation, too, has been erected the whole superstructure of international law. Every nation or community, therefore, has the absolute right to regulate its own affairs and govern its own people. In doing so it may not, however, rightfully exercise this power arbitrarily or in derogation of the principles of justice and equity toward all or toward any of its people.

Now, sir, one fundamental and most obvious principle necessary to be observed in the organization of such community is homogeneity of condition, whether it relates to religion, to the form or degree of civilization, to distinctions of race, or to anything else; because upon this may depend its welfare, its peace, and, indeed, the perpetuity of its existence. And so when an independent nation has been organized, it would seem to be a logical sequence of the premises enunciated that that nation has thereafter a perfect right to say who shall or who shall not be introduced into its citizenship; and therefore no individual, class of individuals, or race, not originally composing a part of it, has any natural or absolute right to be enfranchised as a part of it against its consent or on conditions other than those it may prescribe. Indeed, this is implied in the cherished maxim of our American institutions, that all just government is derived from the consent of the governed; for this implies that Government is a compact between the parties to it, and to be just and complete it must include the consent of all the contracting parties.

It follows from these considerations that whatever would seriously disturb the harmony of the political organism of the State or imperil its welfare and integrity may be properly excluded. And here, sir, I must be allowed to remark that there can be nothing more likely to disturb the peaceful relations of society than caste or distinction of races, especially when those distinctions are as marked as those belonging to the Anglo-Saxon and the African. Sir, I repeat it, that it is vain as it is unwise to attempt to underdate the peril of negro enfranchisement. Sir, we find impressive admonitions on almost every page of history against the evils of incorporating different races, religions, and civilizations into the same national organization. If the Senator from Massachusetts had brought the same learning and research to the examination of the relations which this thought bears to the actual history and condition of the nations of the earth which he did to the definition of what constitutes republican government a few days ago, what an instructive lesson he would have taught us! Sir, may we not find a solution of the problem of the long-protracted anarchy and insurrectionary condition of Mexico in the heterogeneous character of its population? And if so, was not Louis Napoleon indebted for his opportunity of violating the traditional policy of the United States and humiliating us as a nation by the introduction of European imperialism on this continent to these same Mexican disorders? And what was our own late sad and sanguinary war but a rebellion instigated by causes growing out of the existence of a foreign race in this country? And how does England maintain her authority to-day over the castes and races in her eastern possessions? Not by law or by the consent of the people, but by the sword.

Mr. President, I do not suppose there is a Senator here, not even the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] who would be willing, as an original proposition, to consent to the introduction of the negro race into this country in any considerable numbers to become citizens. And why? Because he would wish to avoid the dangers arising from the contrariety of races in the same body-politic. His philosophic mind, enlightened by all the history of the past, would enable him to foresee bloody scenes of revolution like those which have just attested in our own age and land the sad consequences of introducing different races into the same community. But then, sir, the negro is here; here without any fault or will of his own, and by no fault or will of ours. Four millions of his race are here, and we cannot help it. What are we to do? Say there is no difficulty in the situation of affairs and shut our eyes upon the perils that surround us? Sir, I do not believe either in the policy or the propriety of discussing this great national question after the manner of an advocate at the bar or a partisan on the hustings, seeking to make the most of the side of the case he espouses. The obligations of the Senator rise above this; and if we would comprehend our duty and discharge it intelligently, we must survey the question in all its bearings. And now, sir, having made these general observations, and having, as I believe, fairly stated the general principles of law and policy applicable to the proposition under consideration, so as to give to those who deny the right or expediency of negro enfranchisement the full benefit of all they can logically or lawfully claim in support of their position, I proceed in my examination of the bill before the Senate. My only desire is to ascertain what is true in itself, just to the negro, and safe for the country.

Mr. President, it is useless now to discuss the propriety or impropriety of the abolition of slavery in the United States. The deed is done. It is an accomplished fact. It is irreversible; and because it is irreversible it affords a strong presumption that it must be right. No Senator, I imagine, would assert that he would reestablish slavery in this country if he could. No Senator will contend that the white race in this country is not in a better condition without slavery than with it. Whether gradual emancipation would not have been the better mode, better for the master and better for the slave, it is now too late to determine. It is well known that Mr. Lincoln would have preferred gradual emancipation. In this preference I concurred with him. It would, in my opinion, have prevented many of the sore evils which are now afflicting so many of the colored race. But the pressure of events, the exigencies of the war, and the madness of the slaveholders themselves, did not permit any such beneficent delay. At all events the deed is done; and four million human beings, lately slaves, are now free, forever free. For myself, I rejoice that it is so. I voted for the constitutional amendment, and thus aided in the accomplishment of the result. To this extent I am individually responsible for the result. The nation, through the means provided in its organic law, has ratified and confirmed the decree of universal emancipation. So the nation, too, is responsible for the great result. Does our duty cease here? I think not. The question still remains, what shall be done with the freedmen? I have always entertained the opinion that it would be better for the races to be separated, if it were practicable to separate them. But it is impracticable to do so at this time. Gradual emancipation might possibly have rendered deportation and colonization available. But this is impossible, even if it were desirable, under existing circumstances. We have not the means to do it. We cannot support the burden of increased public debt which any commensurate effort to do it would necessarily impose upon us. And if we had the pecuniary means, the moral and intellectual condition of the great mass of our colored population wholly disqualifies them for the duties and responsibilities involved in any separate colonial organization. They must undergo a century of moral, intellectual, and civil, if not political, tuition before they will be prepared for the high behests of self-government.

What, then, is the nation's duty to its freedmen; freed by our act, not their own? In relation to a certain class of its duties, I suppose there can be no difference of opinion among all enlightened, humane, and Christian statesmen. We owe to the freedman the guarantee of every civil right of man. He must be fully protected in the enjoyment of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." He must have the same rights in these respects that you or I have; and the securities and guarantees surrounding them must be as ample for him as they are for you or for me. To this extent he must be made equal before the law. Why should it not be so? This protection involves, on his part, obedience to the law; the same obedience that the white man renders. Enjoying the full benefit of this relation to civil government, he must also bear its burdens, the same burdens which the white man bears. He must pay taxes. He must render military service. He must work upon or pay for keeping in repair the public highways. He must, in short, respond to all the obligations and duties which rest upon the white man. Upon what principle of justice or equity, therefore, will it be said that he is not entitled to the same civil rights, privileges, and immunities as the white man? If he performs all the civil duties of the citizen, how can he be deprived of any of the civil rights of a citizen? Does the mere color of his skin constitute any rational disability? Surely not in the mind of any Christian statesman.

But aside from all these considerations of obligation and duty, it is clear that the welfare of both races, and of the nation, would be promoted by cheerfully and faithfully extending all civil rights and guarantees of civil rights to the freedman. While he remains here it is for our interest, no less than for his, that he should be elevated in character and capacity as speedily and to as great an extent as possible. But how can we rationally expect improvement in these respects, or in any respect, if, while he has the name of freedman, we withhold from him the privileges and immunities rightfully and logically belonging to that relation, and treat him, in fact, as if he were still a slave? Will he not sink under the helplessness and hopelessness of such a situation into a degradation deeper than that from which he has been wrested—a burden and a curse to the community where he dwells? And do we not here find a complete answer to the allegation so constantly and vehemently reiterated in our ears that the free negro will not labor and uniformly leads an indolent, vicious, and disreputable life? What motive had he in the slave States to do otherwise? But throw around him the protection and extend to him the privileges of the citizen, and he will be stimulated to industry, and will have some inducement to improve his condition. Let his manhood be recognized if you wish to develop it.

In reference to these suggestions, however, I suppose there will not be much controversy. But what is the logical inference from these statements? Can it be true that a class of men may be justly entitled to all the civil rights and privileges of the citizen, and still be wholly unworthy of all political rights? Is not the relation between civil and political rights intimate if not indissoluble? How can they be logically separated? Does not civil obligation imply political right unless some motive of the public welfare and safety intervenes to justify the exclusion? The fundamental principle of our political institutions is, that all rightful government must rest on the consent of the governed. If the freedmen are to be subject to the laws, are they not, therefore, entitled in justice and equity to some authority in the appointment of those who are to make the laws? There is another fundamental principle of American liberty involved in the question. It was the cardinal complaint of our revolutionary fathers that they were taxed without representation. Upon this issue they went to war. Upon this issue the revolutionary war was fought. How can we consistently tax the freedmen and wholly exclude them from representation? Upon what principle, I ask, can this be done? And upon what principle of justice or American liberty, I furthermore ask, can freedmen be compelled to perform military service, and yet be excluded from having any voice in the Government which sends him to the field? Is he to be intrusted with the bayonet and not with the ballot? Is he worthy to die for his country, and yet necessarily unworthy of the elective franchise? I am not unmindful of the clamor with which these propositions are met. Do I propose, I shall be asked, to make the black soldier equal to the white soldier? The question is hardly worthy of a statesman, and is therefore, in this place, hardly worthy of a reply. The equality of the two races as soldiers is not at all involved in the issue I am discussing. But I do not mean to say that the colored soldier is equal to the white soldier. I do not believe that he is. Under the circumstances in which he is placed it is impossible that he should be. But if he is worthy of being a soldier at all is he not worthy of being a citizen and a voter? Should we fear to give the ballot to him who is ready to give his life for his country? His country, sir! He who is morally and intellectually qualified to vote, and is denied the privilege, can hardly be said to have a country. He is virtually still a slave. Sir, we have seen the blood of the black man and the blood of the white man during the late terrible rebellion mingling undistinguishably together as a common libation to liberty on the altar of their country. Is not such a sacrifice sufficient to propitiate the favor of a magnanimous race, and to merit the boon of political enfranchisement? For myself, sir, I should be ashamed to deny it wherever there is capacity to appreciate it and use it discreetly, and where I have the right to bestow it.

Again, Mr. President, what is the legitimate effect on the status of the freedman of the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery? If he was not a citizen before that amendment took effect is he not now? According to the spirit of our institutions, if not according to the letter of our Constitution, it appears to me that he is. I can conceive of no intermediate state between slavery and citizenship among the natives of our soil and within our jurisdiction, unless there be an exclusion in express terms. Why were negroes born on our soil heretofore ruled not to be citizens? Was it simply because they were of African descent? I suppose not—no more than it would be competent to exclude on account of German descent or French descent. It was because the negro belonged to an enslaved race; it was on account of slavery; it was because their ancestors were brought to this country as chattels and not as persons. But slavery being now abolished, and all men born on our soil being now made free by our organic law, the reason of the original exclusion no longer exists. With the extinction of slavery, its incidents and disabilities are necessarily extinguished. I know it is said that the sole effect of the constitutional amendment was to release him from the control of his master—nothing more. But it seems to me that this is a narrow view of the subject. Freedom is a fact if it is anything—a reality, not a mere shadow without substance.

It was Kossuth, I believe, who said "liberty is liberty, as God is God." But if the effect of constitutional emancipation, and constitutional prohibition of slavery forever in this land be nothing more than is thus claimed for it, removing the control of the master but leaving the freedman subject to all the other disabilities of slavery, it is a mere mockery. That the question of color had nothing to do with the exclusion of persons of African descent from the status of American citizenship I think is made clear by Mr. Justice Curtis in his opinion in the Dred Scott case, which case constitutes the only authority, I believe, against the competency of negroes to be made citizens. The opinion I refer to is as follows:

"It has sometimes been urged that colored persons are shown not to be citizens of the United States by the fact that the naturalization laws apply only to white persons. But whether a person born in the United States be or be not a citizen, cannot depend on laws which refer only to aliens, and do not affect the status of persons born in the United States. The utmost effect which can be attributed to them is to show that Congress has not deemed it expedient generally to apply the rule to colored aliens. That they might do so, if thought fit, is clear. The Constitution has not excluded them. And since that has conferred the power on Congress to naturalize colored aliens, it certainly shows color is not a necessary qualification for citizenship under the Constitution of the United States. It may be added that the power to make colored persons citizens of the United States, under the Constitution, has been actually exercised in repeated and important instances. (See Treaties with the Choctaws, of September 27, 1830, article 14; with the Cherokees, of May 23, 1836, article 12; Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, article 8.)"

Here, then, is the point of the argument: that a man born on our soil, subject to military duty, subject to taxation, rendering obedience to all our laws, sustaining all the burdens of citizenship and discharging all its duties, and morally and intellectually qualified to vote intelligently and judiciously, cannot, justly and consistently with the principles and spirit of our republican institutions, be rightfully deprived of the elective franchise, simply in consequence of the color of his skin or on account of his race. His being a black citizen cannot, if he have all the other qualifications of the white citizen who by law is entitled to vote, constitute any legal, rational, or righteous disability on his part to vote. The only justification for his exclusion which will bear the test of reason and of right must be found in considerations of the public peace, welfare, or safety. If the enfranchisement of the negro will impair any of these, then you may exclude him from political authority; if not, how can you justly do it? If according to our Constitution and laws and the spirit of both, the native-born black man is a citizen, how can you consistently withhold from him this franchise when he becomes equal, morally and intellectually, with the white voter; when he fulfills the same conditions you impose on the white voter?

But the freedman is not the only party interested in this question. I consider the political enfranchisement of such of the freedmen as shall become capable of a judicious and intelligent use of the right of suffrage as very materially connected with the welfare of the white man and of the nation. The great argument against emancipation was the danger to be apprehended from the want of homogeneity between the two races. Entertaining the views I have already expressed, I shall not attempt to deny that there was force in the argument. No candid student of history or of the philosophy of human nature can be free from apprehension here. But let me repeat the fact that the deed is done. Slavery has been abolished. It is for the future we are required to provide. Four million colored slaves have been emancipated—forever emancipated. They are in our midst, and we cannot help it. There may be danger in giving to them the elective franchise; but is there not equal if not greater danger in withholding it from them? They may not be homogeneous as voters; but will they be any less so as freedmen deprived of the right to vote? Is there not more danger in the want of homogeneity in the endowment of political rights than in race or color? May they not claim the right to vote at some time? Is there no danger here? If we tax them, will they always peaceably submit to it without representation? Will they always yield unresisting obedience to a Government imposed upon them without their consent? Will they have courage enough to bear arms in our defense, and to die in our defense, as they have done recently, and yet be incapable of exerting equal courage and determination in asserting their own rights, real or imaginary? Remember, they are four millions now—more in numbers than our fathers were when they fought the battles of the Revolution and established our independence as a nation. There may be danger in the direction indicated; but is there not, I repeat, equal if not greater danger in the contrary direction? Sir, I acknowledge again that the question is surrounded with difficulties of the gravest character. I am seeking to discover the way by which we may avoid the most serious of them.

Now, I know that it has been said that any attempt to elevate the negro to an equality with the white man at the polls will certainly provoke a conflict with the white voter; that the white man will submit to no such humiliation. Where is the humiliation? If I am not in error, if our fathers were not in error in enunciating the truth that all just government rests on the consent of the governed, then the right of suffrage would seem to belong to the freedman who is competent to appreciate it, if we compel him to submit to our Constitution and laws. Can there be any humiliation in granting to any and to every human being what he is worthy of receiving or what he is entitled to receive? Nay, sir. The degradation, I think, would consist in withholding it from him. Besides, sir, I suppose the white man would be no more humiliated by the equality of the negro at the ballot-box than he would be by equality at the bar of a court of justice. And yet all are agreed, I believe, to yield to the negro equality of civil rights. And what do these include? All that enters into the security and enjoyment of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." If the negro is to be placed on the same platform with me in all these vital respects, and no degradation is suffered from it, I cannot see either the degradation or any just cause of danger in awarding to him, when he is qualified to receive it, the elective franchise. I am not blind, sir, to the prejudice, not to say passion, which exists in the public mind against the endowing of the negro with this great right; nor will I conceal the apprehensions which I feel myself lest serious difficulties and collisions may ensue. But my argument is, that there is less danger in bestowing the franchise than there is in reserving it. That is the point I make. There ought to be, there is in truth, no good reason why justice to the negro should provoke the hostility of the white man; but there would be reason in the revolt of the former if the latter should be guilty of injustice to him. It may be impossible sometimes to give practical effect to abstract principles of right and justice; but wherever it is possible to do so we ought not to fear evil consequences from doing it. What is right is always expedient if it is practicable.

But, Mr. President, I may as well notice this outcry against negro equality a little more particularly. It is an unmeaning clamor, addressed to the passions and prejudices of the unthinking rather than the respectful consideration of the statesman. Will you, it is frequently asked, will you make the negro equal to the white man? Well, sir, what does that mean? If it were possible to make the negro fully equal to the white man—equal in virtue, in knowledge; equal in all the attributes of our common human nature—why should it not be done? And if he were really and truly made our equal, what would we have to complain of? It would take away the grounds of complaint. And if the elective franchise really had any such wondrous power of transmutation and refinement of the negro, why should it not be bestowed upon him? If the power to vote would really make the negro equal to us, we ought to desire it to be given to him, for it is his inequality with us of which we complain. It would at once remove the apple of discord which has been so long disturbing the peace of the nation. But unfortunately it could have no such effect. Equality of civil and political rights could have but little influence on the social relations of the races.

Why, sir, the negro has an equal right to breathe the same vital air which we do; and he does breathe it equally with us; and it is equally necessary to the life of us all. Does that prove the social equality of the races?

The right of suffrage is the vital principle of republican institutions; but its equal enjoyment by the white man and the black man does not and cannot in anywise change the personal identity of either or affect their social relations. Social relations cannot be regulated by law. They are beyond its power. They are not the legitimate subject of legal regulation. Social equality is a matter of taste, of feeling, and of every man's unfettered sense of propriety. The idea that because a negro can vote he is thereby placed on a social equality with the white man is supremely ridiculous. The idle, vicious, dissolute, dishonest white man votes; am I thereby placed under any obligation to acknowledge his social equality, or any other kind of personal equality? Is he, therefore, my equal? I may not and ought not to associate with him at all, nor will the law compel me to do it. Mr. President, such arguments are intended for other ears than ours. I am willing they shall go to those for whom they are intended, assured that the good sense of the people will readily distinguish between what is artfully addressed to their prejudices and passions and what shall justly challenge their enlightened judgment.

Akin to this class of objection is another even more trivial. I allude to the intermarriage and miscegenation of the races. It admits of the same reply. These also are matters of taste and feeling. And I have this further remark to make about it, that if any white man should ever so far forget all the instincts of nature and all sense of propriety as to intermarry with a negro, I would say, Heaven help the negro! She would certainly have the harder part of the bargain. But how could the elective franchise affect this matter? It imposes no obligation on the races to intermarry. It holds out no inducements to do it. There is no possible relation between the elective franchise and such intermarriage. It leaves the two races, in that respect, precisely where they now are. Moreover, it creates no barrier to the interposition of legislative prohibitions against such intermarriage. Every State, I suppose, has statutory provisions inhibiting the marriage relation between persons within certain degrees of kindred. The same policy might be observed in reference to these races, if the good of society should render it necessary. On the question of illegitimate miscegenation I need only refer to the census. The southern mulatto furnishes a conclusive answer to the argument on miscegenation. There has been brutality in both races. But in proportion as we shall elevate the negro, and increase his self-respect by extending to him the rights of man, these instincts and evidences of lechery and brutality will disappear. In my judgment, one of the most beneficial results of the abolition of slavery will be the decline of miscegenation.

I come now to the examination of the particular provisions of the bill, and the amendments proposed, under consideration, and to the application thereto of the general principles regulating and defining the right of suffrage which I enunciated in the commencement of my remarks. I ask for the reading of my amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment.
MR. WILLEY. This amendment proposes to classify the voters. I think it would be unjust to deprive of this right any who have heretofore exercised it. The amendment extends the right of suffrage to all who have been in the service of the country during the rebellion and have been honorably mustered out, whether they can read or write or not, or whatever other qualifications they may possess. Then the third classification imposes the qualification of residence, payment of taxes, and ability to read and write their names. Is there any valid objection to these restrictions? I think not. There is no exclusion or discrimination on account of color; although, as I have shown, such exclusion or discrimination might well be made, if the welfare or safety of the community required it. But this bill secures perfect equality. The principle, therefore, of negro suffrage is as completely recognized and established as if the enfranchisement was universal.

If I am not in error in supposing that every community may rightfully exclude from political authority all persons whose incorporation in it would imperil its prosperity and security, then I think it is plain that a large proportion of the freedmen of this District should be excluded. Who are these freedmen? Whence do they come? What is their mental and moral condition?

I do not pause on the fact that they are the descendants of tribes who were savages of the worst and lowest type not more than two centuries ago, and that the progress of mankind in civilization in all ages and under the most favorable circumstances has been slow. But I refer to the fact that these freedmen were slaves less than four years ago, the descendants of slaves, having all the servile habits and instincts of the most inveterate slavery, coming from States whose laws forbade their being taught to read, not only the Constitution and history of their country, but also the very oracles of salvation; debased, degraded, as ignorant as it was possible to make them. Are such beings as these the safe depositaries of the political power of any community? I repeat the question, are the peace, order, prosperity, and perpetuity of a State secure in the custody and administration of such citizens as they would make? Would you intrust to them any private business or personal interest of importance? Surely not. How, then, can you ask the people of the District of Columbia to confide to such voters the welfare and safety of its people? Recurring again to the fundamental maxim that all just government rests on the consent of the governed, I inquire, what is consent? It must be an intelligent consent. It implies that the party consenting understands and appreciates what he consents to. Do these poor creatures, I mean the majority of them, know what suffrage is? Can they appreciate the nature and importance of this high privilege? Do they understand our laws and Constitution, or the spirit of our laws and Constitution, or the spirit and principles of civil and political liberty? It is impossible. And yet it is a received and incontrovertible maxim that free institutions are safe only in the hands of an intelligent people. You say they will soon learn. Very well, sir; let them learn. The amendment proposed imposes no such inhibition on them in that respect. Nay, it holds out the strongest motive to mental culture and improvement. And this is one of the advantages of the restrictions imposed in the amendment. It says to the freedmen, you shall vote if you comply with a certain condition, and that condition is only to acquire the fundamental qualification of a voter, namely, intelligence sufficient to appreciate the right and execute it safely and beneficially to the public. Ought they, or any others, to have this great right on any other condition? Surely not.

There are, it seems to me, several advantages in this process of gradual enfranchisement. In the first place, it would avoid the mischief of the sudden influx of so large a number of incapable, ignorant, and irresponsible voters into the District at once. In the second place, it would meet with less hostility from the people. In the third place, if it succeeded, as I hope it will succeed, in demonstrating the capacity of the negro to discharge discreetly this high function of the citizen, it would disarm public preconception and prejudice, and kindly and safely open the way for the enfranchisement at no distant day of the race here, elsewhere, and forever. And in the fourth place, it would obviate the very serious objection raised by the result of the late vote taken in this city to ascertain the sense of the people upon the question. It may be true, sir, that said vote was taken without any lawful authority for it. Nevertheless, it did unquestionably ascertain the fact that at least seven eighths of the people of this District are opposed to unlimited negro suffrage. It is hardly a fair answer to say that Congress is not responsible to the people of the District and has unrestricted power over the subject. I do not controvert the fact. But I do controvert the moral right of Congress to legislate for the people of the District in a manner repugnant to the fundamental principles of our American institutions. Who of us, in our own State, would dare to impose a law upon the people known to be contrary to the will of a clearly ascertained majority of them? Shall I be answered that we are to reflect the will of the whole American people? Then, I ask, what is the will of the American people in this behalf? Let the fact that the fundamental laws of three fourths of the States expressly prohibit the right of suffrage for the negro altogether answer.

And now, Mr. President, I have to say that the late constitutional amendment abolishing slavery in this country did no more than carry into effect the teachings and principles of the great founders of the Republic. Mr. Madison objected to the incorporation of the word "slavery" into the Constitution, because he said he hoped the day would come when there would be no slavery, and he did not wish to leave in an instrument so important anything which would remind posterity that there had ever been any slavery in this country. Emancipation, therefore, was no new conception. In accomplishing it we did only realize the ardent hopes of the great men who established our Government and ordained its fundamental law.

So, too, Mr. President, I may say that by conferring the right of suffrage on the qualified freedman we shall likewise be acting in conformity with the precepts and example of the same illustrious founders of the nation. In the case already referred to of Dred Scott vs. Sanford, the same eminent judge already quoted declared that—

"At the time of the ratification of the Articles of Confederation all native, free-born inhabitants of the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, and North Carolina, though descended from African slaves, were not only citizens of those States, but such of them as had the other necessary qualifications possessed the franchise of electors on equal terms with other citizens."

And we have the authority of Judge Gaston, as may be seen by reference to his opinion in the case of the State vs. Manuel, that in North Carolina these free negroes "claimed and exercised the franchise" until about the year 1835, when the constitution of the State was amended.

In Pennsylvania, the constitution of 1790 guaranteed the right of suffrage to "every freeman over the age of twenty-one years." And if I am not misinformed the free negro of that State continued to vote until the year 1838.

In Maryland, too, I believe, free negroes voted until 1809, and perhaps still later. Maryland had provided, August 4, 1776, that—

"All freemen above twenty-one years of age having a freehold of fifty acres of land in the county in which they offer to vote, and residing therein; and all freemen having property in this State above the value of thirty pounds current money, and having resided in the county in which they offer to vote, shall have a right of suffrage in the election of delegates for such county."

On referring to the declaration of rights and fundamental rules of Delaware, made September 20, 1776, I find the following provision:

"That the right in the people to participate in the Legislature is the foundation of liberty and of all free governments; and for this end all elections ought to be free and frequent; and every free man having sufficient evidence of a permanent common interest with and attachment to the community, has a right of suffrage."

New York, in 1777, adopted the following constitutional provision:

"That every male inhabitant, of full age, who shall have personally resided in one of the counties in this State for six months immediately preceding the day of election shall, at such election, be entitled to vote for representatives of said county in Assembly; if, during the time aforesaid, he shall have been freeholder, possessing a freehold of the value of twenty pounds within the said county, or have rented a tenement therein of the yearly value of forty shillings, and have voted and actually paid taxes to this State." (See constitution of New York, article 2, Revised Statutes, vol. 1, p. 126.)

New Hampshire:

"Every male inhabitant of each town and parish with town privileges in the several counties in this State, of twenty-one years of age and upwards, paying for himself a poll tax, shall have a right, at the annual or other meetings of the inhabitants of said towns and parishes, to be duly warned and holden annually forever in the month of March, to vote in the town or parish wherein he dwells for senators in the county or district whereof he is a member."

Connecticut:

"The qualifications requisite to entitle a person to vote in election of the officers of government are maturity of years, quiet and peaceable behavior, a civil conversation, and forty shillings freehold, or forty pounds personal estate."

New Jersey:

"That all the inhabitants of this colony, of full age, who are worth fifty pounds proclamation money, clear estate in the same, and have resided in the county in which they claim a vote for twelve months immediately preceding the election, shall be entitled to vote for representatives in Council and Assembly, and also for all other public officers that shall be elected by the people of the county at large." (July 2, 1776.)

Pennsylvania, September 28, 1776:

"Every freeman of full age of twenty-one years, having resided in this State for the space of one whole year next before the day of election for representatives, and paid public taxes during that time, shall enjoy the right of an elector."

North Carolina, December 18, 1776:

"That all freemen of the age of twenty-one years, who have been inhabitants of any one county within the State twelve months immediately preceding the day of any election, and possessed of a freehold within the same county of fifty acres of land for six months next before, and at the day of election, shall be entitled to vote for a member of the Senate."

"That all freemen of the age of twenty-one years, who have been inhabitants of any county within the State twelve months immediately preceding the day of any election, and shall have paid public taxes, shall be entitled to vote for members of the House of Commons for the county in which he resides."

I might furnish other proofs of the political enfranchisement of the negro in the earlier days of our history; so that it is true, as I have already stated, that in granting the right of suffrage to the negro now in this District, we are following the precedents of the earlier if not better days of the Republic.

Still, Mr. President, we are warned by Senators of the dangers of introducing different races into the enjoyment of equal political franchises under the same Government. We are told that a conflict between them will inevitably ensue. We are admonished that we are the superior race, and the negro must go down before us. I have not denied our superiority—our superiority intellectually, numerically, physically, morally—our immeasurable superiority. What then have we to fear in a conflict? It is the negro who must go down, if either shall. In relation to predominance of race, therefore, we run no risk. Sir, in my opinion, the question is reduced either to the ballot or to banishment, either to enfranchisement, colonization, or slavery; or if to none of these, then to violent extermination, or to still greater demoralization and gradual extinction.

Sir, the races may not be homogeneous. I have already repeatedly admitted the force of the argument based upon this fact. But has it never occurred to Senators that the existence of the negro among us, in the condition he will occupy deprived of the elective franchise, will render the organization of society still more heterogeneous? According to my conception of the spirit and principles of our institutions, such a relation to the State is utterly illogical and irreconcilable. To be entirely a slave or entirely a citizen is plainly comprehensible. But the hybrid, purgatorial condition, midway between these extremes, involving all the obligations, burdens, and duties, and especially the capabilities of citizenship, and yet excluding the right of suffrage, is a solecism in government. Such a posture of affairs, instead of tending to the conciliation of harmony and peace, would, it seems to me, be the source of inevitable rupture and confusion.

Mr. President, the slavery of the African race in this nation has been the cause of nearly all the discord which has disturbed the public tranquillity. "The irrepressible conflict" has passed from the volume of prophecy into the bloodiest chapter of actual history in the book of time. Slavery has been abolished, not by the will or the wisdom of man, but by the folly of its friends and the providence of God. Shall we superinduce a repetition of the sanguinary history of the last five years in another form? Shall we lay the foundation of another insurrection? I think I may confidently anticipate increasing agitation in this Hall, and in all the councils of the country, and through every avenue reaching the public mind until the political enfranchisement of the negro in this District is accomplished. "The tide has set that way." It may ebb, but it will flow again as ceaseless as the sea. For the sake of the public peace, therefore; to avoid a conflict as irrepressible as that through which we have passed; to prevent the sorrows and desolations of another civil war; to complete the harmony and symmetry of our political system, and reconcile the logical demands of our cherished principles of civil and political liberty by exhibiting a practical recognition of the Declaration of Independence, let the experiment be made. Our race can well afford to make it. It imperils none of our rights. It curtails none of our privileges or power. I cannot appeal to our fears, but it does challenge our magnanimity. If it fail, then the strife will be ended and the question forever settled. If it succeed, who is there so basely recreant to the high behests of his own humanity as to say he would not rejoice?

Sir, we are admonished against the radicalism of the times. Perhaps there is some necessity for the admonition. But let us not be so cautious as to err in the opposite direction. This is an age of progress—progress of ideas, of science, of philosophy, of civilization, of law, of liberty. The truth does not change; the fundamental principles of government as proclaimed by our fathers may not change; but their application may be made more complete. It would be unwise, it would be ludicrous, to stand still, steadfastly adhering to the same policies and measures which were appropriate to the radically different condition of affairs existing a century ago. Slavery is abolished. It is forever prohibited by our organic law. Shall our feelings, our prejudice, our policy, our laws relating to the freedman be the same now as when he was a slave?

"Tempora mutantur, et nos in illis mutamur."

The only worthy interpretation of the tremendous conflict which has just convulsed the nation, but which has been crowned with such resplendent victory, is progress—progress especially in the principles of human freedom. Let us not refuse the providential hand extended to lead us onward and upward toward a more exalted destiny. The great rebellion proclaimed that slavery was to be the chief corner-stone of its treacherous organization. And thus it was a revolt not only against legitimate human authority, but it was also a rebellion against the law of God. The result is announced by a fundamental decree of universal emancipation. This revolution will not stop there. It has awakened a spirit that will never slumber again until all laws and all statesmen shall recognize the authority of the heavenly precept uttered by the divine Lawgiver on the mount more than eighteen hundred years ago in tones which, however gentle and sweet, have sounded along down through the successive centuries, commanding an eager responsive echo from every liberal human heart: "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them;" which was republished, in effect, by the great apostle in the midst of Mars hill: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth;" and which, at last, was essentially incorporated into the great national charter of American independence at Philadelphia. In America this Christian principle of humanity and freedom first received a legal definition and found a practical political recognition. In America let it have its complete, final, and glorious consummation.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. This will come up as the unfinished business to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in the consideration of executive business the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 27, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CUYAHOGA.

Mr. EGGLESTON. At the request of my colleague, [Mr. SPALDING,] who is absent, I move to take from the Speaker's table joint resolution (S. No. 113) for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Cuyahoga river over and upon the Government piers at Cleveland, Ohio.

No objection being made, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. EGGLESTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. LATIAM, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed twenty-five hundred extra copies of report No. 66, of the House Committee on Public Lands, on the subject of the sale of mineral lands, fifteen hundred for said committee and one thousand for the members of this House.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD, EASTERN DIVISION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution explanatory of an act entitled an act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864.

It refers to the bill passed yesterday, and I have prepared it in exact pursuance of the amendment which I proposed to the bill yesterday, and which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] said would not be objected to, inasmuch as it contained precisely what he stated to be the true construction of the bill then passed.

Mr. STEVENS. Is that the road that begins at Kansas City and runs west?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is the explanatory bill of which I gave notice yesterday.

Mr. STEVENS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I think the bill better be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let it be read.

The bill was read at length. It provides that nothing contained in the act described in the title of this act shall be so construed as to enlarge the grant of land made to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, by the acts of July 1, 1862, and of July 2, 1864; nor to entitle said company to any greater amount of bonds of the United States than it would have been entitled to receive on the construction of its road from the mouth of the Kansas river to the point of junction with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, as indicated by the map heretofore filed by said company in the Interior Department; nor in any manner to interfere with the right of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to receive the bonds of the United States provided for in said acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, to aid in the construction of the road and telegraph line of said last-mentioned company on its entire line from Omaha to the point where it may meet and join the road of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, of California.

Mr. STEVENS. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] desires to put this bill on its passage now?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir; I do so desire.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I must object, because it is a long bill, and contains things which I do not understand.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] seeks to enforce his objection I desire to say one word in explanation of this bill. I have prepared this bill in accordance with the statement made yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the debate on the bill which was passed amending the Pacific railroad act. My bill differs in no respect from the construction given yesterday to that bill by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is drawn in precise accord with what that gentleman stated he would be willing to have passed in a separate bill, explanatory of the bill passed yesterday, so as to prevent the construction being placed upon it which I stated I feared would be placed upon it. It does not change in any particular the statement of construction made by the gentleman to the House.

Mr. DAWES. I would inquire of the gentleman from Iowa if this bill contains the amendment which he proposed yesterday.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It contains the amendment I offered yesterday with a modification, which modification relates to the land grant. The amendment I offered yesterday—

Mr. STEVENS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] that he had better not waste time now in discussing the merits of this bill. I think this bill had better be printed and go upon the docket, so that we can examine it thoroughly, as my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] will object to anything short of that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] in the language which he used yesterday concerning his bill, "That would be sending it to its grave." Now, I wish to explain the difference between this bill and the amendment I offered yesterday.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] if he has forgotten what he said yesterday.

Mr. STEVENS. Not a word.

Mr. DAWES. Then the gentleman deliberately departs from what he yesterday pledged himself to do.

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; and the gentleman rejected my offer and put this matter upon a fair issue, which has been decided.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman's offer was not that we should vote for his measure; but he said if that bill passed he would help us put through an explanatory act.

Mr. STEVENS. I said if the gentlemen would withdraw their opposition I would go for such a bill. But the gentlemen refused to do that, and placed their question upon the cast of the die.

Mr. DAWES. Then I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to oppose this explanatory act, which yesterday he said he would be willing to vote for, simply because we voted against his bill.

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; but I do not feel myself bound to accept this proposition, because gentlemen did not accept the offer I made them. But I have said that if this bill is reported and printed I will examine it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to state the difference between the bill I now propose and the amendment which I offered yesterday. In the first clause of the amendment which I proposed yesterday it was provided that no mineral lands should be included in the grant thereby made, but the same should be reserved to the United States. My construction of the bill which passed yesterday was that it made a new grant of land, and I desired to reserve the mineral lands. The gentleman from Pennsylvania insisted that it made no new grant of land. I have simply provided in this bill that the grant of lands made to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, shall not be enlarged by the terms of the bill which passed yesterday. Now, sir, I wish to read what the gentleman said yesterday in reference to this bill—

Mr. STEVENS. I do not like to interrupt the gentleman, but I wish to inquire whether, after objection being made, this discussion is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] stated, as the Chair understood, that he waived his objection. If he objects now, the bill is not before the House. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. STEVENS. I do.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment that I may submit a proposition.

Mr. STEVENS. I will hear the gentleman's proposition privately, but I do not think it necessary now to consume time—

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I was about to propose that the bill shall go over for the present, shall be printed, and be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. STEVENS. I insist on my objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Very well; that is keeping faith.

The SPEAKER. The bill, being objected to, is not before the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 158) providing for the settlement of the accounts of W. H. Hamrick.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 613) entitled "An act to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes," with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 127) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867," had disagreed to the amendments of the House to other amendments, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. SHERMAN, WILSON, and YATES.

The message further announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 145) entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph, had asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. POMEROY, BROWN, and RIDDLE.

PAYMENT OF KENTUCKY MILITIA.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of joint resolution S. No. 94, providing for the payment of certain Kentucky militia forces, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF KANSAS MILITIA.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of bill S. No. 359, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of War to settle the claims of the State of Kansas for services of the militia called out by the Governor of that State, upon the requisition of Major General Curtis, the commander of the United States forces in that State, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

Mr. ROLLINS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the bill remaining undisposed of at the adjournment yesterday, Senate bill No. 285, granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. It appears by the Globe that this motion was made both by the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING.] As the Journal credits the motion to the gentleman from Indiana the Chair will regard it as having been made by him.

Mr. STEVENS. I trust that that bill will be allowed to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent, as the motion to refer is pending. If the gentleman from Indiana withdraws his motion, the bill may be passed over informally; but if the gentleman persists in his motion it must be put.

Mr. STEVENS. I trust that the gentleman will withdraw the motion and allow the bill to lie on the table for the present.

Mr. JULIAN. With the understanding that the bill shall not be called up till we have an opportunity to examine it, I withdraw the motion to refer.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed over informally, remaining upon the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

MICHAEL BARRON.

Mr. ALLISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Michael Barron; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

The SPEAKER. The first business of the morning hour is the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes; which was under consideration at the expiration of the morning hour yesterday.

The pending question was upon the following amendments offered yesterday by Mr. HUMPHREY:

Amend section two, in line seven, by inserting after the word "district" the words "where he or they shall suspect there are goods, wares, or merchandise thereon, subject to duty, or which shall have been introduced into the United States in any manner contrary to law."

Amend section four by striking out the words "and the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution, to be judged of by the court before which the prosecution is held."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, when interrupted by the expiration of the morning hour, I was engaged in the endeavor to direct the attention of the House to the propriety and justice of striking out the last three lines of section four of this bill.

I have heard but two reasons assigned for incorporating in the bill this provision. One of the reasons stated is that this provision is designed to guard against a species of crime which requires unusual stringency in the law. But, sir, so far as regards the question presented by this section, I undertake to say that less stringency is required than in almost any provision of criminal law. Why? Because the offense of smuggling can be more readily established by the prosecution than almost any other. All that is necessary to establish a prima facie case of smuggling, under the present rules of the criminal law, is to show that the property has come into our country without having passed through the proper offices and paid the proper duties. These facts can be established by simply calling on the stand the officers themselves, and then you have what is known in the criminal law as a prima facie case made against the prisoner, one which carries the prosecution to the jury. Then the party may, or may not, as he sees fit, come in and give evidence of his good character, or other evidence tending to show the fact that he had nothing to do with smuggling in the case charged. The reason assigned falls to the ground, because there is no necessity for it.

Again, there is another reason which has been assigned that there should be some more stringent provision in this law because of the necessity to put a stop by the terrors of the criminal law to crimes of this character.

Mr. Speaker, when the State and Federal Governments have found the present rules of evidence adequate to the prevention and punishment of all crimes, treason and murder included, it can hardly be supposed that any modification of those rules is necessary to prevent smuggling, and certainly not such an amendment as is proposed in this bill; by this provision the present rules of evidence are wholly revolutionized; instead of requiring the Government to prove the guilt of the accused beyond "reasonable doubt" and to the "satisfaction of the jury," it merely requires such evidence to be given by the Government as will "satisfy the court" that there is "reason to suspect" the prisoner is guilty, and then he is required to prove his innocence or stand convicted. I see no necessity growing out of the increase of smuggling or any other class of crime that will justify such a law as this.

It is a well-known fact that for the last twenty or thirty years the whole current of proceedings in reference to criminal law has been in the direction of enlightened action under it. In the State of Massachusetts they became so liberal to the prisoner a few years ago that they passed a law for him to come upon the stand and testify himself. And this subject has been discussed in all of the States of the Union. Now, instead of going in the direction of reform, instead of following in the line of increased intelligence, we seem to be going back to the days when a man, after he was arrested for a crime, was put upon the rack to convict himself. I say that this is a step in that direction instead of a step in the way of progress and enlightened legislation on this question.

I now desire to call the attention of the House to the other amendment, as I am upon the floor. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section two, line seven, by inserting after the word "district" the words "where he or they shall suspect there are goods, wares, or merchandise thereon subject to duty, or which shall have been introduced into the United States contrary to law."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. Speaker, this act authorizes an increase to a very great extent of the subordinate officers connected with the custom-house. It authorizes the collector and other officers to make appointments themselves; so the result will be they will appoint men for the purpose of performing the specific duty not of that high character of the man who would occupy the position of collector or deputy collector; and under the third section these men are authorized to arrest any person and examine his trunks and vehicle for the purpose of seeing whether there is any property which has been smuggled. But the officer can do this only where he has reason to believe the person or carriage has goods liable to duty. I think that is at least an amount of caution which ought to be placed in this bill when we are to put such immense powers into the hands of such men as will doubtless have the privilege of exercising them.

But the second section is a new one. Its object is to extend the extraordinary powers of search and seizure of vessels, and it does extend those powers to all vessels in every port of the United States without requiring that these men should have reason to believe or suspect that there is something on board that has been smuggled.

Take, if you please, the port of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or Buffalo; any of these officers may go upon a vessel that is already loaded and just upon the point of leaving on its regular trip and stop it. If the man who has command of the vessel refuses to stop he is liable to be indicted and punished severely. And not only may they stop the vessel, but they are authorized to call to their aid all the powers of the Government for the purpose of stopping it. They may use a revenue-cutter and call in the aid necessary to stop that vessel; and they may detain it while the officers are making an examination of every single package on board.

Now, I submit that we ought not to do an act which shall put it in the hands of irresponsible men at every port of the country to embarrass the commerce under the simple pretense of stopping smuggling. The evil would most undoubtedly outweigh any good that could possibly come from any such provision. Let this provision have the same check and guard that the provision has which authorizes these men to arrest an individual. Because it is a thousand times more important that we should control these men in the exercise of a power which stops not only an individual, but stops hundreds and thousands of them when they are just ready to leave one of the ports of this country for another or for a foreign port; which stops a vessel under circumstances where the damage may be hundreds of dollars per hour. These men should have some reason to believe that there is something there which warrants them in stopping the vessel. The interests of commerce imperatively demand that at least this safeguard should be incorporated into this section.

I am aware that, under the cry that there must be more efficient legislation for the purpose of stopping smuggling, we are liable to do just what was done once before by Congress, when there was a great outcry made in relation to the gambling in gold in the city of New York. This House, in a spasm of indignation, undertook by law to settle the question, but in less than ten days thereafter it saw fit to unsettle it. It saw what was true; that the interests of trade and commerce were not to be regulated by this sort of legislation.

One great and important object of legislation is to protect and encourage the interests of trade; and now, because there happens to be just at this time some pretense that there is a necessity of a little more stringent legislation, is it proper or expedient that we should go to work to overthrow the well-settled principles which every man understands must be maintained in order that those interests may be protected? I am in favor of making this law as efficient as possible without infringing upon the rights of citizens, of innocent citizens. Let us do no act that shall violate the principles upon which those rights are maintained and preserved. In addition, let us see to it that the interests of commerce, the great interests of the country, shall in no way be violated simply in answer to an unreasoning cry, an unreasoning effort to get a more efficient law for the purpose of punishing a trivial crime.

I believe that these two amendments ought, for the protection of the rights of the citizen and for the protection of the interests of commerce, to be incorporated into this bill. I hope that the action of the House may be such as will at least do thus much toward protecting those interests.

Mr. ELIOT obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. ELIOT. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-seven minutes of the morning hour remaining.

Mr. HALE. I will not occupy over ten minutes, and probably not more than five minutes.

Mr. ELIOT. Well, take five minutes.

Mr. HALE. I ask the attention of the House for a very few minutes. This is a bill which this House ought to understand so far as regards the effect of the amendment proposed by my colleague from the Buffalo district, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] Section four provides for certain penalties for smuggling, consisting of forfeiture of goods, fines, and imprisonment. Its provisions, although stringent, are undoubtedly proper, except that it closes with what seems to be a very extraordinary provision, which my colleague from the Buffalo district proposes to strike out. I think it ought to be stricken out. It provides that in a criminal prosecution where a man is subjected to forfeiture of property, fine, and imprisonment, the burden of proof shall lie, not upon the prosecution, where by all the rules of law it is always placed, but upon the defendant where "probable cause" is shown.

Now, "probable cause" does not mean a prima facie case. If it did there would be no need of this provision, for if a prima facie case is made out the burden of proof always rests on the defendant. But "probable cause" has a fixed, definite, and technical meaning. It means such a ground of suspicion as will protect the complainant from the charge of false imprisonment or malicious prosecution. I cannot believe that this House is prepared to adopt a rule which will say that when a man is arrested upon suspicion—not upon evidence sufficient to convict him, but evidence sufficient to raise a suspicion merely—the burden of proof shall be thrown upon him. I do not think that such a provision would add to the protection of the revenue of the country. I am in favor of making this bill just as stringent and efficient as it can be made with proper regard to the rights of all parties who may be implicated under it; but I do not think there ever was a case where crime was suppressed by reversing the ordinary rules of law. I hope that the amendment of my colleague will be adopted.

Mr. ELIOT. It is something to be able to say, in reporting a bill containing so many important provisions, that a gentleman who has examined every section as carefully as the gentleman from the Buffalo district has done, has been able to find but two provisions in it which he desires to correct. I understand that there are two amendments now before the House offered by the gentleman from New York, both of which he has vindicated in the speech which he has just concluded.

The first of the amendments relates to the second section of the bill, and the second to the fourth section of the bill. The gentleman from Buffalo first discussed the amendment to the fourth section, and I will say a few words upon that subject. The question is not whether the provision of this bill is or is not in exact accordance with the laws of evidence prevailing hitherto in criminal cases. That is not the point. If we were administering this law, and in the capacity of judges should be called upon to determine questions of evidence, it might arise, and of course we ought to be controlled by the rules applicable to evidence in criminal cases. But Congress is not controlled by any considerations of that sort. The question we have to determine is not whether the provision is or is not in accordance with what has been heretofore, but whether the provision is not such a one as, under the circumstances of the case, ought to be incorporated in a law upon the subject.

Now, this bill was reported by the Committee on Commerce in the Senate and was subjected there to very careful deliberation. And no one provision of the bill called to itself more examination than the one which is now the subject of discussion here. And the various reasons which have been stated as properly urged against a provision of this sort were urged and answered in the Senate. In the discussion upon that question in the Senate, as I find by reference to the Globe, a short argument was made by an honorable Senator who has been Secretary of the Treasury—a gentleman whose public life is drawing to a close; I refer to the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. GUTHRIE.] In advocating this bill, and in giving the reasons which induced him to vote for it with the provision now contained in it, he states the circumstances under which he was placed, when Secretary of the Treasury, in regard to this matter of smuggling. Without reading the argument that he makes, I will say that he stated that in his judgment it was needful that stringent provisions should be embraced in the law if it was desired to prevent smuggling. If members do not want to prevent smuggling, that is one thing. Now, I am perfectly ready to admit that where smugglers are brought before the courts, your laws must be plain, must be explicit, must be strong, or else the talent, the ingenuity, and the eloquence of gentlemen whom they employ, will be sufficient to override the provisions of the law.

But it is said that you must not put upon the smuggler the duty of proving, of showing, of explaining where he got the merchandise which has not been entered in the custom-house. Why should he not explain? The Government finds in the hands of some man a large amount of merchandise which has not been entered in the custom-house. He is prosecuted as a smuggler, and proof is produced that the merchandise in his possession was there without the payment of duty. But the learned gentlemen who may be employed to defend him, come forward and say, "What of it all? To be sure the Government charges that these goods have not been entered regularly, and have not paid duties. What of it all? That is not enough. A man is to be held innocent until you prove him guilty. Prove where he got his goods; prove how he came by them; prove that they were not entered in the custom-house. Ay; show more than that; show that he received the goods knowing that they had not been entered."

That is the way they will talk. Now, sir, the proof has been put in on the part of the Government. But the counsel for the defendant calls upon the prosecuting officer to show where the goods came from, to show facts that there is but one man can show, and that man is the defendant. Now, I want to know why the defendant should not be called upon to show that fact.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] says that "probable cause" means more than "prima facie case." It means more, or it does not mean so much, according to the stand-point that may be taken. Where the words "probable cause" are used in connection with proceedings in rem, where it is ordinarily found; or where the words "probable cause" are used in order to justify an officer for having made a complaint, as is the case in many of our legal statutes; or where those words are used upon a question to determine whether or not a party shall be subjected to costs; in those cases, and in others like them, it may be that what the gentleman from New York terms "suspicion" merely will be enough. But that, I apprehend, is not the meaning of the words here. It may not, perhaps, mean that there shall be a full prima facie case made out, although upon that point I am not prepared to yield to the suggestions made by the gentleman from New York, from the Buffalo district, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] There is to be proof that the property is in the hands of the party charged; there is to be proof that the property has not been entered in the custom-house.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ELIOT. For what purpose?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I merely want to ask a question.

Mr. ELIOT. Very well; I will yield for a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This language is the precise language used in the law under which civil proceedings are now administered, and the language has come to have a fixed judicial construction. Now, if we as a legislative body employ this very language in a bill, will the gentleman pretend that the court administering our law would not say that it should be construed as the courts have hitherto construed it?

Mr. ELIOT. The next time my learned friend appears in court to defend a smuggler, he will be the very first man to contend that it could not have been that the words "probable cause" in this connection meant that kind of probable cause which has been required in questions of costs or probable cause of suit.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to ask the gentleman this question: if the phrase which is used means more than is commonly understood by the technical phrase "probable cause," if it means, in other words, a prima facie case, what necessity is there for this provision? Where a prima facie case is made out, is not the burden of proof always upon the defendant?

Mr. ELIOT. That involves the question, what is meant by the "burden of proof?" Some very good lawyers believe that there is a very loose way of talking about "burden of proof." In a criminal proceeding, what is fairly called the "burden of proof" does not shift. The burden of proof is on the Government wholly and throughout, and when all the evidence is in, the question is, "Has the Government proved the case?"

In the course of the trial of a case there may be proved facts which must be explained, or which, if not explained, will justify the jury in finding a verdict of conviction. In such a case it is sometimes said by the profession the burden of proof shifts. That, I suppose, is what my friend from Pennsylvania means. For instance, a man is charged with having stolen a watch; the owner of the watch comes upon the stand and swears that he had the watch an hour before it was found upon the defendant; that he never parted with it willingly. The defendant, the watch having been found in his hands, is charged with stealing it. Under these circumstances he must explain how it came into his possession. It would be said ordinarily that the burden of proof is on him to explain that matter. But that mode of speaking is not correct. The burden of proof is throughout on the Government to sustain the charge. But there are circumstances which, though not amounting in themselves to direct and conclusive evidence, raise such a presumption of guilt that, if unexplained by the defendant, they justify the jury in convicting.

Mr. THAYER. I will ask the gentleman, why not leave the rules of evidence in cases arising under this bill just where you leave the rules of evidence in the case which he has put by way of illustration? Why should we not apply in the cases arising under this bill the same rules of evidence that are applied with reference to the crime of larceny or the crime of receiving stolen goods? Why should we not leave these cases to be determined according to the general rules of law which regulate criminal trials instead of undertaking to make a special code of rules for the offense of smuggling?

Mr. ELIOT. That is just what this does. This brings the smuggler into the same category with the man who is charged with having stolen a watch. Let me tell the gentleman that in this case of smuggling the facts are not of the same kind as those in the prosecution of a man for stealing a watch, because there the owner of the watch is on hand to identify his property. Here the owner of the property is not present, and the Government has it not in its power to show the fact. The only object of the provision is, on probable cause shown, to require the defendant to explain how it was he came by the goods which are the subject of charge. It is to put him where the man charged with stealing a watch is put when the owner of the property is on the stand identifying it, and showing he never parted with it willingly.

Mr. HALE. Is not that the law now?

Mr. ELIOT. My learned friend from the Buffalo district [Mr. HUMPHREY] will be able to say that is not the law as administered in smuggling trials.

Mr. HALE. It is the law, notwithstanding.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to say, with the indulgence of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as I cannot have the privilege of speaking when he has closed, in all cases the question of guilt may be made out by circumstantial evidence, and the jury is at perfect liberty to convict if in their judgment the circumstances give rise to a fair presumption of guilt. But that is not the proposition in the clause which the gentleman from New York moved to strike out—the proposition in that clause to make it incumbent on the judge to charge the defendant is guilty unless he has thrown off what it is proposed to put upon him, the burden of proof. It is to convict him by operation of law, and not to leave it as a question of fact for the jury to determine the circumstances of the case. I want to ask the gentleman why the rules of evidence applied to all other criminal cases should not be applied to cases arising under the law now the subject of construction.

Mr. ELIOT. Without stopping to answer the first part of the gentleman's remarks, I will answer his last question here. Assuming this is a change to the extent he states, I tell him the time has come, if the smuggling laws are to be enforced, when there must be to that extent that change of the law. I tell him the men who are carrying on smuggling are men of skill. It takes skill to make a smuggler. It is a profitable business. The men engaged in it employ the best talent at the bar, and the handsome, honest face of my friend from Buffalo, and the earnest and enthusiastic eloquence which he can employ, will be all brought to bear in favor of the men who violate the law. It is more than we can do, if I am to rely upon the evidence which comes to me from the Treasury Department, to enforce the laws in reference to smuggling on the present rules of evidence. So that if it be as I think it is, not to the extent claimed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if it be the provision in this section does to a certain extent change it, I say, first, Congress has the right to do it; and second, because for the reason given we are called upon to this extent to do it.

Mr. HALE. Pardon me a single suggestion. If the principle the gentleman now contends for is the one sought to be established it may be better done by inserting two legal maxims: first, that all men are to be presumed guilty until they prove themselves innocent; and second, it is better that ninety-nine innocent ones should suffer than one guilty should escape.

Mr. ELIOT. That is not as bright as my friend would suppose.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is very bright, but it conforms to the provisions of the gentleman's bill, which I do not think bright.

Mr. ELIOT. The law will be the same on that point as before; a man is to be held innocent until proved to be guilty. When facts are alleged which the Government cannot prove, but which he can show, which the Government cannot make plain, but which he can but will not make plain, then the effect is simply to put the burden which those facts should put upon him. Now, I have desired to call the previous question, and I will say this: if the House desires further debate upon the bill let it vote down the previous question. I want to have decisive action upon the bill. This provision ought, I believe, to be put in it; but if the House is unwilling to second the previous question I shall acquiesce.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I appeal to the gentleman not at this moment to insist upon calling the previous question, but to allow me to offer an amendment. I understood him to say on yesterday that if anybody had objections to this bill he would allow an opportunity for amendment and correction.

Mr. ELIOT. I beg pardon; I did not say any such thing. What I said was in reference to the wishes of my colleague on the committee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to say that I have an amendment which I am anxious to offer, and I wish to state my reasons for proposing it. If the gentleman will hear my reasons, then he may make his decision in regard to allowing me to offer it.

Mr. ELIOT. I will allow it to be reported.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. ELDRIDGE, as follows:

Amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause of section twenty, and inserting "that section four, of chapter thirty-one, of an act concerning the navigation of the United States, approved March 1, 1817, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. ELIOT. I cannot consent to that.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not think the gentleman comprehends the force of this amendment, and I ask to be allowed to state the reasons for and the effect of it. That section, to which this is amendatory, operates very injuriously against the western producer in the transportation of wheat from the western States to the East. We desire that all vessels engaged in the carrying business, without regard to nationality, may compete for this trade and business. This will prevent the agreement by American vessels upon the rate of charges and allow competition in favor of the producer of wheat.

Mr. ELIOT. I think the gentleman cannot have read section four of the act of 1817. By that section it is provided that no goods shall be transported from one port of the United States to another in foreign vessels unless those vessels shall leave a part of their cargo at one port and carry the rest of it to the other. This section which the gentleman would strike out simply provides—

"That if any goods, wares, or merchandise shall, at any port or place in the United States on the northern, northeastern, or northwestern frontiers thereof, be laden upon any vessel belonging wholly or in part to a subject or subjects of a foreign country or countries, and shall be taken thence to a foreign port or place, to be reladen and reshipped to any other port or place in the United States on said frontiers, either by the same or any other vessel, foreign or American, with intent to evade the provisions of the fourth section of 'the act concerning the navigation of the United States,' approved March 1, 1817, the said goods, wares, and merchandise shall, on their arrival at such last-named port or place, be seized and forfeited to the United States, and the vessel shall pay a tonnage duty of fifty cents per ton on her admeasurement."

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman is quite mistaken in supposing that I have not read this section. I have it now by me and desire to have it read for the information of the House.

Mr. ELIOT. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope it will not be seconded. The provision I have referred to will operate very oppressively upon the wheat-growers of the West.

Mr. ELIOT. It keeps foreign vessels out. The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order; the gentleman from Massachusetts has himself moved the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. It prevents all competition and allows certain lines of vessels to establish just such freights as they please.

On seconding the demand for the previous question no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. ELIOT and ELDRIDGE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 42.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was first upon the first amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREY, as follows:

Page 5, section four, line thirteen, strike out all after the word "court" to the end of the section, as follows:

And the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution, to be judged of by the court before which the prosecution is held.

Mr. SPALDING demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 58, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the second amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREY, to amend section two of the bill, in line seven, by inserting after the word "district" the words "where he or they shall suspect there are goods, wares, or merchandise thereon, subject to duty, or which shall have been introduced into the United States in any manner contrary to law."

Mr. ELIOT. That amendment would destroy the bill. That is all that the law now requires. I call for tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELIOT and HUMPHREY were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 59.

Mr. ELDRIDGE called for the yeas and nays, and for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ELIOT. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LEBLOND. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will yield long enough for the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] to be offered. There is a reason for the adoption of that amendment which I think will be satisfactory to the judgment of the gentleman.

Mr. ELIOT. When does the morning hour expire?

The SPEAKER. In one minute.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I hope the gentleman will not ask me to yield. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers on seconding the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LEBLOND and O'NEIL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes seventy-four, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put, being upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 100, nays 33, not voting 49; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Dolos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ladd, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Marvin, McClure, McKee, McKuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Price, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stillwell, Taylor, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—100.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Bergen, Boyer, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hogan, Humphrey, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Thornton, Trimble, Robert E. Van Horn, and Winfield—33.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Culver, Darling, Deffrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Earnsworth, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hill, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Ketcham, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McIndoe, Newell, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rogers, Schenck, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Taber, Francis Thomas, Van Arman, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, and Wright—49.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 179) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory;

An act (H. R. No. 391) to create the office of surveyor general in Idaho Territory; and

An act (H. R. No. 145) granting land to A. M. Jess, of Josephine county, Oregon.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire to say to the House that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois,] is unfortunately confined to his bed by indisposition. He hopes to be able to come here in the course of three or four or five days. He has sent to me, desiring that I should say to the House that he has two or three bills in his charge, and that he hopes the House will give him leave to report them when he is able to be in his seat. I ask leave for him to do so, say this day week, if he is able to be here.

No objection was made, and leave was granted accordingly.

REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION COMMITTEE.

Mr. BLOW. I was absent from the city at the time the joint committee on reconstruction made their report. I ask permission of the House to sign my name to that report.

No objection was made, and leave was granted accordingly.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. DUMONT. I rise for the purpose of asking that the Journal may be corrected. I voted yesterday in the affirmative upon the bill in relation to the Smoky Hill Fork railroad. My name is not so recorded on the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected. The response of the gentleman was not heard by the Clerk yesterday.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I am ready now to report from the Committee of Ways and Means upon the amendments of the Senate to what is commonly known as the tax bill. There are over six hundred and sixty amendments of the Senate to this bill, many of which are merely verbal. The Committee of Ways and Means, in their recommendations, have endeavored to follow the expressed opinions of the House as indicated by their votes. If any gentleman will indicate the amendments upon which a separate vote is desired, I will ask to have that amendment reserved for a separate vote. I will say, in the first place, that the Senate have reduced the tax upon cotton from five cents to two cents per pound. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I ask a separate vote on that amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask a separate vote upon the amendment of the Senate in relation to the tax upon street railroads.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state some of the amendments, by numbers, and the subjects to which they relate, so that members may understand them. The two hundred and seventy-sixth amendment of the Senate is in relation to gas companies. The Senate's amendment proposes to allow the gas companies to add the tax to the price charged; while the Committee of Ways and Means thought that was just, the House, it will be remembered, thought otherwise, and struck it out. The Committee of Ways and Means therefore recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. THAYER. I call for a separate vote on that amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. The three hundred and twelfth amendment is in relation to ready-made clothing. The House fixed the tax at one per cent.; the Senate proposes a tax of two per cent. The committee recommend a non-concurrence. I ask a separate vote upon that amendment.

The three hundred and twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate is in relation to fine-cut short tobacco. The Committee of Ways and Means think that is a mistake, and recommend a non-concurrence.

The three hundred and twenty-seventh amendment reduces the tax upon smoking-tobacco from twenty cents to fifteen cents per pound. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence. I suppose my friend from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] will be opposed to the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask a separate vote on that amendment, and if necessary I shall call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORRILL. The three hundred and twenty-ninth amendment of the Senate is in relation to the tax on cigars. The Committee of Ways and Means are very decidedly of the opinion that the amendment of the Senate is a proper one. But out of deference to the expressed opinion of the House the committee recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. STEVENS. I shall want a separate vote on that amendment. And I hope that when the committee of conference comes to be appointed some member of the House opposed to that tax will be placed on the committee.

The SPEAKER. No committee of conference has yet been asked for or ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. In relation to mowers, reapers, and various other articles made free of tax by the action of the House, they were finally left on the free list by the Senate, though the Finance Committee recommended otherwise. They remain in the same condition they were in when the bill left the House. I believe I have now mentioned all the material amendments. There are some amendments in regard to which the Committee of Ways and Means recommend non-concurrence for the purpose of subjecting them to a more critical examination, they being long sections and introducing new matter which should have careful consideration. We have recommended non-concurrence in some instances where it is very possible that on further examination we shall be ready and willing to concur.

Mr. WARD. I desire to have a separate vote upon the amendment of the Senate to section sixty-one of this bill, with reference to the disqualification of persons interested in the manufacture of tobacco from holding certain offices, such as assessor and collector.

Mr. STEVENS. I will ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] if the Senate did not make some amendment in regard to postponing the ten per cent. tax upon banks.

Mr. MORRILL. They did; and the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will permit an amendment to be offered, postponing the tax for one year.

Mr. MORRILL. I should prefer that no amendment should be made to the bill by the House, for that would send it back to the Senate. But any action of the House upon the Senate amendment would of course be regarded as instructions to the committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. In what way would it be instruction?

Mr. MORRILL. If the House should vote to non-concur, we shall understand that it is the wish of the House to have the time extended.

Mr. STEVENS. With that understanding, I will move to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate which extends for one month the tax on the circulation of the State banks. I think it ought to be extended for one year. If the House non-concur with the amendment of the Senate, it will be understood to be because the House desires a longer time.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has stricken out all, or nearly all, that was done in relation to incomes. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend non-concurrence with the action of the Senate on this subject.

Mr. ANCONA. I desire to say that I wish a separate vote to be taken on this question.

Mr. PAINE. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Vermont whether any change has been made with reference to the tax on agricultural implements.

Mr. MORRILL. The provisions of the bill on that subject remain as fixed by the House.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire to have a separate vote on the Senate amendment in regard to the transfer of suits from State courts to United States courts.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, has a separate vote been demanded upon the question of taxing the circulation of the State banks?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has made some remarks upon that subject, explaining why he asks the House to non-concur; but he has not demanded a separate vote.

Mr. PRICE. Then I demand a separate vote.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Understanding that the Committee of Ways and Means have reported in favor of non-concurrence with the Senate amendment relating to the transfer of suits, I withdraw the call for a separate vote.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Perhaps the House would better understand the action of the committee if the chairman would make the general announcement that in no instance, where the House overrode the committee on the bill as originally reported, has the committee taken the responsibility of overriding the House.

Mr. KASSON. Having demanded a separate vote upon the question of the tax on cotton, I desire now to say that I have learned from the committee that it is the intention to treat the question in a liberal spirit in the committee of conference; and therefore, after consultation with those who concur with me in opposition to the tax as fixed by the House, I withdraw my demand for a separate vote.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I renew the demand.

Mr. HART. I ask a separate vote on the amendment in relation to cigars.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether on every question upon which the House overruled the committee the committee now ask a separate vote.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say in reply to the gentleman that the general purpose of the committee was to conform their action to the votes of the House. The committee's recommendations to non-concur will be found to embrace every important question in reference to which the Senate and the House differ. I have indicated every important question upon which such difference exists.

Mr. WARD. Is it in order now, Mr. Speaker, to move non-concurrence in one of the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman can demand a separate vote on any proposition; and that will raise the question whether the House shall concur or non-concur.

Mr. WARD. I wish to suggest to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that he ask the House to non-concur in the amendment proposed by the Senate to section sixty-one.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot do that, because I am in favor of concurring.

Mr. WARD. I call for a separate vote, then, on the Senate amendment to section sixty-one.

Mr. MORRILL. If all the amendments have been specified on which gentlemen desire separate votes I will call for the previous question.

Mr. BUCKLAND. I desire to renew the demand for a separate vote on the amendment in reference to cotton.

The SPEAKER. That has already been reserved and will be the first vote taken.

Mr. ANCONA. I desire to know whether the demand for a separate vote in reference to ready-made clothing comprehends all the Senate amendments on that subject. If not, I ask for separate vote on the amendment of the Senate increasing the tax from one to two per cent. ad valorem on ready-made clothing, &c., and a separate vote on the amendment, in reference to the exemption from tax, striking out "work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000," and inserting "annual product does not exceed $2,000." I ask that separate votes shall be taken on those two amendments.

The SPEAKER. Senate amendment number three hundred and twelve striking out one per cent. and inserting two, is the only one which has been reserved.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand a separate vote on the other amendment to which I have referred. There is an amendment also in the next section in regard to ready-made clothing on which I demand a separate vote.

Mr. MORRILL. I demand the previous question on all the amendments of the Senate.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, the first and perhaps most important item to be voted on is that in reference to the tax on cotton. The House by a large and positive vote fixed it at five cents per pound; the Senate have amended by reducing it from five to two cents per pound, and from what I have seen and heard there is a wide variance between the House and the Senate on that subject. I trust, however, the House will not feel disposed to yield its position, as it appears to me that a tax of five cents, if we have any, is not too much. I would much prefer the tax to remain as the House proposed, but at all events I hope we shall not consent to anything less than three or four cents per pound. I believe the reduction proposed by the Senate, besides working a great injury to our industrial interests, would make too great a reduction in the revenue of the country. If we are to have the trouble of collecting it, it is far better that it should be as much as the House originally proposed. It will make a sad hole in the revenue to reduce the tax from five to three cents. I trust the House will feel disposed to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. Will it not make a sadder hole in the prices to the consumers in this country if the tax should be added to the cost of the goods consumed in this country made of cotton?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; I think it will add largely to the wealth of the United States, give southern industry present profitable employment, and add a large item to our export trade, which is greatly in want of something to pay for the foreign goods. Our people seem determined to purchase at any price. At the present time we have nothing except gold which foreign nations are willing to take. They will take our bonds, not at par, but only at sixty-six cents on the dollar. If we can pass a measure of this kind we shall in a short time increase our manufacture of cotton yarns and other fabrics so as to double our exports. I think it will materially increase the wealth and better the financial condition of the country, and that without injury to anybody.

Mr. RAYMOND. I would like to know by what amount the revenues will be decreased by the Senate amendment reducing the tax from five to two cents.

Mr. MORRILL. The loss would be from twenty-five to twenty-seven million dollars.

Mr. RAYMOND. How much if from five to three cents?

Mr. MORRILL. About eighteen million dollars. In relation to the tax on smoking-tobacco, the House is well aware that the present tax is thirty-five cents per pound, and that after a rather sharp contest on the subject the House came to the conclusion, by a very decided majority, that it would fix the tax at twenty cents.

Mr. SCHENCK. By a very small majority.

Mr. MORRILL. A decided majority.

Mr. SCHENCK. By two majority the other way in Committee of the Whole, and by nine in favor of it in the House.

Mr. MORRILL. Nine is a very decided majority, and I think we can carry it by as large a majority now, and we ought to by a larger. If we are to tax the article at all, if we are to get the princely revenue from it we all so much covet, twenty cents per pound is little enough. As it is, the cigar business has suffered largely by the extensive use of the cheaper pipes and more fashionable meerschaums. I trust, therefore, that the House will non-concur with the Senate's amendment in this respect.

In relation to cigars, I think the gentleman from Ohio and those who acted with him at the time will find that they are fully provided for; that all the cheap cigars which his constituents make or can make out of cheap tobacco such as they produce will come in at the lowest rate of duty; and the idea of putting the forty per cent. ad valorem valuation on all their cigars is one that is attended by very great difficulties, not to say impossibilities. New York cigar-makers say it will be ruinous to every honest cigar-maker in that city. All the officers that are connected with the revenue are averse to it, and declare that it is impossible that it can be fairly and properly executed. The opinions of these men ought to be weighed. I do not hesitate to say, whether we follow their advice or not, they have given the subject a great deal of attention—and very likely more than any one in this House.

Mr. STEVENS. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee intended to move non-concurrence in the Senate's amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. The committee do recommend that in deference to the vote of the House, while they have from the start and do now entertain a contrary opinion.

Mr. STEVENS. Then the chairman of the committee argues against it.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, I do.

Mr. STEVENS. Then he had better leave it open and let us discuss this whole question. It is one of the most vital questions involved in this bill. If the gentleman's views prevail the result will be to break up this whole interest in four States. Coming, as the gentleman does, from the top of the Green mountains, he does not understand nor feel the importance of this question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if it is of any importance that the House should hear what is going on. It is impossible for those sitting around me to hear a word that is said.

The SPEAKER. Until the rain ceases it will be difficult to hear. The Chair cannot arrest the noise that comes from above. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. There is a good deal of noise in the rear, made by parties that do not belong to the House.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, if I do not understand this subject it is not because I have not sat at the feet of Gamaliel, [pointing to Mr. STEVENS.] I have studied it for years past side by side with the gentleman, and I think I have received as much instruction theoretically as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for I think he possesses no practical information on the subject; that is to say, he does not any more than myself use the weed in any form.

Mr. STEVENS. I live where $2,000,000 worth of it is grown.

Mr. MORRILL. As far as I am concerned I believe I am an impartial juror as between the different sections of the country on this subject of tobacco. My own State does not to any great extent produce tobacco nor make cigars. They consume them, however, but do not care where they come from, and I am unwilling to see the interest of any section of the country sacrificed. Now, it does seem to me that if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] has the interest of his people taken care of it ought not to make him miserable if other parts of the country have theirs taken care of.

Mr. SCHENCK. I raise a question of order. I pass by the imputation which has been more than once made by the gentleman of impropriety of motive on my part; but I wish to know if it is in order for the chairman of the committee to report a recommendation of non-concurrence with a Senate amendment, and then rise to argue against his own report and insist that his own report ought not to be adopted. That is what he is doing.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that is a matter of taste and not a question of order.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think there is a point of order involved, whether the chairman of the committee shall be permitted to argue that the House ought not to do that which the committee recommend.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the committee is the exponent of the committee, but at the same time as a member of the House he is at liberty to express his views, the same as the chairman or a member of a conference committee sometimes does, stating that he dissents from the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I put it on the ground of false pretense.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to treat this matter with perfect fairness, not agreeing with the House, yet having sufficient deference for the House to make the report of the committee in accordance with the expressed sentiment of the House. But differing with the House, I think it is proper that I should state the views, not only of myself, but of the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, and there is no false pretense about it, as the House was informed at the outset that the Committee of Ways and Means made its report on this question as it did only in deference to the previous vote of the House—reserving the right to act on the question when it came up according to their own judgment.

In relation to the question of allowing gas companies to add their tax to the bills of the consumers, I do believe that if members of the House understood all the facts of the cases to be affected by this legislation they would regard it as a species of hardship and tyranny, for which they would not be willing to be responsible, not to allow the tax to be added. Of course those companies not limited by law have no interest in the question. Take, for instance, the largest company which is to be affected, the Manhattan Company, at New York. They supply gas and are restricted by their charter to $2 50 per thousand feet. They are located in the lower part of the city where the buildings are mostly stores. These stores consume but little gas, not being open like buildings in other portions of the city during the night, and yet the same expenditure has to be made by the company for gas pipes. Their sales are comparatively small on a large outlay of capital. Take the case of the Pittsburgh company, which is restricted to seventy-five cents per thousand feet for gas supplied to the city and $1 50 for gas supplied to other consumers. Or take the case of the company at Covington, where there is a similar restriction.

Mr. UPSON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the Senate's amendment discriminates in relation to gas companies in that respect, between those that are restricted by law and those that are not.

Mr. MORRILL. It does. The Senate's amendment simply applies to those that are under legal restrictions.

Mr. UPSON. I understood, as it was read, that it made no distinction between them.

Mr. MORRILL. Of course it could not liberty to any other; they would have the same liberty to add the tax that the man who makes boots has. If they are not restricted by law of course there is no necessity of any action on the subject. If the House refuses to concur these companies can only live by selling poor gas or giving short measure. I do not think that a desirable result.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to occupy further time, and I will therefore yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH.]

Mr. WENTWORTH. In order that the House may act understandingly upon this matter, I will state the position taken by the Committee of Ways and Means. We originally made a report to the House, and the House, in some few particulars, overrode us. Then when the bill came back from the Senate we did not feel at liberty, after having been overridden by the House, to undo what the House had done. The House had no representative on the committee, yet we, in every instance, brought back to the House its own action unprejudiced by any action of our own. That is the reason why the committee have felt at liberty to speak against some of the measures which we reported in favor of; it is because the committee wanted to bring back to the House its own action unprejudiced; and I do not well see how we could have done differently. Everything that the House put in the bill against the original report of the committee comes right back here just as the House sent it to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to express my concurrence with the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means with reference to the recommendation of non-concurrence in the Senate's amendment in regard to the tax on cotton. When the subject was under discussion in the House before, I took the liberty of stating that I was informed that at twenty-five cents per pound American cotton would be used in England in preference to the cotton of any other country. The gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. Hooper,] demurred to the statement I then made. I desire now to call his attention to my authority for what I then said with reference to American cotton. My authority is Mr. Walker, of Springfield, a gentleman whose intelligence and integrity my friend from Massachusetts will not question. He gave me a statement as coming from Sir Edmund Potter, a member of Parliament for Carlisle, one of the largest cotton printers in Manchester and former president of the Chamber of Commerce there. While Mr. Walker was in England a few months since, having gone there under the auspices of the Treasury Department for the express purpose of obtaining information on this and kindred subjects, Sir Edmund Potter said to him that at a shilling a pound American cotton would be preferred to the cotton of any other country.

Now, in addition to that I desire the Clerk to read an extract which I send to his desk. It is from the London Economist of April 7, 1865, and bears directly upon this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

"They recommend a tax of five cents per pound on cotton, to be levied and collected from the manufacturer where the cotton is worked up at home and sent away for use abroad. They consider that this tax would not at all diminish the consumption of American cotton abroad; the grower will, they think, (and probably rightly) be well able to pay this tax and make a good profit besides. The world will be glad enough to get American cotton at a rate which will pay the tax to the Government and a fair profit to the grower."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I wish to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] that I think his sources of information are rather suspicious, for that information comes from the other side of the water. I can conceive of their being willing that we should put ten cents per pound tax upon cotton. In the remarks I made the other day I said that the effect of this high tax would be to operate as a bounty to the growers of cotton in other countries. Great Britain has a large interest in the growth of cotton in India. And I can fancy that this great spinner referred to by the gentleman may be a spinner of the Bombay cotton. And if he gets his Bombay cotton without any tax upon it I can imagine that he would be very glad to see us put a heavy tax on American cotton, and thus encourage the growth of India cotton.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will give the gentleman further evidence on that point. I desire to call his attention to another fact corroborative of what I have stated. I find that from the 1st of January to the 19th of April, 1865, there were imported into Great Britain 87,430 bales of American cotton, while during the same term in the present year there were imported 536,505 bales. While the increase during that period of this year of the importation of cotton from all countries was only forty-two per cent. over the importation of the corresponding period of last year, the increase in the exportation of American cotton was six hundred per cent. This shows that the moment they could get American cotton, the difference between the amount of cotton imported from all other sections of the world and the amount of cotton imported from America was as forty per cent. is to six hundred per cent.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Might not that be explained by the fact that about April, 1865, the war in this country ceased, and the cotton that had accumulated here became accessible to purchasers?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Undoubtedly; and the very moment they could obtain American cotton they increased its importation over six hundred per cent., while they increased the importation of cotton from all other parts of the world only about forty per cent. And we have every reason to believe that Great Britain will very gladly consume not less than three million bales of American cotton, at a price not less than twenty-five cents per pound. And at that rate, I contend that no interest in this country can as well pay a tax and contribute to the national revenue of this country as this cotton-growing interest. And I, for one, hope that the House will non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] know what was the stock of American cotton on hand for sale in proportion to the stock of other cotton?

Mr. GRISWOLD. In England?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I do not know.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] that I think in his statement he has entirely overlooked two things. One is, that the extraordinary demands, or rather the relatively extraordinary demands, of England for American cotton arose in part from the fact, which everybody knows, that they need a large portion of American cotton to mix with the other cotton they use; that the accumulation of American cotton in England had become exhausted to a very great extent during the war, and consequently there was an extra demand for it, which they supplied at the very first opportunity.

The other point to which I wish to call his attention is, that by this proposition to tax cotton five cents per pound upon all cotton, including that manufactured in this country, especially while withdrawing that tax from all cotton goods exported to Europe, the effect upon the people of this country will be, that while the entire tax will be charged upon the consumers in this country, the manufacturer will have the entire margin of the great drawback to enable him to undersell the foreign manufacturers of cotton in Europe.

A MEMBER. Will that hurt us?

Mr. KASSON. I will tell you who it hurts. It hurts the people of this country who consume the goods manufactured here, and who must pay this entire tax, while the foreign consumer of American goods can buy the same manufactures at a price exempt from all tax. And it hurts the exchange between this country and foreign countries, because they can produce more cheaply than we can so far as regards the cost of labor and machinery and chemicals, &c.; and thus the price of the article abroad will be largely reduced below the price which the people of this country will be required to pay; and the profits of the manufacturers in this country will come, not from the people of foreign countries, but from our own people.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he has seen the official reports made in England showing that the demand for our cotton is far greater than it was before the war, and that almost every grower of cotton in every other country than our own has given up growing the article.

Mr. KASSON. No, sir; I do not recognize that as the fact, because I have not seen the proof of it. I know that under the stimulus of war prices extraordinary efforts were made in India—and so far as I know they continue to this day—to produce larger crops of cotton.

Now, sir, a member of this House who sits near me, and who is largely interested in the production of cotton, tells me that in view of the price of labor, the article cannot be produced in this country to-day at less than sixteen or seventeen cents per pound. Yet we propose to tax this article at the rate of five cents per pound—nearly thirty-three and one third per cent. on the actual cost of the raw product. No other raw product is taxed in anything like such a proportion to its value.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he believes cotton will continue to cost, under the present system of labor, sixteen cents per pound, when it was formerly produced, under the system of slave labor, at five cents per pound.

Mr. KASSON. I have two answers to make to that question. In the first place, if the cost of cotton ever does come back to five cents per pound, then we are proposing to tax this raw material of the country one hundred per cent. In the second place, I believe that this article will never get back to its former cost, for with the system of free labor established in the South, the freedmen working plantations there must receive, if justice be done them, reasonable wages, which they have never received as slaves. The slaves received for their labor nothing but their food and clothing. But with the education which we are endeavoring to give the freedmen, they will henceforward demand increased compensation for their labor; and I for one am disposed to give it to them. Another reason with me for opposing this proposition is, that by this excessive tax we shall embarrass a branch of industry upon which the freedmen must largely rely for their elevation in household comfort and intelligence. I insist that we should not embarrass a branch of labor so essentially connected with their interests.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Do I understand the gentleman to maintain that production by means of free labor will be more expensive than production by means of slave labor?

Mr. KASSON. In my view, sir, no clearer proposition than that can be presented. On the one hand we have the slave, subsisting upon bacon and corn bread, wearing one linsey-woolsey suit in a year, or possibly two, shod with rough brogans or going barefooted. On the other hand you have the free laborer, who will have wheaten bread now and then, who will wear broadcloth now and then, or at least decent goods of home manufacture; who will wish also to possess the means of educating his family; who will desire to own a homestead and to furnish comfortably his own house. To contend that the labor of men of the latter class does not enter as a more costly element into the production is to contend against the plain evidence of facts.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to say to the gentleman that he and I occupy exactly opposite positions in regard to this question. I believe that intelligent free laborers, well fed and well paid, will produce cotton and any other products more cheaply than they have ever been produced under the system of slave labor.

Mr. KASSON. I have simply to speak of the evident effects. I have stated that when that labor was obtained at ten per cent.—

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot yield to the gentleman any longer, as my hour is rapidly running out, and I have promised to yield to other gentlemen. I will ask the Speaker how much time still remains of my hour.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-three minutes.

Mr. KASSON. I will only finish the sentence I have commenced and then yield the floor. When I say the former cost of each laborer on the amount of capital invested was scarcely $100 a year, and when you cannot for the future get that labor at $100 a year, you must admit the cost of production will be increased in the future as compared with the past.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot yield the gentleman any more of my time; but before yielding to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] I desire to correct a single point in the statement of the gentleman from Iowa. The statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to the discontinuance of the cultivation of cotton lands is correct. To-day there are thousands of bales of cotton on hand in Liverpool, and yet the price of cotton rises, and is a penny or two pennies more than it was a short while ago.

Then in relation to another point. The gentleman suggests it would be a great hardship on our people if they were manufacturing for other people at a lower rate than for ourselves. Nearly one third of the goods which come to this country are sold at lower rates here than where they are produced. At the end of a season, whatever stock may be left on hand is always sent at lower rates into the market, and our country affords the largest in the world. So that foreigners do regard it of immense advantage to be able to keep their mills employed even if they sell at a cheaper rate. I yield the rest of my time to be divided between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, as regards the question of cotton, I think no man who has studied the history of soils and climates and productions but knows that America can produce cotton for much less than one half of what it can be produced for in any other country in the world. During the war they ran it up until it reached a price of sixty cents per pound, and even then, instead of using foreign cotton, they used our cotton to the extent which they could get it, and only took the foreign article to supply them with what they could not get from America. I have no hesitation in saying, and gentlemen acquainted with the history of the subject will understand it, that if the cost of cotton in this country were thirty cents per pound still it would all be taken from here, because it could be got better and cheaper in this country. The tax of five cents will not stop the sale of a single pound of it. A tax of ten cents would not stop the sale of a pound of it.

We should have amended the Constitution, and then Congress could have placed a tax of ten cents upon the exported cotton. Even then there would be more exported than to-day. The result would have been, on the thousands of bales exported we would have reaped millions of dollars of revenue for the Government. We would have obtained, sir, some compensation from those who were the cause of prolonging the war and imposing the present grinding taxation upon our people. We should have made them, sir, pay a portion of it. Why shall we not do it? They ought to be made pay a portion of our heavy taxes. It will not stop the growth of a single pound of cotton. It will enable us to get from those people a large amount of revenue from this article of cotton which they will still continue to export from this country, for they can get it nowhere else, even then, cheaper or better, and it is the only mode I see in which we are likely to get from them any compensation for the trouble they have caused us. I know no one who can oppose this who is not a free trader in theory or practice, and who does not scorn the idea of protecting American manufactures, American industry. I say opposition to this comes, and can come, from no one here except those who are the advocates of the doctrine of free trade.

Mr. KASSON. I ask whether, when the gentleman states no one can be opposed to this who is not in theory or practice a free trader, he means to refer to me.

Mr. STEVENS. I suppose so, from the gentleman's argument.

Mr. KASSON. If he leaves it upon my argument I have nothing to say, but if he asserts it on outside matters—

Mr. STEVENS. I never go outside of these walls in reference to what I say here. I say that his argument here is a free-trade argument, and nothing but a free-trade argument. It has not one symptom, one odor of protection about it. All I can see in it is free trade. Now, I do not know whether we are to have any further discussion on this bill; but I desire to say that the amendment of the Senate in regard to the subject of tobacco is the most ruinous, heartless, and crushing provision that ever was imposed upon the industry of a people—of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and all the western States. Before this iniquitous principle of applying a tax of ten cents on tobacco worth fifty dollars the same as on that worth $100—before that principle was adopted the county in which I reside raised $2,000,000 worth of tobacco and sold it. We put on an ad valorem duty, and there were not $200 worth of plants put in in that county. I have been informed that since that time they have not raised any such amount. They were fully prepared to put in what would have produced millions of dollars before that fatal blow was struck. Now, if this bill passes they will not put out their plants at all. The same must be the case, I am sure, in Ohio, and elsewhere, where tobacco is raised, on the Connecticut river. I have no enmity to the Connecticut river, but they have great advantages there. They sell their tobacco at forty dollars where we sell it at eight. I have only time to add that the tax levied by the Senate crushes out the whole of the industry engaged in this branch, and I hope the House will not agree to it.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I support the tax on cotton proposed by the committee, not in the belief that it will materially affect the quantity produced or its market value, but because I believe it to be one of the legitimate objects of taxation from which we can, without detriment to the producer, the manufacturer, or the merchant, obtain a large portion of the revenue necessary to defray the expenses of the Government and meet the obligations incurred during the war.

If this tax were in any essential degree to affect the quantity produced and its value in the markets of the world, or tended to stimulate its cultivation in other countries, or deprive us of the monopoly which we have had, and in my opinion will still have, of this article which enters so largely into the textile manufactures of the world, I should hesitate, even in view of the financial necessities of the country. But in my opinion it will not have this effect. It stands upon different grounds. It can be sustained without injury to any one of the great interests of the country, and perhaps with benefit to all. It is in this view that I present the question.

Mr. Speaker, before the cotton crop of this country can be largely increased it is indispensable that the General Government should do many things to protect and aid those who are or may be engaged in its culture. They are at present unable to control permanently any one of the many elements of power necessary to insure successful results in this branch of industry. The advantages to be derived from stable and just government, capital, credit, continuous labor, the security of property, and the maintenance of just laws, all of which are essential and indispensable to successful industry, can be enjoyed only through the assistance of the Federal administration. In no one of the cotton States are these indispensable prerequisites to the profitable culture of cotton within the control of the people themselves.

In the lower valley of the Mississippi, for example, it will be necessary that the General Government should assume the management of the Mississippi river. A large portion of the best cotton lands of the country are now submerged or in danger of overflow. Every year will increase the destruction of lands that have been reduced to cultivation, and prevent the reclamation of extensive tracts that might be, and doubtless will be, devoted to this great interest. But it is now unproductive and useless to the people, and altogether beyond their power of reclamation. Nothing less than the powerful and sustained aid of the General Government can render this part of the country accessible or secure to the cultivators of cotton, sugar, or any other important agricultural product. Without this aid it can do little more than provide subsistence for the people, if indeed this were not beyond their power. The restoration of the levees of the Mississippi, the Red river, and other less important bayous and rivers, will cost twenty or thirty million dollars. It is a work altogether beyond the power of the people, whose substance has been destroyed and whose country has been laid waste in the late terrible war; and the maintenance of the work, if completed, is equally beyond their present means.

In other parts of the country it will be necessary for the Government to assist the people in securing continuous and contented labor to relieve them for a time at least from the heavy burdens consequent upon the war; to extend to them its credit and secure to them that permanent peace without which compensating industry is impossible. For everything that belongs to good government and successful industry, the people of the South will be more or less dependent upon the Federal administration: and with this aid we shall be able, without difficulty, in my opinion, to equal the largest crops of past years, or to double and treble them in quantity. Instead of the five million bales produced before the war, it is not impossible that we may gather, at a day not far distant, ten and fifteen and even twenty million bales. Cotton has been produced only in five or six States or parts of States. It is capable of successful cultivation, with greater or less profit, in twenty States of the Union. It is by no means certain that the present prices will be maintained indefinitely; still less is it probable that its value will be so far enhanced as to give other nations an advantage over American cotton in the foreign markets of the world. I do not know what time may be required to reestablish, upon a permanent basis, the industry of the South. I entertain no doubt, however, that it can be or that it will be done; and when it is accomplished we shall find that we are able to produce cotton in such quantities and at such prices as to make it impossible for other countries to compete with us, whatever aid and encouragement they may receive from their respective Governments. If we are capable of good government we are destined more than ever to secure and maintain the monopoly of this great staple, the substantial basis of the world's industry.

In years past, I believe, cotton has been grown in favorable seasons for five cents a pound or less. I have no doubt whatever that it may be and will be produced at fifty per cent. less cost than it ever has been raised in this country; if at five cents before, then at two and a half cents per pound. I speak of course of the cost of production alone at the same standard of values, a standard of gold, not of paper, to which I hope we may come at some time or other, and without subjection to the heavy burdens imposed upon our industry in consequence of the war. If under the most wasteful and extravagant system of industry that the world ever saw cotton could be grown and sold without loss at five cents a pound, what extravagance is there in assuming that with the most economical system of labor, like that applied to the manufacture of cotton, with all the advantages of mechanical ingenuity, the energy imparted by compensated industry, and the constantly increasing intelligence of labor that results in many ways from sharing in the profits of the work; what extravagance is there, I ask, in assuming that the same results can be obtained at one half the cost of former crops, or even less than half the cost of product under the old system? A far greater advantage has been obtained everywhere and in everything by free, intelligent, and interested labor over that of serfs and slaves.

I listened with respectful attention to the statements of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] as to the different conditions of labor now as compared with that of the old system. But in his estimate of this difference, the gentleman omits one most important consideration. He says very justly that formerly plantation labor cost the planters but a couple of suits of Kentucky jeans each year, and a scanty fare of corn bread and poor bacon; and that now the laborer requires, after the style of northern labor, I suppose, good food, comfortable dwellings, education for his children, and broad-cloth instead of jeans for clothing. That is very true. But we must remember also that under the old system the plantation laborer was entitled to a bare subsistence as the reward of his toil, amounting to perhaps three or five per cent. of the profits of the crop. The planter and his factor received fifty or seventy-five per cent., which was expended in extravagant systems of cultivation, costly machinery, heavy interests, or wasted in other extravagant expenditures in the country where he lived, or in other countries where he spent a large portion if not all of his time. The laborer was a slave. He received nothing that was not necessary to his existence. Beyond that everything went to the capitalist, the master, his factors, and his creditors. At the end of the year the master and the slave were poor alike. Now the laborer will get not only a subsistence, the means of existence, but a share of the profits. It is from this that he obtains his better living, improved dwelling, better raiment, and education for his children. If his share were ten or twenty times that which he received when a slave, it would not affect the quantity nor the value of the crop. It is a new rule of division between labor and capital, between the employed and the employer. It is a change with mutual advantages. The market price or cost of the cotton will depend upon different considerations, of which the compensation of labor is but an immaterial, and the rule for division and profits between labor and capital the material and controlling point.

Looking upon a cotton or sugar plantation in the South, you cannot fail to see from the character of its organization that the greater portion of the profits were applied to other and less profitable things than the improvement of the plantation, the economy of time, product, or labor. Large estates, numerous idle hands, unrestricted waste, universal indolence, and extravagant and thriftless customs of labor and life consumed the product of the soil and left the cultivator a bankrupt, without hope of improvement in his condition except by an increase of the evils that crushed him, and an attempt to overthrow the Government that protected him. From this came the poverty, treason, rebellion, and defeat of the South.

Under the new system of cultivation large estates will be broken up. Usurious interests upon hands that never worked, and old debts that could never be paid will be stopped. Laboring men will plant for themselves, as lessees or owners of the soil. They will turn over their crops of one acre or more to those who can manage the markets to the best advantage. All the intelligent laborers are likely to cultivate the land for themselves, whether as lessees or owners. A new class of factors will arise, men who no longer manage old debts, or receive pledges of future crops, but who will buy at fair prices and sell at small profits whatever crops are offered, whether large or small, from the acre of the emancipated slave or the plantation of the disinherited master.

Such changes as these are not impossible.

In time they will be certain. They are certain to reproduce from the cultivated fields of the South as much and all that they have ever produced. They will recuperate old and reclaim new lands. They will enrich the country by a more equitable division of profits among the people. By increasing the quantity of the crop and reducing the price of the product they help us to maintain the monopoly of cotton without losing altogether the control of our senses.

I do not expect to see these results produced by the same agents that have led the South to destruction heretofore. New men are necessary to the success of new measures. The people of the South must apply to the cultivation of the soil the apostolic injunction. They must try all things that are new and hold fast all that are good. If governments can be provided for the cotton-growing States that will strengthen the Union while they promote the prosperity of their people, in which power shall be exercised by friends and not by enemies, I know not what limit can be fixed to the generosity or clemency of the loyal States. Whatever is in my power I shall cheerfully give. Without this there is little of good, I fear, for us or for them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we can assist the South in securing such political organizations—governments in harmony with the institutions of the country and with the spirit of the age; governments that are in all respects in accord with the general administration of the country, without which they can never successfully cultivate the soil—they can well afford to pay a tax of five cents a pound on their cotton. Assessed upon a product which is almost exclusively the growth of American soil, it cannot impair our control of foreign markets. Coupled with an exemption from this duty, in the form of a drawback, when manufactured in this country, it cannot increase the cost of the supplies of the manufactured article. The burden of the tax is borne by foreign purchasers, and not by our people. It will aid us to reduce taxes upon many necessities of life. It will extend the markets for American manufactures. It will reconcile the people to liberal appropriations for the benefit of the South for compensation for losses, and to a temporary relief from the excessive burdens of taxation. It is a measure that will benefit the whole country, without bearing unjustly upon any part; and as it may be reduced or removed as the financial exigencies of the Government diminish, it ought not to be regarded as unjust or oppressive.

The report of the Committee of Ways and Means upon all those amendments on which separate votes had not been demanded was then agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the third amendment of the Senate on which a separate vote had been demanded, to wit: in line thirteen (in the paragraph in reference to the tax on cotton,) strike out the word "five" and insert "two," so as to make the tax two cents per pound.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 47, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Benjamin, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Culom, Davis, Dawes, Denning, Dixon, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Deenas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Hulbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stillwell, Thayer, Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—84.

YAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Barker, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Boyer, Buckland, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Kasson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Paine, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Henry D. Washburn, and Winfield—47.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson James M. Ashley, Baker, Baxter, Bidwell, Blow Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Culver, Darling, Defrees, Delano, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hill, Edwin N. Hubbard, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Ketcham, Loan, McIndoe, McKee, Newell, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Taber, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, and Wright—51.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The next amendment upon which a separate vote had been reserved was as follows:

On page 99, after the word "return," insert the following:

And all gas companies whose price is fixed by law are authorized to add the tax herein imposed to the price per thousand feet on gas sold; and all such companies which have heretofore contracted to furnish gas to municipal corporations are in like manner authorized to add such tax to such contract price.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. THAYER. I hope the House will concur in that amendment of the Senate.

The question was upon concurring, and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 45, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Mr. ROSS and Mr. THAYER called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first taken upon ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question recurred upon ordering tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and KERR were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 53.

So the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I rise to a question of order. I ask that the Clerk read the twenty-ninth rule of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

"29. No member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is immediately and particularly interested, or in any case where he was not within the bar of the House when the question was put."

The SPEAKER. It is too late to raise that point of order on this question.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to know upon what member it was attempted to make this point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot tell.

Mr. THAYER. It is an imputation upon the whole House, unless the person to whom it is intended to apply shall be specified.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot make the member specify.

Mr. THAYER. Then I resent, as a member of the House, any such insinuation or imputation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a point the gentleman has a right to make.

Mr. THAYER. I deny that the gentleman can make such a point, without specifying the member to whom he refers. Otherwise no effect can be given to his point of order, except to cast a general imputation upon all the members of the House.

The SPEAKER. Any member has the right to call for the reading of a rule of the House.

Mr. NICHOLSON. With the permission of the House, I will explain. I have no desire to reflect upon any member of the House. I simply desired the rule to be read, not because I supposed any member was interested, but because the rule seemed to me to be in point and applicable to this case.

The SPEAKER. The question of the construction of the rule opens a wide field.

Mr. THAYER. I deny that the rule is in point, so far as it may have been intended to apply to me. When the gentleman makes this imputation against the whole House he includes me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware had the right to have the rule read; and if the point had been made in time, he would have had a right to ask the ruling of the Chair in regard to what constitutes such an interest as to preclude a member from voting on a public bill.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the Senate amendment on which the vote was just taken; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. EGGLESTON. On that motion I call the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 75, not voting 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Baldwin, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McRuer, Mercur, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Pike, Price, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Spalding, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Burt Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—55.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkies, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Julian, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, Miller, Moulton, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Radford, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Stillwell, Strouse, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, and James F. Wilson—75.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baxter, Bidwell, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Defrees, Delano, Dodge, Farnsworth, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hill, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Ketcham, Loan, McIndoe, McKee, Newell, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Taber, Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—52.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. TRIMBLE (having voted when his name was called) said: Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ANCONA. I would like to hear the grounds upon which the gentleman desires to withdraw his vote.

The SPEAKER. The right of a member to withdraw his vote is never denied.

Mr. TRIMBLE. My reason is that I am interested in a gas company. It is a small interest; but still if I should vote my motives might be impugned.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I hope that other gentlemen interested will withdraw their votes.

Mr. PIKE. Do I understand the Speaker to rule that a person interested in a gas company is so far interested in this question as to come under the terms of the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no ruling of that kind. No point has been made requiring a ruling by the Chair.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The question recurring on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in,

The question was taken; and there were—ayes seventy-two, noes not counted.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurring on concurring in the Senate amendment,

Mr. LE BLOND and Mr. EGGLESTON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 76, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Boutwell, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kelley, Kelso, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McRuer, Mercur, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Pike, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Smith, Spalding, Thayer, Burt Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Cook, Cullom, Denison, Dumont, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkies, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Julian, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, McKee, Miller, Moulton, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Stillwell, Strouse, Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, and James F. Wilson—76.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Baker, Baxter, Bidwell, Blow, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Defrees, Delano, Dodge, Eckley, Farnsworth, Finck, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Hill, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Ketcham, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McIndoe, Newell, Noel, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Rousseau, Sloan, Starr, Taber, Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—57.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER stated the next amendment of the Senate, on which a separate vote had been reserved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ANCONA,] was as follows:

Strike out "one" and insert "two;" so that the clause will then read as follows:

On ready-made clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, felt hats, and other articles of dress for the wear of men, women, and children, not otherwise assessed and taxed, a tax of two per cent. ad valorem, to be paid by every person making, manufacturing, or producing for sale clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, felt hats, and other articles of dress, or furnishing the materials or any part thereof, and employing others to make, manufacture, or produce them: Provided, That any tailor, or any maker of gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, felt hats, or other articles of dress to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose annual products do not exceed $2,000, shall be exempt from this tax; and articles of dress made or trimmed by milliners or dress-makers for the wear of women and children shall also be exempt from this tax: Provided, That the branching into sprays, branches, or wreaths of artificial flowers, on which an impost or internal tax has already been paid, shall not be considered a manufacture within the meaning of this act.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. ANCONA. I hope the amendment will be non-concurred in.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate on which a separate vote was reserved was as follows:

Strike out the words "work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000;" and in lieu thereof insert the words "annual product does not exceed $2,000, shall be exempt from this tax."

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. ANCONA. Does that embrace all the amendments on the subject?

The SPEAKER. They will all go to the committee of conference as non-concurred in.

The next amendment, on which a separate vote was reserved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook,] is as follows:

Insert the following:
On shoddy-wool manufactured from woven cloth, five cents per pound.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate, on which a separate vote was reserved by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] was as follows:

Strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen;" so that the clause will read as follows:

On smoking-tobacco of all kinds, not sweetened, nor stemmed, nor butted, including that made of stems, or in part of stems, and imitations thereof, a tax of fifteen cents per pound.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope the amendment will be concurred in.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 40.

Mr. MORRILL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and SCHENCK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-six, noes not counted.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate on which a separate vote was reserved was as follows:

Strike out the words "and, in addition, forty per cent, ad valorem on the value beyond twelve dollars per thousand, to be assessed on the excess beyond twelve dollars per thousand: Provided, That any person who shall offer or expose for sale any cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes, whether the articles so offered or exposed are imported or are of foreign or domestic manufacture, shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and shall be subject to all the duties, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law in regard to the sale of domestic articles without the use of the proper stamp or stamps denoting the duty or tax paid thereon;" and in lieu thereof insert the following:

Provided, That upon all imported cigars and cheroots, but not including cigarettes, an internal revenue tax shall be levied and collected, in addition to the duties paid upon importation thereof, of ten dollars per thousand, and stamps denoting the payment of such tax shall, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, be affixed to every box or package of imported cigars or cheroots before the same are sold or offered for sale; and any cigars or cheroots so imported, which shall be sold or offered or exposed for sale without having stamps affixed, shall be forfeited to the United States, and the importer of such cigars or cheroots shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and shall be subject to all the duties, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law upon the manufacturer of domestic cigars or cheroots.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The question next recurred on the following amendment of the Senate, on which a separate vote was asked by Mr. DAVIS:

Insert the following:
Provided further, That all such persons, companies, and corporations shall have the right to add the tax imposed hereby to their rates of fare whenever their liability thereto may commence; any limitations which may exist by law or by agreement with any person or company which may have paid or be liable to pay such fare to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Committee of Ways and Means recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Are gentlemen considered interested in railroads who have "free passes," and therefore excluded from voting on this amendment?

The SPEAKER. Cushing, in his Parliamentary Law, holds that members of Congress are not excluded from voting in regard to pay, because they are all equally interested; and the same rule, the Chair supposes, would apply in the case suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER stated the next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was in reference to the income tax, the Senate reducing the amount exempted from $1,000, as agreed to by the House, to $600 per annum; and that the Committee of Ways and Means had recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was as follows:

Insert:
"That section six of the act of March 3, 1865, entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864, be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that every national banking association, State bank, or State banking association, shall pay a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of notes of any person, State bank, or State banking association, used for circulation and paid out by them after the 1st day of August, 1866, and such tax shall be assessed and paid in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will be allowed to make an explanation.

Mr. STEVENS. I want to move to strike out "sixty-seven" and insert "sixty-six."

Mr. ELDRIDGE, Mr. HOTCHKISS, and many other members objected, unless all sides could be heard.

Mr. BLAINE. I rise to a point of order. I understand it to be assumed that if the House non-concur, that gives the committee of conference the right to report recommending a longer time than is allowed by the Senate's amendment.

The SPEAKER. The point is not well taken. No committee of conference has been ordered.

Mr. ANCONA. I would inquire whether, if the House concur in the Senate's amendment, that precludes all action on this subject.

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. ANCONA. And enforces the ten per cent. tax after the date designated.

The SPEAKER. If the House concurs in the Senate's amendment it removes the matter entirely from the consideration of the two Houses.

The question being taken on concurring in the amendment of the Senate, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 75, noes 25.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The next amendments of the Senate, reserved on motion of Mr. MARVIN, were numbers four hundred and forty-nine and four hundred and fifty, on page 149, line seventeen, in relation to oil-dressed leather, to strike out the words "dressed or," and after the word "smoked" at the end of the line to insert the words "or not oil-dressed."

The committee recommended non-concurrence in these amendments.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

The next amendment reserved was number four hundred and eighty-eight, on page 157, to strike out all after the word "act," in line sixteen, down to and including the word "annum," in line fifty-two, as follows:

And apothecaries shall not be regarded as retail dealers in liquor in consequence of selling alcohol, or of selling or of dispensing, upon physicians' prescriptions, the wines and spirits official in the United States and other national pharmacopoeias, in quantities not exceeding half a pint of either at any one time, nor exceeding in aggregate cost value the sum of $300 per annum.

The committee recommended non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the House concur in this it leaves a similar provision in the bill elsewhere. I therefore hope the House will concur in the amendment. The non-concurrence was recommended by mistake.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, reserved on motion of Mr. WARD, was on page 199, in relation to tobacco and cigars, to insert in line nineteen, after the word "court," the following:

And any such officer interested as aforesaid in any such manufacture at the time this act takes effect, who shall fail to divest himself of such interest within sixty days thereafter, shall be held and declared to have been so interested after this act takes effect.

Mr. WARD. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to this amendment. I wish to have an opportunity to be heard upon it before the committee of conference, and I apprehend that the chairman will have no objection to the House non-concurring in it in order that I may have that opportunity.

Mr. MORRILL. While I approve of the amendment of the Senate I have no objection to the gentleman's doing as he requests.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the votes upon the various amendments of the Senate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the House insist upon its disagreement with the Senate amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD FROM CALIFORNIA TO OREGON.

Mr. McRUER. I move that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 123, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, on the navigable waters of the Columbia river, in Oregon, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the amendment of the House to Senate joint resolution No. 110, authorizing the hiring of a building or buildings for temporary accommodation of the Department of State, and the amendments of the House to Senate bill No. 813, to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glynnoin oil; that it had passed House bill No. 18, for the relief of the members of the thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteer infantry, without amendment, and House joint resolution No. 123, for the relief of Elizabeth Woodward and George Chorpennin, of Pennsylvania, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House; and that it had passed an act (S. No. 382) to change the place of holding court in the northern district of Georgia, in which he was also directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Mr. KASSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:
By the SPEAKER: The petition of C. H. Foster, of Murfreesboro, North Carolina, asking for protection from county taxes levied for rebel supplies.

By Mr. DENISON: The petition of Charles Fuller, Lewis Jones, and others, from the city of Scranton, Pennsylvania, asking that Congress enact such laws as will make insurance in the several States uniform.

By Mr. GRIDER: The petition of Major Samuel Martin, of Glasgow, Kentucky, for indemnity and relief.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: A petition from citizens of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, asking for an increase of duties on foreign products which come in competition with American interests.

By Mr. WELKER: The memorial of Alvason Penfield, of Ohio, in relation to the cotton tax, and the policy of the Government in reference thereto.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 28, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NESMITH presented the petition of Mrs. Catharine E. Whitall, widow of the late Brevet Lieutenant Colonel John A. Whitall, United States Army, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented the memorial of Campbell & Thayer, and other manufacturers of linseed oil, remonstrating against an increase of the tariff on foreign linseed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WADE. I present a petition very numerous signed by citizens of Ohio, praying the Senate and House of Representatives, in the discharge of their duty, to watch over and promote the interests of the people, to avert from them and their wives and children the misfortunes with which they are threatened, by amending the tariff so as to protect their labor to the extent of the difference of the cost of capital and labor here and abroad, with the addition of the taxes paid by American industrial products, from which the foreign are free. The petition is in favor of a high protective tariff, in which opinion I very strongly coincide, and I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I have another petition, which I present, from Mrs. C. S. Wilson, who represents that she nursed and took care of our prisoners at Andersonville and other prisons until she lost her health; and her property was all seized by the rebels. She is strongly recommended by General Sherman and other general officers. She prays for compensation for expenses incurred and services rendered by her. As there is a like petition now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, I move that this be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Mrs. Eliza H. Barnwell, wife of James L. Barnwell, praying that she may be allowed to pay the taxes, with accrued interest and costs, on property situated at Beaufort, South Carolina, which was sold by order of the United States Government for non-payment of taxes, and that the property may be conveyed to her; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOOLITTLE presented the memorial of C. C. Washburne, of La Crosse, Wisconsin, remonstrating against the construction of a railroad bridge across the Mississippi river from Winona, in Minnesota, to a point opposite in Wisconsin; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of W. B. Kelley, late a second lieutenant in company F, first regiment Kentucky cavalry, praying for a pension, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of W. B. Kelley. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 557) to quiet the title to certain lands within the corporate limits of the city of Benicia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 341) amendatory of the pre-emptory laws, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 244) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, reported it without amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom were referred two memorials of citizens of Iowa, praying for the enactment of a general law regulating the bridging of the Mississippi river and making provision therein that neither railroad nor water traffic shall be impeded or impaired, have instructed me to report them back and ask to be discharged from their further consideration, as that matter has been the subject of legislation.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th of June, 1867, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CRESWELL, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 82) to provide for codifying the laws relating to the customs, reported it with amendments.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 115) respecting the payment of interest upon the war debts due the loyal States; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CRESWELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 116) to make compensation for damages to property held for religious and charitable purposes within loyal States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the annual compensation of the clerks of the Committees on Military Affairs and the Militia, and District of Columbia, shall hereafter be the same as that of the clerks of the Committees on Finance, Printing, and Claims, commencing July 1, 1866.

I offer this resolution to secure the continuance of two very valuable clerks. Unless this resolution shall be passed their services will not be obtained for the committees next year. It is indispensable for the carrying on of the work of those committees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the resolution at this time. Is there any objection?

Mr. GRIMES. I have no objection to its being considered, if it is to be referred to the committee that was raised at the instance of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] the other day, to take into consideration the subject of the compensation of the officers of the Senate. If that committee choose to decide that these persons shall be paid the same as the other committee clerks named in the resolution, then it will be proper for us to act upon it, I suppose; but it seems to me rather invidious to select out one or two clerks here and say that they have peculiar responsibilities resting upon them and not specify others.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is not my intention to move the reference of the resolution to that committee.

Mr. GRIMES. Then I object to its consideration to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the resolution, it must lie over under the rule.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for such a reorganization of the civil service, and especially of the Post Office, Treasury, and Interior Departments, as shall secure appointments to the same after previous examination by proper boards; as shall provide for promotions on the score of merit or seniority, and authorize dismissal under the safeguards of trial or resignation; as shall officer each branch of the service with well-trained experts in the details of its business; and as shall assimilate them all more nearly to those conditions and regulations which govern the enlistment and officering of the Army and Navy of the United States, and which have successfully precluded the latter from being used as reservoirs of political patronage or ordinary appliances of party power.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir, with a view to its reference.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BROWN. The substance of this resolution is an attempt to conform the civil service, in many of its details of appointment and of dismissal, to the regulations and conditions which govern the military service of the country. I cannot hope, at this late stage of the session, to get any definite or final action on the subject. It is one of such a large character, and will necessarily involve so much consideration, that all I can hope, at the present time, is to bring it to the attention of the distinguished gentlemen who compose the Committee on the Judiciary, and invite for it their consideration. I will say further, however, that I had been engaged in the preparation of bills covering the objects specified in this resolution with the design of bringing them before the Senate at this session; but absence and sickness have interfered so largely with my ability to prepare them that I have not been able to complete them. I did not think it right, however, to let the whole subject go by without taking some notice of it, and without stating that is my design, if I am spared, to present the subject in a more tangible form at the next session of Congress.

I believe, sir, that the great danger of this Government—one that probably threatens its life within the next ten or fifteen years—consists in the use of the public patronage for party purposes. I believe, furthermore, that no party is benefited by that public patronage any more than is any Government of Europe benefited by its standing army. If there were a general disarmament of parties here of this great force of public patronage it would go further to give our Government character, to defend it from corruption, and to insure its perpetuity, than all other legislation within the scope of my conception at this moment.

I believe, sir, it is perfectly feasible. We all know, and we all have seen, that there are two great branches of the public service—the Army and the Navy—which derive their appointments from the same source, which are subjected to the same revisal here as the other branches of the public service; and yet they, by the necessities of the case and the gravity of events involved in connection with them, have been kept free from this sinister and debasing influence. The Army of the United States and the Navy of the United States, to-day embracing large numbers of appointees, are not political appliances within the meaning of the term. I see no reason why the same safeguards and conditions may not be thrown around the public service in other departments, and I believe that the gravity which begins to gather around our financial department—our Treasury Department—the gathering in of five hundred millions of revenue a year and its disbursement throughout the country, requires that that shall be put on a more stringent footing as to the great purpose of requiring that public functionaries shall do the public service, and that alone.

However, sir, I did not intend to be drawn into any extended remarks, this morning, on the subject. I simply desired to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the sake of bringing the matter to attention here and to the attention of the public elsewhere. I trust that the resolution will be acted upon now.

The resolution was agreed to.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. STEWART. I move to take up Senate bill No. 257, and I trust we shall be able to finish it this morning.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 257) to regulate the occupation of mineral lands, and to extend the right of preemption thereto, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. NYE to the amendment reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining. The amendment of Mr. NYE was to insert after the word "thereupon," in the fourteenth line of the third section of the amendment of the committee, the words "but said plat, survey, or description shall in no case cover more than one vein or lode; and no patent shall issue for more than one vein or lode, which shall be expressed in the patent issued."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. There are two or three verbal amendments which I wish to make. In the first place, I move, in line two of section three of the committee's amendment, to strike out the words "plat and survey" and insert "diagram." The amendment is merely to avoid confusion, because the word "plat" is used in another connection.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In the same section after the word "act," in line three, I move to insert "and posting the same in a conspicuous place on the claim together with a notice of intention to apply for a patent."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In section three, after the word "notice," in the amendment already inserted in line twelve, I move to insert "and giving satisfactory evidence that said diagram and notice have been posted on the claim during said period of ninety days." This amendment was suggested by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In section four, line twelve, after the word "discoverer," I move to insert the words "of the lode."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In line ten of the same section I move to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read, "that no location hereafter made shall exceed two hundred feet in length along the vein for each locator."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. At the end of the fourth section I move to insert:

And provided further, That no person may make more than one location on the same lode, and not more than three thousand feet shall be taken in any one claim by any association of persons.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. CONNESS. What is the amendment?
Mr. STEWART. The substitute reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the reading of the amendment asked for?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. The amendment is the whole bill. It has been printed, and it is hardly worth while to consume time by reading it.

Mr. GRIMES. It has been amended in many respects since it was printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When the bill was last under consideration I made a motion to strike out certain sections, and I submit to the Chair that that motion is now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is right. The question is on his motion to strike out sections two, three, four, five, six, seven, and eight of the amendment reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My intention was to make some extended remarks upon the subject-matter of this bill and upon the project of selling the mineral lands; but as the time of the Senate is so precious I will not tax its patience with any speech upon that subject, but content myself with reading an extract from a letter which I have in my hands, which seems to me to state one sufficient and fatal objection to this bill and to all other bills of a similar nature. I do not produce the letter as authority; but if the Senate will hear what the writer says, of course it can judge of the correctness and sufficiency of his statements. He says:

"By the press reports in late morning papers, I see that the bill providing for the sale of our mineral lands was before the Senate on the 18th instant; and I note your motion to strike out the second to eighth sections, inclusive. That bill is laden with infinite mischief to the great mining interests of the Pacific States and Territories, and your proposition would retain only such parts of the bill as are just and proper, and which, if a law, would tend to produce the most rapid development of the mines and the largest yield of the precious metals."

"I hope the bill may not pass, but that it will go over to another Congress, or at least to the next session, in order that the mining men of our country may be heard from, and that Senators may be more fully advised."

"But that for which I most desire to write is in regard to a great feature of quartz mining that is wholly ignored in this bill; an interest which, in my opinion, is of paramount importance. I allude to the rights and interests of tunnels and tunnel companies; organizations of miners formed for the purpose of running deep-drain tunnels or adits, commencing the same, of course, always low down at the foot of the hill or slope or mountain in which lie the mineral-bearing lodes or veins; and with the view of mining on the same at greater depths than is practicable, and sometimes even possible, for the same lodes to be worked by those miners or companies who claim on the outcropping veins upon the crest or surface of the hill, and who work through shafts sunk perpendicularly. These tunnel projects and companies are numerous in California, in Nevada, and in Idaho, and are fast becoming the great feature of silver mining, and, as I confidently believe, will ultimately prove the most successful way of getting out the ores containing the precious metals; especially in all districts where the topography of the country is such as to render deep tunneling practicable. Individuals or companies engaged in this kind of mining often make no claim originally to the lodes at the surface, but run their work into the mountain to discover, if haply they may find them." Senators need to be reminded that gold and silver quartz lodes are not like iron or coal or galena or copper mines. They are generally found in narrow veins of one foot to five or seven feet in thickness, sometimes, though rarely, extending to fifteen or twenty feet. These stand often perpendicular and sometimes with a slight dip or angle in the mountain. To measure and make sale of these, by rods and acres upon the surface, would be like measuring a string by square rule, or determining the length and height of a party-wall by cube measurement.

"Gold and silver quartz mining in our country is in its infancy; the customs and rules among miners, even, which should govern it are being formed and established by the light of experience. Almost all that has yet been done has been by a surface skimming and pit-hole process, while the vast and deep lodes of precious ore lie yet undiscovered. The Comstock lode in Nevada was discovered in 1858, and the mines of Idaho, Montana, and Colorado in years of age development can be counted upon the fingers of a single hand. The experience, however desired in this class of mining, all over the world shows a very uniform law that where true fissure veins have been discovered they may be relied upon for a gradual increase in width and richness to the greatest depth possible for the miner to obtain.

"The lowest working levels in the quartz mines of Nevada are only from four hundred to five hundred and twenty-five feet, the lowest developments being from six hundred to seven hundred and fifty feet; and few mines only are below two hundred and fifty feet in depth. The great obstacles in the way of successful mining upon these quartz-bearing lodes are rapid accumulation of water in the shafts and chambers, and the want of easy ventilation. These can be best obviated by deep-drain tunnels. And in the long run legitimate and successful mining in our country, where the topography of a district will admit, must be carried on through this means of approach.

"Now, see how this proposed bill will work. Tunnel mines and tunnel companies make no claim to lodes or veins by surface discovery or development; sometimes there are no outcroppings, but the work is begun and prosecuted upon the faith of certain indications; in the language of the miner, they 'run for the blind lodes;' and if any have been located upon the mountain they prosecute the work of their tunnels so as to strike or touch the lodes nearly at right angles to their general course. They pass on into the mountain, cutting as many lodes as they may be able to reach, and mine upon such as prove of sufficient width or richness to warrant the work, by drifting or chambering along the lode, both to the right and left of the tunnel line; and all the ore as quarried is removed to the mouth of the tunnel in barrows or in hand-cars, thence to the mills for crushing and reduction. In this manner the miners through a tunnel may honey-comb all the lodes in a hill or mountain where their tunnel penetrates, and make no work upon and assert no claim to the surface or area of the ground. By the local laws and customs, as now established in mining districts, there is no conflict of interest or of title or of working with those miners who at the same time may be prospecting and raising ore through shafts sunk, perhaps, upon the same lodes at the surface or on the top of the mountain. Both parties pursue their work, it may be for years, until they chance to come together; their priority of right is simply determined by priority of possession. These tunnels, as a general thing, are projected so far below the surface claims, that there can be no interference; rather each proves a valuable aid and ally in the work of the other. The surface miner could not prosecute his work to a great depth if the tunnel was not below, through which he may hope for drainage and ventilation, and an additional outlet for the ore in his deep chambers; and the tunnel can the better be run by making a connection with all the shafts which may be sunk from time to time along the lodes. I venture the prediction that in twenty years of all the millions of bullion to be extracted from the gold and silver-bearing quartz veins, nineteen twentieths will be obtained from ores that shall be brought to the reduction mills by and through deep drain tunnels; provided that our Congress does not cripple or ruin these interests by legislation such as is proposed in this bill.

"Look at the great mines of Europe and we shall find almost all valuable explorations and developments made through tunnels such as I have attempted to describe. In the famous Frieberg (Saxony) mines a great drain tunnel of several miles in length has been run, through which much of the ore from lodes that could be reached by perpendicular shafts of a few hundred feet is taken out. In Nevada and in Idaho I am cognizant of several fine tunnels which have been projected. Some of them already run a length of three to four hundred feet, and which will strike out valuable lodes at a depth of five hundred to fifteen hundred feet, and in a few cases two thousand feet, below the surface. For all these valuable and (to our country) the most important mining enterprises and rights there are in this bill no provisions for protection or recognition. They are totally ignored in a proposition to sell gold and silver lodes by the same survey and measurement with which one might buy and sell a coal mine or a stone quarry. The provisions in the second and ninth sections of the bill do not and cannot be construed to apply to them. The present mining laws and customs regulate and protect them; but let the surface claimants once get their patents, possessing them in fee of the area of the mountains filled with lodes, and how and where would the tunnel miner's right and interest be found?

"The gold and silver-bearing quartz lands of the public domain ought never to be sold. The veins of ore which by the miners' custom and law are determined and held for work, by lineal measurement, are all, absolutely all, that are valuable in the domain to induce settlement, discovery, and development. Remove those lodes and the lands would not be worth a furthing for a thousand acres; Nevada and Colorado and Arizona and New Mexico would become, for the most part, uninhabited deserts; and Idaho and Montana would be totally abandoned to the roving Indians; the inducements which attract and hold our sturdy settlers in all those localities would be gone, entirely gone. There is somewhere in an oriental country a curious provision about title to the realty, which is somewhat akin to the customs and rules among miners. A man in Ispahan may buy a town lot, and if not expressed in the deed has not the right to build his house above a single story, but the original proprietor owns the air above and can add a second or third story. Now, if Congress are to insist upon a sale of the mineral lands, and will provide for two or three stories or strata of titles, through the mountains, in which are discovered the gold and silver-bearing quartz veins, we may be able to adjust the miners' law to the statute of Congress. And wherever the surface claims shall sell at five dollars per acre they may be assured that the basement floor in the mineral mansion will sell at fifty dollars per acre; and the sub-basement, say one thousand feet below, at $500 per acre."

Mr. STEWART. Who is the writer of that letter?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not propose to give the name to the Senate, as it is a private letter and addressed to me, and I claim nothing for the author. If what he says in the letter is not in itself entitled to any weight, then, of course, it will not be so considered; but I submit whether the arguments made in that letter are not of consequence. They embrace one objection which I intended to make in case I addressed the Senate generally upon this question; but so far as this particular bill is concerned, it seems to me this man understands the bill, and I think he understands the subject about which he writes; and as he has expressed my views upon that point in a better form than I could express them, I have taken the liberty to read this extract from his letter; and I submit what he has said to the consideration of Senators.

Mr. STEWART. I will simply say in regard to that letter that it is a very good argument against Julian's bill in the House of Representatives, which is a proposition to sell the lands and let them go into private hands; but so far from injuring the development of that country by tunneling, this bill is the very thing to encourage it. It provides that when a man has found a vein and improved it to the extent of $1,000 he may get a title. That is the very thing that the tunneling companies want. I know a great many men engaged in that work. I have many constituents engaged in it. They are all pressing for a title when they find a vein. They say, if we run into the mountain and take the chances we want the privilege of buying the vein when we discover it. This bill will allow them to buy nothing but the vein, and expressly, in so many words, holds the entire country open to development. The argument in that letter as to the inconveniences that would arise apply to Julian's bill, which would sell the lands and stop the development. This is simply a confirmation of the present title enabling the miners—those who are working in good faith—when they have spent their money in this way, to acquire titles and to have no further difficulty about it, and keeping the entire country open. If I could have five minutes' conversation with the writer of that letter, explain the bill to him, and let him read the section so as to understand it, he would be a warm advocate of the bill. He evidently has not read it, and he has fallen into the popular prejudice of supposing that the land is to be sold in rectangular form between perpendicular lines. It has been explained that that cannot be done. A vein pitches into a hill, and a perpendicular line would cut it up into pieces. He speaks of that. This bill provides for selling the vein, following it into the earth, with its natural angles and dips. None of the objections which he urges are applicable to this bill. This is simply a confirmation of the miner's title. The writer of that letter would be more rejoiced at the passage of this bill, if he understood it, than of any other measure. I see that from the reading of the letter. I know he would be in favor of the bill, if he understood it, from what he says.

Mr. HENDRICKS. A year ago the Senator from Nevada, and I think the Senators from California and Oregon, asked us to oppose the granting of an appeal from the highest courts of the Territories to the Supreme Court of the United States in cases involving the rights of miners. I heard the able argument, I recollect, of the Senator from Nevada with interest, and I became satisfied that the views expressed by him and the other Senators from the Pacific coast were correct upon that question; and I joined with them in advocating their views upon the ground that the interests of the country required that the usages and customs of the miners should be maintained. Those usages could not be respected in the Supreme Court of the United States, and therefore I felt it to be my duty to vote with them in opposition to that measure. Now, sir, they ask us to go much further than that, not alone to recognize the rights, customs, and habits of the miners, but to attempt to vest a title in the mines in favor of the particular occupant. I do not think that can be safely done. I shall vote for the proposition of the Senator from Oregon to strike out the sections which he proposes to strike out. If the Senators will prepare a bill and present it, recognizing and establishing the usages and customs of the miners, I shall give it my support. If the Senators are afraid that at any time the officers of the Government will interfere with the miners in the prosecution of their business according to their own customs, I am willing by law to say that it shall not be done; but to go further than that I think is not safe. I cannot vote for this bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I only wish to say now that this bill contains more than has been stated by the Senator, who regards it as a bill to enable the miner engaged in vein-running to obtain a title to his mine when that vein has been well defined. It does more, I say; it proposes to allow the Interior Department to segregate the mining from the agricultural lands in the vast and mighty area that is now unsurveyed and not subject to sale, and in which no title is obtainable to lands for any purpose. There is nothing better understood, I apprehend, when it is brought to the minds of men, than that improvements of a permanent character for the purposes of vine-growing, or for agriculture in all its departments, horticulture, pomology, &c., cannot take place nor be made with security unless there is a title to the land upon which they are proposed to be made. Those improvements never were made and never can be made and never will be made, to the extent that a good form of society requires, until title is obtained to the land on which they are to be made, so that there will be an absolute ownership in the party that invests his labor and his capital; and, sir, a society without the refinements and domestic provisions that the class of improvements to which I have referred furnish hardly can be called a society at all.

This segregation of the vast masses of the public domain within what is called, in general terms, the mining region, is so necessary that that particular part of this bill is of the greatest possible consequence to the entire population. One of the greatest vagaries of this letter-writer, as I noticed while the letter was being read, is that he says that the entire area of the country is worth nothing except to the miner alone for mining purposes. Why, sir, it contains the finest lands under the sun, within, in many instances, the finest climates on the face of the earth. But he says not an inch, or some small part, to a thousand acres of it would be occupied by men unless for its mining value. Why, sir, I have my residence and home in California at an elevation in the mountains of twenty-five hundred feet above the level of the sea. There in my garden grow all the finer qualities of the grape that we import from Europe. The Royal Muscat of Alexandria, that is grown in every other country than ours under glass, is grown there without any respect to season whatever. So with all the finer varieties which I might go on to name; and a country like that, capable of production of that kind, is to be left forever and ever without the possibility of acquiring an ownership to it simply because here and there there is a mine!

Sir, I am in favor of miners. I believe them in a new country and in our new country to be a people particularly and especially deserving encouragement and protection, and by no vote nor act of mine would I invade any right of theirs. We do not propose to sell, as is proposed to be sold in the House bill referred to by the Senator from Nevada, known as Julian's bill, the entire mining area by the acre; we do not propose to interfere now with the disposition of what are known as the placer mines; but we propose, for the purpose of giving a certainty of ownership, for the purpose of inviting capital in the production of the precious metals, to ascertain vein mines, and to give a title to the actual occupier. I say to the honorable Senator from Indiana, who has always, I concede—and I am glad to pay him the compliment in this connection—seen with a clear eye what was best for that country, and has heretofore expressed and does now express the most liberal opinions in regard to it, that this bill proposes in legislation very little, and that little going to the confirmation of what these people themselves have done, not changing the valuable system they have established in one single jot or tittle, but carefully going thus far and no further; and I cannot imagine any greater boon to the occupants and owners of mines, and to the occupants and owners of other improvements in those mighty and extensive areas, than to give them gradually some means of obtaining an absolute ownership and title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, I would not have it understood that I dissent from the views expressed by the Senator from California upon the importance of a separation of the mineral and agricultural lands. I agree with him that there are agricultural lands of very great value to be found in the midst of the mineral region, and it is of first importance that the Government should take steps to ascertain what lands are agricultural, with a view to dispose of them to the agriculturist. I advocated that during this session when I insisted upon a liberal appropriation to be placed under the charge of the General Land Office for this very purpose. But I ask that Senator, and I ask other Senators, how the mineral lands and the agricultural lands are to be separated. It must be by examination, by a survey made by competent men of some scientific information, to say the least of it. It is a matter of fact to be ascertained what lands are mineral and what agricultural, and I will vote with that Senator at any time for a very large appropriation to ascertain and survey the agricultural lands that they may be disposed of to the farmers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not intend to protract this discussion, and I concur in what has just been said by the Senator from Indiana. I acknowledge that it is necessary that the agricultural lands should be segregated from the mineral lands of the country; but that does not necessarily involve the survey and sale of those lands that are acknowledged to be mineral lands—gold and silver-bearing lands. I admit, too, that it would be desirable if titles could be obtained to these mining claims, as titles can be obtained to the agricultural portion of the country; but I insist that it is impracticable at the present time to obtain such titles, because complicated interests have arisen in the mineral regions which will prevent the acquisition of such titles without great injustice to some portions of the community.

The writer of the letter which I read was misunderstood by the Senator from California. He said that Arizona, Nevada, and New Mexico would substantially be of little value if it were not for the mining interests of those countries; and I suppose upon that point there can be little or no question. I think that the point made by the writer of that letter against this bill is well taken, and it is impossible for me to see how this bill does provide for tunnel companies in the mineral region or how the interests of such companies are protected by its provisions. The bill provides in section four "that no location hereafter made shall exceed three hundred feet in length along the vein for each location, with an additional claim for discovery to the discoverer, with the right to follow such vein to any depth, with all its dips, variations, and angles, together with a reasonable quantity of surface for the convenient working of the same, as fixed by local rules." If a tunnel is started on the side of a mountain with a vein of mineral running into it or for the purpose of striking blind lodes, under this bill the person who commences that tunnel must take a claim of three hundred feet in extent at the mouth of this tunnel; and now I should like to know whether he can go beyond the boundary of the surface claim which he takes in prosecuting work upon that tunnel. Suppose he takes a claim of three hundred feet in extent and another man takes an adjoining claim of three hundred feet in extent in the direction in which the tunnel runs, can the first man by means of that tunnel not only go through his own claim of three hundred feet, but pass on through the adjoining claim of three hundred feet and go into that mountain as far as it may be profitable for him to follow a lode or make a tunnel? If that is the provision of the bill, this section does not mean anything when it says "that no location hereafter made shall exceed three hundred feet in length along the vein for each locator."

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to explain. They never run along the vein longitudinally with a tunnel. They run into the hill and cut the vein at angles. That provision in the bill which declares that a locator shall have three hundred feet in length has nothing to do with that. That is the mining rule now. As to tunneling, we provide that if there shall be any difficulty about the right of way or draining, the local Legislature shall be empowered to grant the right of way if it is ever interfered with. The miners' rules always concede the right of way to run into a barren mountain. There will be no difficulty on that point; but to guard it and make it secure, we provide that the Legislature may make regulations for granting the right of way and in regard to drainage. While now on the floor, as authority is being produced here from the mining regions, I beg leave to read an extract from one of the leading and best journals in the mining regions, edited by one of the most intelligent men there. I read from the Daily Mining Journal, published at Black Hawk, Colorado Territory, the answer given by the editor to a correspondent calling himself "One of 'em':"

"'One of 'em' asks us day before yesterday what we are to do under the proposed mining law, where lodes cross each other and run out and in within ten feet of each other. We answer, do just as we do now. We seem to get along with it somehow or other, and the law proposes to make plats of lode property in accordance with local customs and rules. If we are to be harassed until we have perfected a plan that shall be theoretically perfect and correct in every particular, we shall always be harassed. It is well enough to insist, too, that Congress shall let the past alone; but Congress won't do it. We have protested and suggested until Congress has at last fallen upon a scheme—at least the committee has—which recognizes acquired rights precisely as our own laws recognize them. In the name of sense, what more could we ask? It is nothing to us that it will cost more than it will come to; that's what we have always told them; that's the experience of the past; but they don't believe it. It is something to us, however, to have the critical question settled, even if not so as to work out perfectly smooth and harmless to all parties concerned."

And that will be the language of every mining district: "What more can we ask than this bill?" It settles everything.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to have the Senator refer me to that portion of this bill which authorizes the Legislature of a State to protect tunneling interests.

Mr. STEWART. It is a section which was added to the bill on my motion. I ask the Clerk to read that section.

The Secretary read the eleventh section of the amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That as a further condition of sale, in the absence of necessary legislation by Congress, the local Legislature of any State or Territory may provide rules for working mines, involving easements, drainage, and other necessary means to their complete development; and those conditions shall be fully expressed in the patent.

Mr. STEWART. If there is a tunnel in progress of construction the party getting a deed to the vein cannot cut off the right of way for the tunnel. If he attempts to interfere with it the Legislature can regulate that matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that I fully understand that amendment in its application to the other sections of this bill, and I think it will take some time to reconcile these different amendments with the original sections of the bill. But this amendment, as I understand it, proposes now to confer upon the Legislative Assembly of any State or Territory the right to regulate and control the mining interests of the State or of the Territory, so that the property of the United States, as well as the rights of the miners, will be subject to the legislative control of the State or of the Territory. Here is a conflict of jurisdiction at once, between Congress and the legislative power of the States.

It seems to me that these amendments which the Senator is constantly making to this bill serve to indicate that it is impossible for him to perfect a system which will answer the purpose he has in view; and here he now provides by this amendment for a sort of patched up system, a part of which is to be under the control of Congress and a part of which is to be under the control of the legislative department of each State.

Now, sir, I say that, in my judgment, the policy for Congress to pursue on this subject is simply to pass a law making the gold and silver-bearing lands of the United States open to exploration and to occupation, and to confirm by something in the nature of a quit-claim deed, without any reservations or qualifications or any equivalent, to those persons who occupy or may occupy the mineral lands of the United States, according to the usages and the customs of the district where they may live, the right and title to the land. That is all that is necessary. That is equivalent in all respects to a patent from the Government of the United States, and whenever any controversy arises in any of these mining districts in reference to the right to the different claims, that right will be determined by the laws and customs and usages of that community, and it would not be necessary to refer to the records of the United States, or to any proceedings in Washington, or to any laws of Congress, in order to determine those rights. But, sir, I did not intend to discuss the merits of the bill, and will not trouble the Senate further on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 7, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I give it up. I think there is a majority of the Senate against the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum of the Senate present by the vote.

Mr. WILSON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. WILSON. It cannot be withdrawn. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 10, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clark, Edmunds, Foster, Hendricks, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Williams, and Yates—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Cram, Creswell, Fessenden, Guthrie, Harris, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Davis, Dixon, Dozette, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McBoagall, Morrill, Norton, Poland, Sprague, Wade, and Wright—18.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is Senate bill No. 1, to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Maine who had that bill in charge, [Mr. Morrill,] which is the order of the day, is sick and confined to his room. He desires to be present when it is under discussion, and he requested me to move if it came up that it be postponed. I therefore, at his request, move its postponement until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. Is there any question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not.

Mr. HOWE. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 344.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Wisconsin give way a moment? All we want is a vote on this mining bill. We have had the whole thing discussed, and are ready to vote. I presume there will be no more amendments. I ask a vote.

Mr. HOWE. Why not let my bill be taken up, and then I will yield?

Mr. STEWART. This is up now, and let the vote be taken.

Mr. HOWE. I understand it is not up.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator from Nevada will take the course proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. As soon as this bill is taken up it can lie over informally for a moment while we get a vote.

Mr. HOWE. I have no objection to that. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Wisconsin repeat his motion?

Mr. HOWE. That the Senate proceed to consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. Now I suggest that this bill be laid over informally for an instant until we get a vote on the measure which was under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that this bill be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill in hand previous to the expiration of the morning hour. Is there any objection?

Mr. HOWE. I understand, if it is laid aside, informally, when that bill is disposed of this will be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the impression of the Chair. The bill (S. No. 257) to regulate the occupation of mineral lands and to extend the right of preemption thereto is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to. It is to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the mineral lands of the public domain, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and occupation by all citizens of the United States, and those who have declared their intention to become citizens, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and subject also to the local custom or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same may not be in conflict with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever any person or association of persons claims a vein or lode of quartz or other rock in place, bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, having previously occupied and improved the same according to the local custom or rules of miners in the district where the same is situated and having expended in actual labor and improvements thereon an amount of not less than $1,000, and in regard to whose possession there is no controversy or opposing claim, it shall and may be lawful for said claimant or association of claimants to file in the local land office a diagram of the same so extended laterally or otherwise as to conform to the local laws, customs, and rules of miners, and to enter such tract and receive a patent therefor, granting such mine, together with the right to follow said vein or lode with its dips, angles, and variations to any depth, although it may enter the land adjoining, which land adjoining shall be sold subject to this condition.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That upon the filing of the diagram as provided in the second section of this act, and posting the same in a conspicuous place on the claim together with a notice of intention to apply for a patent, the register of the land office shall publish a notice of the same in a newspaper published nearest to the location of said claim, and shall also post such notice in his office for the period of ninety days; and after the expiration of said period, if no adverse claim shall have been filed, it shall be the duty of the surveyor general, upon application of the party, to survey the premises and make a plat thereof, indorsed with his approval, designating the number and description of the location, the value of the labor and improvements, and the character of the vein exposed; and upon the payment to the proper officer of five dollars per acre, together with the cost of such survey, plat, and notice, and giving satisfactory evidence that said diagram and notice have been posted on the claim during said period of ninety days, the register of the land office shall transmit to the General Land Office said plat, survey and description, and a patent shall issue for the same thereupon; but said plat, survey, or description shall in no case cover more than one vein or lode, and no patent shall issue for more than one vein or lode, which shall be expressed in the patent issued.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That when such location and entry of a mine shall be upon unsurveyed lands, it shall and may be lawful, after the extension thereto of the public surveys, to adjust the surveys to the limits of the premises according to the location and possession and plat aforesaid, and the surveyor general may, in extending the surveys, vary the same from a rectangular form to suit the circumstances of the country and the local rules, laws and customs of miners: Provided, That no location hereafter made shall exceed two hundred feet in length along the vein for each locator, with an additional claim for discovery to the discoverer of the lode, with the right to follow such vein to any depth, with all its dips, variations, and angles, together with a reasonable quantity of surface for the convenient working of the same as fixed by local rules: And provided further, That no person may make more than one location on the same lode, and not more than three thousand feet shall be taken in any one claim by any association of persons.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to establish additional land districts and to appoint the necessary officers under existing laws, wherever he may deem the same necessary for the public convenience in executing the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever adverse claimants to any mine located and claimed as aforesaid, shall appear before the approval of the survey, as provided in the third section of this act, all proceedings shall be stayed until a final settlement and adjudication in the courts of competent jurisdiction of the rights of possession to such claim, when a patent may issue as in other cases.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That wherever prior to the passage of this act, upon the lands heretofore designated as mineral lands which have been excluded from survey and sale, there have been homesteads made by citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become citizens, which homesteads have been made, improved, and used for agricultural purposes, and upon which there have been no valuable mines of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper discovered, and which are properly agricultural lands, the said settlers or owners of such homesteads shall have a right of preemption thereto, and shall be entitled to purchase the same at the price of $1 25 per acre, and in quantity not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres, or said parties may avail themselves of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 20, 1862, entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," and acts amendatory thereof.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That upon the survey of the lands aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior may designate and set apart such portions of the said lands as are clearly agricultural lands, which lands shall thereafter be subject to preemption and sale as other public lands of the United States, and subject to all the laws and regulations applicable to the same.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes aforesaid is hereby acknowledged and confirmed: Provided, however, That whenever, after the passage of this act, any person or persons shall, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injure or damage the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the right of way for the construction of highways over public lands, not reserved for public uses, is hereby granted.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That as a further condition of sale, in the absence of necessary legislation by Congress, the local Legislature of any State or Territory may provide rules for working mines, involving easements, drainage, and other necessary means to their complete development; and those conditions shall be fully expressed in the patent.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. STEWART, the title was amended so as to read, "A bill to legalize the occupation of mineral lands and to extend the right of preemption thereto."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JUSTIN S. MORRILL of Vermont, Mr. WILLIAM B. ALLISON of Iowa, and Mr. CHARLES H. WINFIELD of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bills without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 30) to create an additional land district in the State of Oregon;

A bill (S. No. 173) to amend an act entitled "An act granting land to the State of Michigan to aid in building a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior," approved March 3, 1865; and

A bill (S. No. 219) granting certain lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a ship-canal to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the lake known as Lac La Belle, in said State.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bill, with amendments to each, in which amendments it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 37) making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 690) to explain and limit an act to grant the right of way to the Humboldt Canal Company through the public lands of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 733) for the discontinuance of land offices and authorizing modifications in the limits of certain land districts; and

A bill (H. R. No. 734) granting lands to the State of Minnesota for the establishment of an asylum for the relief of disabled soldiers and sailors of that State and of the United States.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 27th instant, the following acts:

An act (S. No. 59) to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statutes of the United States;

An act (S. No. 180) for the relief of A. J. Gray;

An act (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Mrs. Amarilla Cook;

An act (S. No. 275) for the relief of Cornelius Crowley;

An act (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair at Rock Island, in the State of Illinois;

An act (S. No. 200) for the relief of Jane Harris;

An act (S. No. 276) for the relief of Mrs. Jerusha Witter;

An act (S. No. 298) granting a pension to Jane D. Brent;

An act (S. No. 326) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker;

An act (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin;

An act (S. No. 342) for the benefit of Ira B. Curtis;

An act (S. No. 375) to amend an act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry; and

An act (S. No. 381) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters," approved April 20, 1866.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Navy with an accompanying copy of a report and map prepared by the board of examiners appointed under the authority of the joint resolution approved June 1, 1866, to examine a site for a fresh-water basin for iron-clads of the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, which were disagreed to by the House of Representatives and upon which the House requested a committee of conference.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I make the usual motion that the Senate insist on its amendments non-concurred in by the House, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent, and Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. VAN WINKLE, and Mr. GUTHRIE were appointed the committee.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Chair appoint the committee of conference on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

PILOT KNOB AND HELENA RAILROAD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 37) making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas.

Mr. BROWN. Let that bill lie on the table for the present. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 690) to explain and limit an act to grant the right of way to the Humboldt Canal Company through the public lands of the United States; the bill (H. R. No. 733) for the discontinuance of land offices and authorizing modifications in the limits of certain land districts, and the bill (H. R. No. 734) granting lands to the State of Minnesota for the establishment of an asylum for the relief of disabled soldiers and sailors of that State and of the United States were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara ship-canal, which was taken up on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] a few moments since, and was then laid aside by common consent, is now before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, but was interrupted by Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask if it is in order now, before the reading is completed, to move to postpone this bill. The motion that I desire to submit, perhaps, might as well be made before the bill is read at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to postpone is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move, then, to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the first Monday of December next. I will state the reason why I am induced to make this motion. This bill, we all know, involves an appropriation ultimately of $6,000,000. It is for the purpose of building a very important work, well understood by every member of the Senate, around the falls of Niagara, within the State of New York. The Committee on Commerce of the Senate have reported, as an amendment to this bill, the following section:

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not take effect unless the Legislature of the State of New York shall, within one year of the date hereof, give its assent thereto.

The consequence is, that if we shall spend much of the remaining hours of the session upon this bill, no action can be had under it until after the Legislature of New York meets; and that, I am informed, is not until the first Monday in January next. This bill also proposes to incorporate a company to build an improvement within the State of New York, and it involves very grave constitutional questions, which always give rise to debate in this body. If the State of New York assents to the building of this work within its limits, and by a corporation of the United States, and if the provisions of this bill depend upon that condition-precedent, it is manifestly proper that we should first get the assent of the State of New York; and to avoid the constitutional questions that will be raised, it will be very proper that this corporation should be a corporation of the State of New York, and that the grant of Congress should be to the corporation of the State of New York, upon such conditions as Congress may prescribe.

I am not willing to pass a law involving an appropriation of $6,000,000, the validity of which will depend upon the act of a State Legislature, or the assent of a State to that law. I think we ought to compel the smaller power to act first, and give our consent afterward; and then if the State of New York consents to the building of a canal within its limits around the falls of Niagara, it must be done by the Legislature of that State, and that cannot be done until January next; and they might deem it much more proper to have this improvement constructed by a corporation organized under the laws of that State. Then it will be time enough for Congress to say whether it will grant aid on the part of the United States to the construction of the work. It seems to me we are putting the cart before the horse. We ought to wait until the Legislature of the State of New York acts, until it incorporates a company, and then we may in the usual way aid to any extent we may see proper in the construction of this work; but for us, at this period of the session, to waste our time upon the passage of a bill the whole validity of which depends upon the subsequent action of the Legislature of a State, it seems to me is not a wise disposition of the few days we have left.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to ask the Senator whether in his opinion the assent of the State is absolutely necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill requires it.

Mr. SUMNER. The proposed amendment to the bill requires it?

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment is reported by the committee, and as a matter of course by the friends of the bill. I take it, that being reported by the committee that brings the bill before us, it will be adopted; it is, at least, their desire that it should be adopted; and indeed without this amendment, perhaps—I cannot say positively—it would not have passed the committee. The fact that the committee did ingraft this amendment upon it, shows that without the assent of the Legislature of New York, the committee were not willing to undertake this work. I therefore submit to the Senate and to the Senator whether it is not better that the assent of the State of New York should first be obtained, as we make that a condition-precedent, that they should then prescribe the formula of a corporation and the mode and manner of constructing this work, and that then we give them our grant, if we give them any, upon such terms and conditions as we may prescribe afterward.

Mr. SUMNER. As the Senator has evidently reflected upon the question, the point to which I wished to draw his attention was, whether, in his opinion, the previous assent of New York was necessary. Of course, if in his opinion that is not necessary, it might lead him to vote against the proposition of the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt about the power of Congress to build a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara. If I was acting upon my own convictions, I have no doubt of the power of the Government to build any necessary works of this kind; but it is evident that that is a disputed and mooted question in the Senate that will give rise to long debates, and will occupy much of the time of the Senate; and this provision was put in for the purpose of avoiding that debate, for the purpose of getting around that debate evidently, and therefore it is idle for us to pass the bill—

Mr. SUMNER. It passed the House without that provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but it is here in the Senate, and we have got to act upon it. I take it, therefore, that that is the sense of the committee who reported this bill; and so it is manifest that we ought to wait until the consent of the State shall first be had, and then give our final sanction to the work afterward. I do not wish to pass a bill of twenty-eight sections at the close of the session, after a long debate, the entire validity of which depends upon the action of a local Legislature.

Mr. SUMNER. I will ask the Senator if we might not vote down the amendment of the committee and take the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is another question. I think we had better postpone the bill until next winter at any rate. It is only a short time.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I am very much surprised to hear the motion submitted by the Senator from Ohio. If the motion had been made to postpone the bill indefinitely it would not so much have surprised me, though such a motion as that would have surprised me, coming from the Senator from Ohio. I assume that there are some Senators on this floor who are opposed to undertaking this work at all; and for such a one to move to postpone it indefinitely would be legitimate. I do not assume, however, that the Senator from Ohio can be opposed to undertaking this work. If it is to be undertaken, it is to be undertaken either as a work which interests the State of New York solely, or as a work which interests the people of the United States. If it is a work which interests the people of New York alone, then the Senator from Ohio is entirely correct in supposing that we should say nothing until New York has undertaken it and asks our aid or co-operation; and if it interests New York alone, when she does undertake it, and asks our aid and co-operation, it is evident that we should refuse that aid and co-operation. But if, on the contrary, as I believe, it is a work which interests the nation more than the State of New York; which interests the nation almost to the exclusion of the State of New York; which interests the State of New York only as a part of the nation, then it seems evident to me that the Legislature of the United States should inaugurate the enterprise, and either prosecute it, as the Senator says we have the power to do, by our own authority and with our own means, or invite to it the co-operation and the assent of the State of New York.

Sir, we are raising in the States of the Northwest nine hundred million bushels of grain that we have got to sell somewhere; and in the States lying east of us there are a great many people who do not raise their own grain, and who want to purchase it. We are raising five hundred million bushels of corn, a very large portion of which our farmers are selling at from three to ten cents a bushel, and it is being consumed in the eastern States at a cost of not less than ninety cents a bushel. We are feeling more and more every year that we cannot afford to go to such markets at that cost. The project of building a canal around the falls of Niagara is one of those enterprises which it is supposed will very much diminish the expense of getting this produce to market. If it will diminish materially the cost of getting the grain and the other products of the West to market, then it is a work which interests the nation—not the State of New York, but the whole country—everybody who raises or who consumes those products. Whether it will diminish that expense or not, and if so, to what extent it will diminish it I am not prepared to state here. This bill is not, as it is now presented to the Senate, framed upon the supposition that we do know definitely and conclusively about that. This bill does not undertake to build this canal merely as a public work, but it proposes to aid private enterprise in building it, and only aids private enterprise which shall come forward in good faith and first put in its own money to the amount of $2,000,000 before the Government will advance a cent. The committee went upon the assumption that private capital would not undertake the work and put that amount of its own money into it if it was not satisfied that it was an important work and a proper one.

Mr. GILMES. How does the bill leave the regulation of the tolls?

Mr. HOWE. It leaves the regulation of tolls just as it is left in all other private enterprises, subject to no other restrictions than competing routes, with this additional provision, that if the company ever put tolls upon the carriage of produce or freight over this work which are felt to be onerous or unreasonable, the Government can take it from the company, at its cost, with ten per cent. added. As the bill came from the House, there were other regulations upon the tolls. We thought, inasmuch as we required the company to put in their own money first in this enterprise, that it was not fair to subject them to these additional restrictions. We leave them to get the return for their capital and get the return for the money that we propose to loan them, just as other companies get the returns for their investments. The House of Representatives have considered this subject, and have deemed it a very important work. They have passed a bill and sent it here and asked our assent to it. The Committee on Commerce have considered the bill, and have reported it back, with sundry amendments thereto, and recommended its passage. It seems to me it is due from the Senate to the great interests which are involved in this measure to consider it, and if they approve it, say so, and if they do not approve it, say that after they have considered it, and not before.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Wisconsin has stated that the Committee on Commerce have reported this bill back and recommended its passage. I think he will recollect that the report of the committee was not in favor of the bill. It was simply reported for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. An amendment was made subsequently, and with that amendment it received the sanction of a majority of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. The action of the committee was that the bill should be reported for the consideration of the Senate. I think I am not mistaken in that.

Mr. CHANDLER. The original bill was rejected; but with that amendment at the end of the bill the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORGAN] agreed to report it.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Maine is not present, and therefore I cannot say as to that; but my understanding is that it was reported for the consideration of the Senate, without any recommendation.

Mr. HOWE. My recollection is different from that of the Senator from New York. I think this bill, as it stands, has the support of a majority of the Committee on Commerce. That was my understanding of it, and I so reported the bill; and I did not mean to misrepresent the committee. That, however, can be ascertained to a certainty.

Mr. President, it does not seem to me advisable that the Senate should return to the House of Representatives and to that large body of the country which is looking to us for some help, for some effort in this direction, for an answer, that they will not consider a proposition of this kind; and therefore I am induced to hope that the Senate will not postpone its consideration until the next session. If we are going to inaugurate the thing at all, it is evident we must take precedence of the State of New York, and the sooner we invite the attention of New York to it the sooner New York will act upon it. As to the question whether we can build this canal without the assent of New York, my opinions coincide with those of the Senator from Ohio; but as the bill stands here, recommended by the Committee on Commerce, it does propose to invite the assent of New York, and does not propose to make it operative without the consent of the State of New York. But it is none the less a measure of national concernment, and being a measure of national concernment it is none the less proper that we should act at once if we are going to act at all.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. President, I have no question myself that the Government may build a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara for the defense of the nation, without the incorporation of a company for the purpose. I have great doubts whether we have any right to incorporate a company to do it. We have an official organization by which we can build forts and canals and everything else that is necessary. I object to these partnerships with State corporations. If we undertake to make a corporation to build this work, I doubt the propriety of it. I have no question that the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara would be of great advantage to the defense of the lakes. I have no doubt that it would be of great advantage to the commerce of the lakes, and still more to the commerce of New York. Any one by looking at the map will see that Canada must command to a greater or less extent the trade of the upper lakes, unless we have a large ship-canal capable of carrying the whole produce of those lakes to New York.

But, sir, I favor the postponement of this bill. I do not think we are now in a situation to commence this work. We feel in the West that it is just as important in a national point of view and just as important in a commercial point of view that we should open the lakes to the commerce of the southern portion of the nation as it is that we should open them to New York. We do not think that now is the time to commence such works, when we are struggling to consolidate the existing debt, to get it into a shape that the United States can bear it with ease and comfort, and give confidence to all the holders of the debt that we will pay it, and until we have seen really what that debt is. We do not know its amount, and I would advise gentlemen not to begin this system of expenditure until we know on what ground we stand. My judgment is in favor of this work; but I shall vote for postponing the bill, because I think we and the nation require time to reflect, time to think upon the subject, and time to mature our judgments. I do not intend to go into any further argument on the subject.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, I differ with the Senator from Kentucky. This is not a new question. It has been discussed for twenty years within my personal knowledge. It has been thought to be an enterprise that could be made a success, and of vast importance to the entire country. If this were a new question there would be some cause for its postponement. I do not propose now to indulge in argument, but simply to say that this subject has been considered at least for twenty years past within my personal knowledge. Various plans have been suggested. Engineers of the greatest eminence have undertaken to examine into its feasibility, and they have made their several reports. There have been several plans suggested altogether feasible, according to the understanding of, I think, competent engineers. This bill permits the exact manner of the communication to be left to the judgment of those who undertake the enterprise, which I think is wise.

Now, as to the objection of going into these things blindly, there is a little piece of history that should be well known by every Senator. After the Peninsular war, after Great Britain had been engaged on the Continent, and after the war of the French Revolution, she had accumulated an immense debt. How did she meet that debt? By immense enterprise, casting all her strength into the development of wealth; and from her very necessities up sprang the strength of Britain. That is recorded history. Now, to say that because we have a great public debt we should not engage in great public enterprises that are the foundation of wealth, is false policy and against all the laws that are known or have been taught from Aristotle down to this day.

This measure has always been regarded as an important one. Of the power of the Government in a matter national as this is I think there is no question. The exercise of the power for this particular purpose has been, in my judgment, too long delayed, and I trust we shall have action upon it now.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator from California has very correctly remarked that this is not a new measure. It has been the subject of most anxious consideration among commercial men for at least twenty-five years past, and perhaps for a longer period. It was before the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and ever since I have been here there has been more or less discussion respecting a canal around the falls of Niagara. At the long session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress it was very fully discussed and considered by one of the standing committees of this body, and, if I mistake not, a bill for the purpose passed the House of Representatives. It is undoubtedly an enterprise of very great importance, of great importance both to the West and to the East, and one which I predict will ultimately be accomplished; for it is impossible to conceive that with the present limited facilities for the transportation of the products of the great West the country will generally be content for any considerable period. Without going into particulars, it is sufficient to say now that the means of transportation of the agricultural productions of the western States, and of the northwestern States particularly, are by no means adequate to meet the public wants.

I hope, sir, that this measure will not be postponed, but that it will be taken up and acted upon by the Senate at the present session of Congress. For one, I am free to announce myself strongly and earnestly in favor of this measure. It is a measure which we need in the West as well as in the East, and I know of no public work at present in contemplation which will ultimately be of more value to the country and to the commerce and the agriculture of every part of the country. I hope that the measure will not be postponed, but that we shall proceed to consider the bill and pass it.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I cannot agree with my colleague in postponing this measure. I think, with the Senator from California and other Senators, that it is not a new question. It is one that has been before the public for several years, and every man of thought and reflection undoubtedly has made up his mind with regard to its merits. It is one of those measures so essential that in my judgment we cannot be too early in commencing it. I know that when any great measure is proposed to be undertaken it is always approached with some little hesitation; and the time seems never to come when you are to commence. It took us a great while before we could enter upon the project of building the Pacific railroad. I believe that it was up in Congress some eight or ten years every session before we had the courage to grapple with the question and enter upon the commencement of the work. It ought to have been commenced at least five years before it was, and now be in the process of completion; and it would have been if we had not had this same hesitation that I see now to commence this work. There was no reason for it then. The great project of the Pacific railroad was before us when we were almost entirely free from debt, and then this great nation, with no embarrassment at all upon it, did not seem to have the courage to commence it in season to have the full advantage that they would have got from it if they had commenced it at an earlier period. I do not think we got a great deal of additional information upon that subject at the time we did commence it over and above what we had at a much earlier period.

It is so with this work. It is always said by some that the time has not come to commence such a measure. Sir, I think the time has arrived. I have felt that it was a humiliation to this great nation for several years past that we paid toll to a foreign nation in navigating the lakes; that we suffered Great Britain, through her colonies, to institute these measures, instead of making a thoroughfare through our own country.

I do not believe that this measure will embarrass us in a financial point of view. I believe it will be worth infinitely more than it will cost. I believe, with the Senator from California, that when a nation is oppressed with great debts it is the last time in the world when it can lay down and fold up its hands and do nothing. Then is the time for it to extricate itself by its courage and by its perseverance in entering upon great and profitable enterprises that every man must admit will be of the greatest national importance when they are completed. The cost of making this great improvement will not compare with its advantages when made. The nation can afford to embark in a measure that will cost something to achieve, when we know that the accomplishment will be infinitely more than the cost of doing it. The credit of the nation is good; the enterprise will be beneficial; and the quicker we enter upon the project and begin to receive the profits of it the better. I am against the postponement. I am ready to second the motion of the House of Representatives, and put the thing forward as soon as it can be done. I hope we shall not postpone the bill, but shall enter upon its consideration, perfect the project, and put it through at this session.

Mr. CHANDLER. A majority of the Committee on Commerce were opposed to asserting the right of this Government to act independent of the State authority, and the bill could not be reported favorably, recommending its passage, without the amendment to which the Senator from Ohio objects. I object to that amendment as much as he does, and so did a large majority of the committee. I would much prefer that the Senator should move to strike out that objectionable proviso and take the sense of the Senate upon that, rather than to postpone the bill. I would prefer to pass the bill as it is, rather than not pass it at all; but I should be very glad—I will not make the motion myself—if the Senator from Ohio would make a motion that that proviso be stricken out. I do not believe that any State can raise a barrier against the commerce of other States. I do not believe it is in the power of any State to raise an obstacle between the different States of this Union. I believe the Government possesses the power to regulate commerce as it sees fit between the several States; and I do not believe that the State of New Jersey or the State of New York or any other State can raise an obstacle that shall interfere with the commercial relations between the other States of this Union. I believe it is as much in the power of this Government to build a canal around the falls of Niagara as it is to establish a post route from the city of Washington to the city of Richmond, or from the city of Washington to the city of New York. I believe we possess the requisite authority for the purpose under the war power as well as under the power to regulate commerce. As I stated before, a majority of the Committee on Commerce are against the assertion of that power, but I should be glad to take the sense of the Senate upon that point, and I should be glad to take it here. It is well known to the members of the Senate who have been here for the past four years that I have been striving for four years to get that power asserted. I should be glad to have it asserted, and I shall strive, while I have the honor of a seat in the Senate, to secure the assertion, either upon this or upon some other bill, of the right and power of Congress to build a railroad wherever it sees fit, without the sanction of the State, where it becomes necessary for us to go in our commercial relations or under the war power.

Mr. GRIMES. Being a representative in part of one of the States supposed to have a peculiar interest in the provisions of this bill, I desire to state briefly to the Senate the reasons which will control my vote. I would prefer very much that the Senator from Ohio should substitute a motion to recommit this bill to the Committee on Commerce for the motion which he has made to postpone it until the next session of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. You can move to recommit; and that, I think, will take precedence.

Mr. GRIMES. If so, I make that motion. I agree fully with the Senators who have preceded me in the opinion that Congress has the power of itself for defensive purposes to build a canal around the falls of Niagara, and I am in favor of the construction of such a canal. I entertain very great doubts whether we have the power to create a corporation and endow them with the authority for commercial purposes to go within the jurisdiction of the State of New York and construct a canal; but whether we have that power or not, believing that we can do the work ourselves and control it for ourselves and as we see fit, I am wholly unwilling to agree that Congress shall devolve this power on a private corporation, authorize them to go within the State of New York to construct a canal, and when it is constructed to enjoy the benefits of all the immense water power that will be created, and establish just such tolls as they may see fit for the transportation of agricultural and mechanical productions through that canal. This is the great objection that I have to the bill. If we have the power let us do it ourselves. Why do we want the interposition of a company?

Mr. President, I do not profess to be very familiar with the provisions of this bill; but it strikes my mind that this is one of the grandest privileges, and will result in being one of the most tremendous monopolies that ever was devised on this continent. We bestow upon this corporation the eminent domain that belongs to the State of New York, authorizing them to go into that State and construct a canal. We give to them all of the immense water power that will be secured by the construction of the canal—enough to make a dozen Lowells and Lawrences, and enough, in my opinion, to authorize any respectable company with capital to build the canal without the aid of the General Government in the way of money or of bonds. Then we authorize the company to fix as tolls upon the transportation of our agricultural products just such sums as they choose to fix. I am not disposed to put the agricultural interests of my section of the country into the keeping of any such corporation as is proposed to be created by this bill. And after this is done, according to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin, as I understand it, if the company discover that their work is not going to be as advantageous to the stockholders as they think it should be, and after they shall have arranged their accounts, "watered" their stock, perhaps, to suit them, then they can sell the work to the Government, if they will only be so unconscientious as to raise the tolls so as to make it in the view of Congress or the public extortionate if they should charge as much as they fix.

As I said before, no man is more anxious to have proper channels of communication between the Northwest and the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico than I am. I have no doubt as to the constitutional power of Congress to make those channels of communication. I am as anxious as anybody else is that Congress shall do it. If the Committee on Commerce will report to the Senate a bill providing that appropriations shall be made and expended under our Engineer corps, who are created and maintained for just such purposes, to construct such a line of communication between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, I will vote for it. I will go further, and will vote for a bill carrying this canal forward, for it will not be a very great advantage to our section of country to go down from Lake Erie into Lake Ontario, unless we can get beyond Lake Ontario. I will therefore go with the Committee on Commerce or any gentlemen who are in favor of continuing the construction of a ship-canal beyond Lake Ontario. But I do not want to put the public Treasury into the hands of a private corporation for the purpose of building any such channel, and allowing that corporation to fix just such tolls as they please on the transportation that may pass through it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to postpone the consideration of the bill until the first Monday in December next.

Mr. GRIMES. I think my motion takes precedence of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am informed that the rules of the Senate in regard to the precedence of motions are different from the rules of the other House. I withdraw my motion for the present in order to allow the Senator from Iowa to test the sense of the Senate on the question of recommitment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to postpone is withdrawn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I understand the question to be on recommitment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not yet heard any such motion. The bill has not been read at length, and the first business in order, unless some member moves a recommitment, will be the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understood the Senator from Iowa to move to recommit the bill, and I gave way to that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Iowa to move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir, I make that motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Upon that question I suppose it is hardly necessary to read the bill, and perhaps not altogether proper to go into a general discussion of its provisions. I have been very much gratified at the tone of this debate, and was particularly pleased with the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky, who seems to appreciate the great national importance of this enterprise. All the Senators who have spoken in regard to it have spoken of it as a work of vast importance, a work which the nation should undertake. The only question seems to be whether this is the proper time to move in it; the Senator from Kentucky thinking not, because we have a great national debt, the precise amount of which is not yet known; and until we ascertain in regard to that, and our finances are in a better condition, he thinks that we ought not to undertake an enterprise of this kind.

So far from the reasons suggested by the Senator from Kentucky being good reasons for the postponement of this measure, it seems to me they are the very ones which should induce us to take it up and act upon it at the present time. When an individual is pressed by debts, it is the very time for him to put forth all his efforts to meet his outstanding obligations. This is a proposition which is calculated to develop and increase the wealth of the country. The small amount which will thereby be added to the our national debt, trifling in comparison with the whole of it, is not to be taken into consideration as against the vast benefits to result to the whole country from opening this new avenue of commerce. Sir, no one can calculate, I will not undertake to conjecture, the increased value that would be given to the products of the West and of the Northwest if this canal were constructed to-day; and it is just as important to the East as to the West, because the productions of the West are consumed in the East, and whatever cheapens the transportation between different portions of the country is a benefit to all parts of the country.

Then, sir, in a national point of view, not simply as a commercial measure, but as a measure of defense, upon which ground also this bill is placed, there can be no question of the authority of the nation to construct this work. Why, then, should we not undertake it, and why not proceed with the consideration of the measure at this time? The motion to postpone is withdrawn, and now my friend from Iowa moves to recommit it. What can be gained by recommitting except delay? If this bill is to be recommitted, let it be recommitted with instructions; for if we send it back to the committee they would simply keep it or report it back to us in the same shape we now have it, unless they are instructed by the Senate as to the shape in which the body desires the bill to be presented. I cannot see that anything is to be gained by recommitting the bill.

I quite agree with what is said by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Ohio, that this being a national work is not to be built subject to the consent of the State of New York. If the nation has a right to construct the work as a means of national defense, has the right to make a canal around the falls for the passage of its vessels-of-war, the State of New York cannot stand in the way a moment, nor any other State, nor any private individual. The property of individuals and the territory of States may be entered upon by the Federal Government at any moment when it is necessary to the defense of the nation, and the State of New York can no more interpose her authority to prevent this great work when necessary for the national defense than could the State of Kentucky some years ago interpose her authority to prevent the armies of the United States from passing over her territory to put down the wicked rebellion which was inaugurated in 1861. I should not agree, I think it would be inconsistent for the nation to undertake a work of this character if any State had authority to interpose and to stop it. It is only on the ground that it is a national work that I could vote for it at all—a work necessary to the proper defense of the northern lakes, as well as a work required by the commercial interests of the country.

With this view I am in favor of considering this measure now. Every consideration should induce us to take it up and consider it. If the bill is not perfect, let us perfect it. If it is objectionable to place this work in the hands of a company, and it is best that it should be done directly by the nation, then let us do it directly by the nation.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Illinois will allow me to say that the objection to the course proposed by him is, that to attempt to amend the bill in that way would destroy the whole framework of the bill, and the Senator who reported the bill gives his assent to that proposition. My sole purpose in proposing to send it back to the committee is to allow them to change the character of the bill so as to make it truly a national work, and not partially and in a great degree a private work.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Iowa will present his instructions to the committee, as to the character of the bill they are to report, if it shall be one that seems to me better than that already reported by the committee, I should be glad to vote for it.

Mr. GRIMES. I should have drawn up some instructions if I had not understood ever since I have been here that it was not exactly in order to instruct a committee of this body as to the course they shall pursue, but merely to make inquiries or propose suggestions. It may be parliamentary to instruct a committee, but I think it is not according to the custom of this body. A committee is requested to inquire and not instructed to report in a particular way. I suppose, however, that if the sentiment of the Senate, as indicated by the debate, should be what I have suggested, the committee would of course report a bill in accordance with it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We can arrive at the point desired by the Senator from Iowa either by the submission of a substitute on his part, by committing it to some other committee, or by instructions. When we come to consider the bill and its features, it will be for the Senate to say whether it will be best to amend it or not. If the Senator desires to have this work done by the Government itself, he can move to strike out those provisions of the bill which place it in the hands of a company, and then, if that motion was sustained by the Senate and the bill was recommitted, the committee, understanding the views of the Senate, would frame a bill to carry out those views, and report it back to us, if it was necessary to recommit it at all.

I will not, at this moment, undertake to say whether it would be best for the Government to construct the work itself or through a company. That it has power to do it through a company, I have very little doubt. The question of the right of a company to take property for public uses is too well settled in this country to be raised at this time. The right of eminent domain existing in a State may be exercised through the means of a company for a public purpose. It has so been settled in all the States; and I think the Federal Government may, through a company, exercise this power. We have done it in the case of the Pacific railroad. In opening the great highway to the Pacific we have incorporated a company through whom the work is being done.

Mr. CLARK. We incorporated a company not in the States, but in the Territories.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That work runs into the State of California.

Mr. CLARK. But we did not undertake to charter the company to do it there.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We recognized a company incorporated by the State of California under the Pacific railroad bill, and another company, as I understand, in Kansas. It is analogous, in principle, to the chartering of the old United States Bank, which the Supreme Court sustained. I am aware it was always a controverted point among the politicians of the country whether the United States Bank was constitutional, but the Supreme Court of the United States sustained it as constitutional, upon the ground that Congress had authority to adopt such means as it deemed proper to accomplish a legitimate end. Now, it is a legitimate end to be accomplished to construct this ship-canal around these falls. That is conceded. It is for Congress to determine upon the most appropriate means to accomplish that object, and if it is believed to be the cheapest and the most proper mode of doing it to do it through the creation of a corporation, I doubt not that Congress may do it in that way.

But, sir, I did not propose to go into the merits of this bill at this time. My only object in saying anything was to urge upon the Senate its consideration now. Let us commence the consideration of it; let us test the sense of the Senate as to the right of the State of New York to put its veto upon this national work; let us see whether that section reported by a majority of the committee is to stand. We may do that much, at least; and I hope the bill will not be recommitted until we ascertain what is the sense of the Senate in regard to these vital questions: first, whether the work is to be done by a corporation, and second, whether it is to be done or not as the State of New York shall think proper to determine. I think we had better consider in the Senate and settle here these questions before we recommit the bill. Otherwise I can see no object in recommitting it. I think that now, when every consideration calls upon us to develop the resources of this country, to put forth the strength and energy of the nation in bringing out its wealth, is the very time when we should commence this great national work.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Illinois for his suggestion upon the subject of paying debts by increasing them. That is a new idea to me, and I think it is new to others. There is no doubt that when an individual is involved it is necessary that he should make the proper exertions to meet his obligations; but how would his creditors look at him if when he owed a million he should immediately engage in a work that would cost him a million more to a certainty, and without any certainty that a million more would accomplish it? The creditors would all lose confidence in his sanity; they would believe that that was not the way to secure them or to pay them; and I am not certain that these projects will not fix upon the Senate of the United States something like the same suspicion.

I was in favor of postponing this bill, because I thought we had not time now to mature it, because I thought the work ought not to be built by the Government in conjunction with a company, because I thought the great advantages and privileges that would result from the construction of this canal and the immense water power all along the line, were matters to be considered before we agreed to give them to a private company. If the Senator from Illinois, however, is right, and can find the means for this work, I suppose, from the cry he has raised, he will carry the measure; but he will carry it without my judgment being in favor of this hasty action. I recollect that when this bill was passed by the other House it fell upon everybody in the Senate with astonishment that it should be proposed to undertake an expenditure of this kind in the condition in which we are—not united, not conciliated, with eleven States not here to join us in council in relation to this description of works. Is this work going to make money enough to pay the national debt? How long will it be before this ship-canal will be done? I reckon it will work its way slowly and tediously along like the Pacific railroad.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is coming on very rapidly.

Mr. GUTHRIE. They are going ahead with it now; but if we had had that enterprise on hand when the war came on, how fast could we have constructed it? My judgment has always been in favor of the Pacific railroad. When I was in Mr. Pierce's Cabinet, and was there brought to the consideration of the subject, surveys having been ordered, I came to the conclusion, and I have never since changed my opinion, as to the necessity, the propriety, the wisdom, and the statesmanship of binding the west coast to the Atlantic by railroad communication, and I am not going now to be driven out of my judgment in favor of this ship-canal because gentlemen are disposed to undertake it in a way that I do not like, and at a time that I think inexpedient for the work, considering the condition in which we are. I shall not, however, undertake to discuss the subject or to go into its merits.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky gives his judgment in favor of the proposed ship-canal, but he gives his argument against it. He is in favor of delay, and the reason that he assigns for delay is that the country is already encumbered by a large national debt which we should not now increase by any additional expenditure, and he asks with a triumphant air whether before it has ever been proposed to reduce a national debt by increasing it. Now, sir, permit me to say that his question does not meet the case. It is proposed, so far as I understand the question now, to provide additional resources. To that end an additional expenditure is to be incurred; but the object is to secure additional resources. Out of those additional resources there will be increased means for the payment of the national debt. That is the precise answer which I make to the Senator from Kentucky; and as I understand him to make no other special objection to proceeding with the matter now, I feel that he is completely answered.

I confess, however, sir, that what fell from the Senator from Iowa produced more impression on my mind. His objection to the execution of this work by a corporation and to allowing that corporation to establish tolls which the people of his State and of other States at the West should be obliged to pay, certainly deserves attention.

Mr. SHERMAN. And there is the water power.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Ohio reminds me also of the large amount of water power which is to be given to this corporation. I say it deserves attention, and I am glad that the Senator from Iowa has brought that into the debate. But I think the Senator is mistaken when, on that account, he interposes the dilatory motion which he does by asking the re-reference of this proposition to the committee. I do not know that at a subsequent stage of the debate it may not be important to recommit it; but I believe that now where we are at this moment, we had better proceed with the consideration of the bill and especially have a vote of the Senate on the amendment reported by the committee. For one I wish an opportunity, and the sooner the better, to vote against that amendment. Senators about me say, so do they. Let us, then, proceed with the consideration of the bill, and I hope the Senate will vote down the proposition which is to invite the consent and cooperation of the State of New York. On that question I hope the Senate will establish a precedent. The time has come for us to assert the powers of the national Government, independent of the States, in certain cases. The argument thus far in this debate has gone very much on the military power of the Government; little allusion has been made to that other source of power which seems to me so ample; the power to regulate commerce among the States. I should prefer, perhaps, to found this exercise of power upon these words of the Constitution. I ask Congress now to interpose its power to regulate commerce among the States, to interpose it on a great occasion, under circumstances, I admit, of special responsibility when I consider the time and the occasion, but under circumstances which I think amply justify the exercise of the power. Who, sir, can doubt that under these special words of the Constitution we have full power over this whole question? Who can doubt that without asking the consent of New York we may establish a canal about the falls of Niagara? I think that no Senator who hears me can now hesitate as to the power of Congress over that whole question. Assuming, then, that Congress has the power, the only question that remains is as to the expediency of exercising it at this time; and that again brings me to the argument of the Senator from Kentucky, that at this time when we are involved in a large national debt we should not undertake to increase it. To that I have already replied, as the Senator from Illinois has also replied before me, that we undertake to provide additional resources, we seek to extend the commerce of the country, to enlarge its means, and to enable it to meet this national debt which has been imposed upon it.

I hope, sir, that there will be no delay, that the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill at once. The question is great; it is important; it is almost historical; it is nothing less than to determine whether the northern shores of Ohio and Illinois shall be brought forward to the ocean itself, so that the large towns there shall be, as it were, ports of the sea. By this ship-canal Chicago and Cleveland may be made sea-ports on the Atlantic coast. Sir, that is an object which is well worthy of an honest ambition, and I do ask the Senate without any delay to give its best attention to it.

Mr. STEWART. I am in favor of this great work, the building of this canal, and I wish to say to Senators who claim that it will be an increase of the national debt, that that depends upon another question. Our national debt is comparative. It is nominally $3,000,000,000. Our wealth is, according to the last census, in round numbers, $10,000,000,000, so that the debt is about twenty per cent. of the wealth of the country. Now, the question is not about adding $6,000,000 to the debt, but whether by adding $6,000,000 you will not increase the wealth more than $60,000,000. While a measure may increase the aggregate debt, if it does not increase the proportion of debt to wealth, and actually increases the wealth so that the debt bears a less ratio to the public wealth than it did before, it does not increase, but in fact decreases, the burdens of the country. I am of opinion that the building of this canal will add many hundred millions to the estimated value of the property of the West. As I traveled through that country last year, passed the falls of Niagara, saw the great valley of the Mississippi, saw their avenues of transportation clogged up, as it were, corn being used for fuel, I could not but reflect that if they had this additional outlet our national debt would be in fact diminished, for the national wealth would be increased.

I believe that it would be a great relief to the people of this country to enhance values. I believe it would reduce the national debt, and for that reason I am in favor of the project. We must develop the resources of this great country and grow if we would pay the national debt. Every time you double the wealth of the country you pay one half the debt, because the debt then only bears half as great a proportion to the value of the property of the country. If we were to stop here, leave our resources undeveloped, and attempt to pay the debt without increasing our property, three thousand millions would be appalling; but in view of the development of its resources, the development of the great Mississippi valley, the development of the thousands of miles of mineral country we have in the West, the growth of the country is the only thing that is to relieve the people from the burdens of taxation to pay this debt, and I believe that this more than any other enterprise which has been before Congress at this session will tend to enhance values and lighten the burdens of the people.

My own opinion is, however, that the work should be constructed by the Government itself. A gentleman who has figured upon the cost of construction in the State of New York, by the State and by private corporations, has given me some figures which I have no doubt are entirely reliable. The State has realized in actual labor ninety-five per cent. of the money expended in building her system of canals, having lost only five per cent. in carrying on the work. On the other hand the railroad companies, on account of their want of credit, on account of the discounts which they were compelled to suffer, and on account of mismanagement, in one way or another, have only realized upon the whole amount of the cost of their works, in actual work upon the railroads, fifty-seven per cent. So the State government of New York has succeeded better than private corporations by the difference between ninety-five and fifty-seven per cent. I believe it will be better for the country that this should be a national work. When it shall have been completed its effects will be more munificent; it will then be simply kept in repair for the use of the nation. I think its construction will enhance the value of the property of the country, and will be the very best investment this country can make for the payment of the national debt.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, up to the present time we seem unanimously agreed that this canal about the falls of Niagara ought to be built. So far as the debate has proceeded, there is no opposition to that. The Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kentucky think it ought to be done at another time; the Senator from Iowa thinks it ought to be done in another way. I have only to say that if the canal is to be built at all, it must be built at some time and in some way; and the time can be nowhere so well fixed as in the Congress of the United States; and there is no better opportunity to fix both the time and the way than the present, now that we have the subject before us.

Mr. President, if it is not expedient, if it is not wise for the nation to help build a canal around these falls, there never was a time when it was proper for the nation to do it. If it will not make the nation richer instead of poorer, the nation has no business to do it in aid of commerce. In aid of the defenses of the country, it might be proper to do it; but as a commercial measure, if it will not make the nation stronger instead of weaker, it is not proper for the nation to undertake it. If it will make the nation stronger instead of weaker, there never was a time more proper to do it than this, because there never was a time that the nation needed it so much.

Now, as to the manner of doing this thing; if it is to be done at all, it must be done by the nation directly out of its own Treasury, for its own use, and by the employment of its own agents, or it must be done by some private parties authorized by the nation to do it. The Senator from Iowa thinks it had better be done by the nation directly. Upon that question it would be very proper to take the sense of the Senate; and if he had moved to commit this bill to the Committee on Commerce or any other committee with instructions to report such a bill, we could have the sense of the Senate upon it. That proposition, I believe, was submitted to the House of Representatives, and the House of Representatives declined to entertain it, but thought it better to employ to some extent private enterprise, and for the nation to act in aid of private enterprise in the execution of this work. In that opinion of the House of Representatives I entirely concur. Thereby you secure these two advantages: first, it is my deliberate opinion that a private corporation will do the work more economically than the Government can or ever did do a work of the kind in the world; and second, you have the opinion of private capitalists who are more jealous and more watchful and more particular as to what enterprises they put their money into than Congress is as to what enterprises it puts the Treasury of the nation into. You have their judgment upon the feasibility of this enterprise. And although you pass this bill to-morrow, no dollar of money will ever go out of your Treasury unless individuals shall first be found with sufficient confidence in this enterprise to put actually and truly two millions of their money into it, two millions which they have paid in for stock, not which they have borrowed; two millions for which they have taken the stock of the company, and nothing else. Until such a company as that shall be found, you will never pay a dollar; and when that is done, you will only advance $200,000 as often as the company advance $300,000. You advance two thirds of what shall thereafter be put into the enterprise up to $6,000,000.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to say to the Senator that I shall not oppose the bill on the ground that the canal is to be built by a company. I think the work is so important that if a majority of its friends conclude that it ought to be built by a company, I shall vote for the bill in that shape.

Mr. HOWE. But, Mr. President, this is not a grant to the company: this is a loan. In other words, under this bill you put six millions of your notes or your obligations into this enterprise, and you take back six millions of the obligations of the company. True, there is nothing to back these obligations except this money which they have put in previous to your loaning a dollar to them. That does not seem to me like a very rash enterprise.

The Senator from Iowa is afraid that they will lay enormous tolls on the commerce of his State, on the products that go from the Northwest to the East and the commodities that come back again. Possibly they may. He says he is not willing that the products of his State shall be subjected to any such tolls as this company may levy. Who has the control of the tolls levied upon the products of the State of Iowa to-day? This is an additional facility that you are to afford. You do not close up any of the present avenues. You will have all the outlets you now have and this in addition.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. We have various outlets now to the East, and we have been looking with longing eyes to a piece of unoccupied ground where we have been in the hope that there would be a national work that would not be within the control of a private corporation. The Committee on Commerce propose now to let a private corporation come in and take possession of that very ground, the only unoccupied ground, and put it in the control of another corporation. This is putting it beyond our power to have any free communication between the Atlantic and the lakes.

Mr. HOWE. Not at all. It is conceded that the commerce of Iowa will not be in any worse condition when this canal is built than it is now; but, argues the Senator, a location, a site, for an improvement will be occupied by a private company, which he seems to have been looking to as a proper site for the Government itself to improve for the benefit of the whole country. It is still open to the Government to do so.

Mr. CLARK. Why is it not better for the Government, as a great national work, to undertake it and have it as its own?

Mr. HOWE. I have assigned one reason; that is, that a private company will do it more economically than the Government will do it, in my judgment. I am only giving my own ideas now and not the ideas of the committee, because the committee have not considered this question; were not instructed to consider it. The House of Representatives refused to consider it. The committee could have considered it if you had instructed them to consider it. This is my own reason. Another reason is this: it is yet an open question whether it is advisable, whether it is wise and expedient, for the Government to put its money into this work. If the measure is not a wise and judicious one, and you put the $12,000,000 which it is estimated it will cost, into it, if it does not pay the money is gone and you have no resource. If you put $6,000,000 into it and a private company puts in the balance it is all pledged to pay back your $6,000,000. The interest is to be paid annually, and ten per cent. of the gross earnings of the canal are set aside to pay back your principal. You have that security for getting it back. In the worst point of view you get the improvement for $6,000,000, whereas, if the Government undertook it directly, you would not get it under twelve or thirteen million dollars.

Mr. CLARK. Is that anything more than making a private company surety for the Government? This is such a national work that I would have Congress consider whether it would do it, and whether it was advisable to be done by the nation, and let the nation do it and own it and control it, as a monument of the nation's power, as a monument of the nation's beneficence and foresight. It seems to me very much better that it should be so. I should myself very much prefer that the Government should do it, and that it should be the Government's work. I will not interrupt the Senator now, but I was going to state another reason why I should prefer it.

Mr. HOWE. That is nothing more than getting a private company to be surety for the capital that the Government puts into the work. If it is reprehensible to take such security, then we ought not to do it; but I did not think it was a very unwise thing for the Congress of the United States to look for some security of this kind if we could have it. If my friend from New Hampshire has that pride in this enterprise, will insist upon stamping upon it a national character, I do not much disapprove of that policy. I think a good deal of that myself; but I want to remind him that the nation has slept over the falls of Niagara a great many years, ever since it was born, in fact, without lifting a finger to do this work; and now it seemed to me becoming in a prudent legislator rather to offer to assist private enterprise in doing this work than to drive away private enterprise and insist upon monopolizing the work. But if it proves a successful thing; if it proves to be a wise investment of money, two things will happen: first, that it will yield great revenues, and you will get back the money you have advanced; and second, that if you are dissatisfied with the rate of tolls, the thing being made a success, you have only to step forward and pay the company their disbursements—disbursements made under your own supervision, for you appoint a part of the directors to superintend the expenditure of every dollar of this expenditure—you have only to step forward and pay those disbursements and take the work into your own hands.

Mr. President, I concur with those who have preceded me in saying that if this bill is to be recommitted at all, this is not the time to do it, for it is impossible for the committee to understand that the recommitment is to be because the Senate prefers to have the work done by the nation directly rather than by the nation acting in aid of a corporation from anything that has been said in the course of the debate. We cannot draw any such deduction from this debate. I believe only one or two gentlemen have intimated that; and how many who vote to recommit would vote for it for that purpose, or because they want to delay or to defeat the enterprise itself, it is impossible for the committee to know. But when the Senate has gone through with this bill and considered its present features, then if it is thought fit to submit such a proposition, accompanied by instructions as to what the Senate wish to have done, I shall be ready to vote for or against a motion to recommit at that time. A recommitment now would be useless to the Senate because it would be without any information to the committee.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, it was long ago that the art was learned of betraying by a kiss. Senators say they are in favor of this proposition; some, however, want to recommit, and some want to postpone. These are simply artful ways to destroy the proposition which has been carefully matured in committee and produced I think in its best form. I have felt a great interest in this measure, not looking to my own country, for the Pacific coast has nothing to do with it, and can have no local concern in it, but from the fact that I once inhabited on the northern lakes and I had occasion to examine the question, and long since felt it of great public importance, and have always been its advocate whenever I have had any opportunities for advocacy.

We are getting late in the session. This measure has been discussed, and generally discussed. Who is uninformed, who is unprepared to act either pro or con unless he has paid no attention to one of the most important questions of legitimate legislation that ever came before Congress? Some say this must be made a national measure. Is the nation to engage in a system of public works and have a Bureau of Canals and Railroads, with officers and employes throughout the United States? Is such a system to be inaugurated? Not, I think, in the judgment of any person who carefully considers the importance of relieving Government from such relations. That we have the power to vest this right in individuals is not denied. All experience has taught that private enterprise is more prudent and produces better results than when Government, either Federal or State, engages in public works. This has been learned by the experience of this whole country. It will be a monument of public enterprise if we can secure the accomplishment of this work; and if we trust it, not to committees of Congress, but trust it to men who embark their own capital and give their own guarantees, we have an assurance of prompt completion and prudent management, and we have assurances that we shall not be disturbed by questions arising out of the business of a canal around the falls, that we shall not be disturbed by questions of the same kind that will be sprung all over the country if such a policy as some contend for is inaugurated. That it is a national work, and that for national purposes we may embark in it, is unquestionable; but to manage it as a work on the part of the Government, would be, I think, a piece of the greatest folly in which we could engage. Congress cannot manage a canal or a railroad, nor have we any department of the Government to do it and do it well. It is the business of individuals who embark capital and have their private interests concerned in it. Now, all this matter is of course well understood, and it is not valuable to indulge in remark. What I desire to say is simply that these motions for recommitment without any given purpose of recommitment, and for postponement, are blows aimed at the entire measure which has been urged before in Congress, has been urged before the people, and has been the desire of the great body of the people in the Northwest.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I infer that the motion now made to recommit this bill does not proceed from any motive friendly to the final passage of the bill in whatever form it may assume. I would not be uncharitable, however, and I trust that those Senators who seem to entertain a hostility to the project itself will endeavor to review their opinions and to look at this subject in the aspect which really and truly belongs to it. This bill has been carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce of this body, and they have given it all the attention that it seemed to deserve. They have suggested a great number of amendments upon which we shall be called on to act sooner or later. I hope the bill will not be recommitted. It is of importance to the whole country that the question of the ultimate construction of a ship-canal around Niagara falls should be settled permanently in order that the public mind may be at rest upon the subject.

I am, for one, entirely content to leave the matter in the hands of a corporation subject to the legislation of Congress as to the regulation of tolls and any other matters of detail which we may see fit to reserve to the legislation of Congress. I have no fears of a corporation as connected with such a work. Only a few years since Congress made a very magnificent donation of lands to the State of Michigan to construct a similar canal around the falls of the Sault Ste. Marie, within the limits of my State—a work which many people at that time thought entirely impracticable and idle, but one which has since shown that it is not only practicable but has been very productive indeed, and has had the effect to open up the Lake Superior country and to bring to light resources which up to that time were almost entirely concealed from the world. That work was constructed by a corporation created by the Legislature of New York, and the whole business has been carried on through that corporation, by the consent of Michigan, to be sure, to whom the grant of land out of the proceeds of which it was constructed was originally made. It is even now a profitable work, a money-making operation to the stockholders; and I have no doubt at all that the ship-canal around the falls of Niagara will turn out in the end to be equally profitable, not only to the public but to those who may see fit to embark their private capital in it.

I do not concur at all with those Senators who insist that this shall be a national work. If the work is to be carried on economically, vigorously, and efficiently, it must be intrusted to the vigilance of private enterprise and private capital. The United States, as a Government, is in no condition to supervise and carry on a work of this description. All that it can do, and what I think it ought to do, is to aid the company in some safe manner in the construction of the work. The interests of the commerce of the whole country, of the West as well as of the East, require the construction of this work, and I know of no better mode of perfecting it and giving to it that efficiency and importance which it deserves than by creating a corporation for that purpose.

As to the power of Congress to create a corporation for such a purpose I have no sort of doubt, and I shall, therefore, at the proper time, vote to strike out the last amendment suggested by the committee, which requires the consent of the State of New York to the operation of the bill. I have not the slightest doubt that, under the Constitution of the United States, Congress have full power, whenever they shall see fit, to take the property of private persons for just such a purpose as this, by making due compensation for it. It is one of the powers that belong to us under the Constitution as a Government, to be used for the public good, under such restrictions, of course, as safety and the public interest may require. I hope, sir, the bill will not be recommitted, but that we shall proceed to act upon it and to pass it.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania will give way I desire to move an executive session. ["Oh, no."] I have on two days in succession moved executive sessions, and when the time has arisen to take a vote, the question in executive session has failed for the want of a quorum. The Indian appropriation bill is to come right upon us, and it is necessary to act on certain matters in executive session before that is disposed of. I therefore, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me, move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COWAN. I give way.

Mr. HOWE. I wish my colleague would let us get through with this.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Let it go over until tomorrow as the unfinished business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 28, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CONTESTED ELECTION—BOYD VERSUS KELSO.

Mr. UPSON called up and the House proceeded to consider the report of the Committee of Elections in the case of Boyd vs. Kelso, the pending question being upon the following resolution reported by the committee:

Resolved, That John R. Kelso is entitled to retain his seat in this House as a Representative in the Thirty-Ninth Congress from the fourth congressional district of Missouri.

Mr. UPSON. I am informed that neither of the parties desire to discuss this report, and unless some other gentleman desires to debate it, I shall content myself with calling the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. UPSON. I am instructed to report from the Committee of Elections the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of this House to S. H. Boyd the sum of $2,500 in full for the time spent and the expenses incurred by him in contesting the right of John R. Kelso to his seat in this House as a Representative in the Thirty-Ninth Congress from the fourth congressional district of Missouri.

The committee, on examining the case, agreed that it came within the rule adopted by the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND TITLES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BIDWELL. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which bill of the Senate No. 343, to quiet land titles in California was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I have no remarks to make on this question. I will only say that this is a very important bill, and one in which we who live on the Pacific coast feel a deep interest. I call the previous question on it.

Mr. JULIAN. I wish merely to state to the House that this bill has been considered by the Committee on Public Lands, and that it will be reported under our regular call.

Mr. BIDWELL. If there is any objection, I am willing to postpone the consideration of the bill until the morning hour, but I desire to bring it before the House, and I hope there will be no objection to my motion. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put, and there were—ayes 32, noes 52; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. JULIAN and BIDWELL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 37; no quorum voting.

Mr. ELIOT demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 54, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Beaman, Benjamin, Boutwell, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culion, Deming, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Farquhar, Finck, Grider, Hale, Hart, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Julian, Kasson, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Miller, Moorhead, Moulton, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Seefeld, Spaulding, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—50.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Buckland, Coffroth, Davis, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Donnas Hubbard, James B. Hubbard, Humphrey, Kerr, Kuykendall, Laffin, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Morris, Newell, Niblack, Orth, Price, Stigsdave, Stilwell, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, and Woodbridge—54.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Dawson, Deftrees, Delano, Dixon, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hill, Hooper, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Le Blond, Loan, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, Morrill, Myers, Nicholson, Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, Winfield, and Wright—78.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

The question recurred upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BIDWELL. I call the previous question on that motion.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. JULIAN. I wish to make a single remark upon this question. The Committee on Public Lands have decided to report in favor of this bill, and the committee will probably be called to-day. Now, I ask that this House will not permit the discourtesy toward a standing committee of this House of reconsidering the reference of this bill without any shadow of reason or excuse therefor; and I ask the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BIDWELL. A single word. There is a reason for this reconsideration. This is a California bill, and I am informed that a very wrong and odious amendment, in our opinion, is attempted to be attached to the bill. As it is a California measure we think that a member from California should have the control of the bill while on its passage through this House. We demand nothing but what is right, but we are determined to stand firmly, at the same time courteously and respectfully, by our rights.

Mr. JULIAN. The amendment which the Committee on Public Lands have agreed to report to this bill is one which they have deemed proper. All that we ask, without having any feeling in the matter, is that this House shall vote upon the propriety or impropriety of that amendment. If the amendment is voted down, the bill will still be before the House for action. We only ask that the Committee on Public Lands shall be treated with a decent courtesy, such as is accorded to every other standing committee of this House.

Mr. HIGBY. I did not consult with my colleague [Mr. BIDWELL] nor he with me in this matter. But I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. JULIAN] that the bill now in question will be reported by that committee to-day, or so soon as that committee shall be called.

Mr. JULIAN. We will be called to-day or to-morrow, and we have decided to report that bill with an amendment.

Mr. HIGBY. The amendment to which the gentleman refers is one which my colleague [Mr. BIDWELL] says is odious to him. It is odious to the whole California delegation. And all I ask, as a Representative from California, is, that whenever the bill is reported to the House it shall be open for examination and discussion. And if there should be any attempt on the part of the Committee on Public Lands to call the previous question and thus cut off debate, I shall ask the House to vote down the previous question, so that the bill may be open to investigation. With that understanding, I have no objection to the position taken by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. JULIAN] that the bill be left to the committee, and that it shall be reported with the understanding that it shall be open for investigation. That is all I want.

Mr. BIDWELL. I wish to say to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. JULIAN] that if he will agree that my colleague, [Mr. McRuer], who is also a member of that committee, shall report the bill, and that he or I shall have the control of it, I will not press my motion to reconsider.

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of that committee and its organ, and in concurrence with its wishes, I claim the right to report the bill. I say, however, to my friend from California that I propose no snap judgment; I do not propose to cut off a fair hearing by calling the previous question. A full and candid discussion of the measure is the very thing that I want and all that I ask. If the House should disagree to the amendment recommended by the committee the House will be responsible, not myself or the committee. We seek no improper advantage. Certainly I am not making an extraordinary claim when I insist on my right to report a bill agreed upon by the committee of which I am chairman. It is an extraordinary movement to attempt to contravene that right by the motion which has been made.

Mr. McRuer. If the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands will report this bill to-day, and will not, as he has indicated, withhold it until all other bills are reported, so that thus the bill may die, I have no objection to its being reported by the chairman. But, sir, I fear that the bill in his hands will never be reported.

Mr. JULIAN. I have said to the House that I will report the bill, and I have nothing more to add.

Mr. McRuer. I am not willing that we shall lose our position on the floor to-day unless the gentleman will agree to report the bill to-day. If he will not do that, I must insist upon our maintaining the position we now have.

Mr. JULIAN. If the question is presented here of the right of a local interest in California to dictate to this House, and to dragoon it into compliance with its own peculiar wishes and purposes, I hope the House will so understand the question, and with that understanding will vote upon the motion which has been made.

Mr. HIGBY. In answer to the remark which the gentleman has just made, I will say that if this House should undertake to dictate to a united delegation upon a local question, it will do more than I anticipate, and more than this House has done before.

Mr. JULIAN. We simply propose to submit an amendment prepared by the committee. We only ask a vote upon that amendment. Let me add that the amendment involves principles which affect the whole country, and not merely the State of California.

Mr. HIGBY. I am willing to take the word of the gentleman. If he says that he will report the bill, I have no doubt that he will do so.

Mr. JULIAN. Of course I will.

The SPEAKER. This debate is not in order, though it has been tolerated in the hope that some arrangement would be agreed upon between the delegation interested and the committee. The previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BEAMAN. I object to further debate.

Mr. BIDWELL. I trust that the gentleman will allow me to say three words.

Mr. BEAMAN. Very well.

Mr. PIKE. I object to further debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent; and objection is made. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, on which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] has demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The call of the roll was commenced, when

Mr. HIGBY said: I hope that in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee, my colleague will withdraw the motion to reconsider. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BIDWELL. I am willing to withdraw the motion with the understanding expressed by the gentleman from Indiana that he will report—

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object to debate. If the gentleman is willing to withdraw the motion, let him withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order without unanimous consent.

Mr. BIDWELL. I withdraw my motion, relying upon the justice of the House that it will not adopt a proposition against the wish of the delegation immediately interested.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to dispensing with the further call of the roll and allowing the gentleman from California to withdraw his motion to reconsider?

There was no objection, and the motion to reconsider was withdrawn.

The next business in order was the call of the Committee on Public Lands for reports.

INDIANA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. JULIAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted an adverse report upon the petition of the trustees of the Indiana Agricultural College, asking a modification of the act of Congress donating lands for such colleges; which was laid on the table.

HUMBOLDT CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. JULIAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back House bill No. 690, to explain and limit an act to grant the right of way to the Humboldt Canal Company through the public lands of the United States, with the recommendation that it do pass. It is in explanation of an act passed at this session.

The bill was read. It provides that the act approved June 12, 1866, and entitled "An act to grant the right of way to the Humboldt Canal Company through the public lands of the United States," shall never be held or construed to authorize the grantee therein to divert the water of said river from its natural channel to such an extent as to deprive the occupants of farming and agricultural lands along said river of the free and adequate use of the water of the same necessary for the ordinary use of said lands by settlers thereon; nor to permit said company to appropriate land in the bona fide occupation of settlers on the public lands without making compensation for the land to be taken.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISCONTINUANCE OF LAND OFFICES.

Mr. JULIAN, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the discontinuance of land offices and authorizing modifications in the limit of said districts; which was read a first and second time. It proposes that whenever the public land in a State shall have been so nearly sold out as to render unnecessary the continuance of the district office of the register and receiver it shall and may be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to order the transfer to the General Land Office of the land archives belonging to such districts, and in regard to the disposal of any residue of public lands in such district, the Commissioner shall possess all powers previously possessed by the register and receiver; and that whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior it shall be advantageous to the public interests to modify the limits of a land district, either by enlarging or diminishing the same, he shall be, and is hereby, authorized to cause such modification to be made, giving timely public notice thereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OREGON LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. JULIAN, from the same committee, also reported back Senate bill No. 80, to create an additional land district in the State of Oregon, with the recommendation that it do pass. It proposes to authorize the President of the United States to establish an additional land district in the State of Oregon and to fix its boundaries, which district shall be named after the place at which the office shall first be established; and the President is from time to time, as circumstances may require, to adjust the boundaries of the various land districts in that State, and to change the location of the land office. A register and receiver are provided for, to reside at the site of the office, to receive the same fees and perform like services as other land officers in that State.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEVADA LAND GRANT.

Mr. JULIAN, from the same committee, also reported back Senate bill No. 215, concerning certain lands granted to the State of Nevada, with amendments.

The bill approves the appropriation by the constitution of the State of Nevada to educational purposes of the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to that State by the law of September 4, 1841, for purposes of internal improvement; land equal in amount to seventy-two entire sections for the establishment and maintenance of a university in that State is granted to the State of Nevada. The grant made by law of the 2d of July, 1862, to each State, of land equal to thirty thousand acres for each of its Senators and Representatives in Congress, is extended to the State of Nevada; and the diversion of the proceeds of these lands in Nevada from the teaching of agriculture and mechanic arts to that of the theory and practice of mining is allowed and authorized without causing a forfeiture of said grant. The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint a surveyor general for Nevada, who shall locate his office at such place as the Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time direct, whose compensation shall be $3,000 per annum, and whose duties, powers, obligations, responsibilities, and allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and incidental expenses shall be the same as those of the surveyor general of Oregon, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and such instructions as he may from time to time deem it advisable to give him. In extending the surveys of the public lands in the State of Nevada the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, vary the lines of the subdivisions from a rectangular form, to suit the circumstances of the country; but in all cases lands valuable for mines of gold, silver, quicksilver, or copper shall be reserved from sale. Until the State of Nevada shall have received her full quota of lands named in the first, second, and third sections of this act, the public lands in that State shall not be subject to entry, sale, or location under any law of the United States, or any scrip or warrants issued in pursuance of any such law, except the homestead act of May 20, 1862, and acts amendatory thereto, and under the acts granting and regulating preemptions, but shall be reserved exclusively for entry and sale by the State for the period of two years after such survey shall have been made; provided, the State shall select such lands in her own name and right, and dispose of them only to actual settlers and bona fide occupants.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

Page 3, line eight, strike out the word "under."
Page 3, line ten, strike out the words "and sale."
Page 3, line twelve, after the word "right," insert "in tracts of not less than forty acres."
Page 3, line thirteen, after the word "same," insert "in tracts not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres each."
Page 3, line fourteen, after the word "occupants," insert "and further provided, that city and town property shall not be subject to selection under this act."

The amendments were severally agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IRON MOUNTAIN RAILROAD.

Mr. JULIAN, from the same committee, reported back with amendments Senate bill No. 87, making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas.

The amendments reported by the committee were of a verbal character.

The bill was read in full.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to ask a question in reference to the phraseology, "ten sections in width on each side of the road;" whether the fair construction of that language would not give them ten sections on each side of the road.

Mr. JULIAN. If there is anything equivocal in the language I will accept a modification.

Mr. PRICE. I think it is proper that the language should be changed so as to make it definite. It reads, "every alternate section of land designated by odd numbers for ten sections in width on each side of the road." I move to amend it by substituting "five" for "ten;" so that it will read "five sections in width on each side of the road."

Mr. JULIAN. I accept the amendment and call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, I have one other bill which I reserve for the present, and yield to my friend from Michigan.

PORTAGE LAKE SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill No. 193, granting lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, in said State, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the bill reported appropriates two hundred thousand acres of land to aid in the construction of a ship-canal to connect Portage Lake with Lake Superior at the base of Keweenaw Point, in the State of Michigan, and provide a harbor of refuge at that exposed and dangerous point of navigation. The canal is to be one hundred feet wide, thirteen feet deep, and two miles and six hundred feet long, with a capacious harbor at its juncture with Lake Superior. The construction of these works will save nearly three hundred miles of the most dangerous navigation on the western lakes, around Keweenaw Point, to every vessel making the round trip to the copper mines or to other points on the head waters of Lake Superior; a glance at the map will satisfy any person of this fact. It is an improvement, as all must admit, second to no other in importance to the commerce of the northwestern lakes, especially to that of Lake Superior, and demanded by all interested in it, for the greater security of life and property, the increased facility for expedition, and the reduction of cost in transporting the mineral and agricultural products of the vast country upon its borders and beyond which must have an outlet through that greatest of all inland seas to the East and the Atlantic.

The national importance of this improvement—for it is by no means a local or State work in its character or benefits to be derived from it—may be judged from the fact that eight States bordering on the western lakes and other States east of them are largely interested in the extensive commerce of those lakes.

The Legislature of the State of New York has, by joint resolutions, recommended the passage of the measure by Congress, and requested its Senators and Representatives, in the language of these resolutions—

"To further, by their best efforts, and by all judicious means, its adoption, because it will tend greatly to promote the commercial interests of that State."

The Legislature of Wisconsin has pressed this measure upon its Senators and Representatives by concurrent resolutions; and it will be seen from her geographical position that that State is prompted by a deep interest in the work.

The State of Minnesota, by the adoption of joint resolutions by its two last Legislatures, has petitioned Congress for this measure, and urged upon its Senators and Representatives their energetic influence to secure the construction of the proposed canal and harbor by the passage of this bill.

The State of Michigan, within which the proposed improvements are located, and to the authorities of which their construction is necessarily confided, takes an interest in them commensurate with their national importance, although not more directly interested in them than several of her sister States, East or West. The Legislature of that State, at its last session, by joint resolution has urged the adoption of the measure, and "requested its Senators and Representatives to use their best endeavors to secure its passage through this Congress."

The present able Executive of Michigan, H. H. Crapo, under whose special supervision and direction the canal and harbor are to be constructed, after having made personal examination of the location and work to be done, accompanied by a corps of engineers, and had the necessary surveys and estimates made, and decided upon his plan of construction, moved by the importance of the works, not only addressed an appeal to the Senators and Representatives from Michigan in behalf of this measure, but afterward came to Washington and called the Michigan delegation together to press upon them, not only the importance of the works, but the justice of the appropriation asked for by the bill under consideration.

The city of Chicago, deeply interested as that greatest city in the Northwest is in everything affecting the commerce of the lakes and always foremost in active interest to promote it, took early occasion to manifest her lively appreciation of the importance and necessity of the proposed canal and harbor. Petitions signed by all her most prominent and energetic citizens and firms, embracing her principal ship-owners, merchants, and others interested in the commerce of the lakes, have been referred to your committee, asking the passage of this measure. The Board of Trade of that city has also petitioned for it and urged its passage.

What has been said of Chicago is also true of all the other cities on the western lakes. The Boards of Trade and business men and firms of Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Toledo, Green Bay, and Pittsburg have all urged the passage of this measure by Congress.

The petitioners for this measure represent a capital invested and a tonnage of shipping employed in the commerce of Lake Superior and connecting lakes very much larger than any other in the world engaged in inland commerce. And the aid of Congress was never asked to a more meritorious measure, as nothing of the kind was ever more generally or more strongly urged or demanded by the necessities of a very large and rapidly growing commerce.

The bill before the House, after having been unanimously reported to the Senate by the Committee on Commerce, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands in that body, which committee unanimously reported it back to the Senate and recommended its passage, and it was passed by the Senate without opposition.

At the last session of Congress an appropriation of two hundred thousand acres of land was made for this improvement. This was not the amount then asked for it. In the judgment of the Governor of Michigan, then expressed, more than twice that amount would be required. Subsequent investigations prove that the Governor was right. But owing to the press of business on Congress, and the fact that no survey or accurate estimate of the cost of the works had then been made, the member on the committee from that State deemed it prudent to ask only the appropriation then made. From the engineer's report and estimate of the cost of the works, and the letter of Governor Crapo, laid before the Committee on Public Lands, it is ascertained that the canal and harbor will cost more than twice the sum estimated before any actual survey was made. This additional expense, over all former estimates, is owing to the more extensive character of the works than originally contemplated. It is found necessary, from the peculiar character of the soil through which the canal is to be made, and the great strength of the work constituting the harbor on Lake Superior, made necessary by its exposure to the action of the lake, to adopt plans settled upon by the Governor entirely different and far more expensive than originally contemplated. These plans require that both banks of the canal shall be made a continuous dock, by close piling, sheet piling, and counter-piling, or by other sufficient walls, from Lake Superior to Portage Lake, and that the harbor on Lake Superior shall be of a capacity, permanency, and construction to be accessible in any stress of weather to vessels on Lake Superior. The specifications for all this work has been laid before your committee by Governor Crapo.

By an act of the Legislature of Michigan, approved March 18, 1865, entitled "An act to accept a grant of land by Congress to aid in the construction of a ship-canal and harbor at the head of Portage lake to connect with Lake Superior, and to provide for the construction of the same," the State of Michigan "accepted" the grant "with the restrictions and conditions contained in said act of Congress." Section two of said State law confers said grant upon the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-Canal Company, as follows:

"For the purpose of carrying out the object of said congressional act, the lands hereby granted and conferred upon the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-Canal Company, (a company organized under and by virtue of the laws of this State,) subject to all the conditions, restrictions, and obligations therein mentioned: And provided, That none of said lands shall be sold or otherwise disposed of, except for the purpose of hypothecation, until said canal and harbor shall be completed and accepted, as hereinafter specified."

Under this State law, the surveys, estimates, &c., have been made and the plans adopted required by the former act of Congress referred to. The works have been commenced, by the company to whom the State conferred the grant, and several thousand dollars expended thereon. But the plans adopted by the Governor of Michigan exceed so much the previously estimated cost that the company, acting under the advice and recommendation of the State authorities of Michigan, and sustained by many of the petitions heretofore referred to, appeal to Congress for the additional aid provided for by the bill before the House. The Committee on Public Lands, after thoroughly investigating the subject, have unanimously come to the conclusion and direct me to report:

1. That the proposed canal and harbor are of great national importance to our inland commerce, second only in point of necessity, to the Sault Ste. Marie canal. They will give to the Government and country one of the most extensive and secure harbors in the world, entirely land-locked, and capable of holding more than all the vessels on the western lakes. The importance of this will be seen from the fact that, for a distance of some two hundred miles of rock-bound coast, from Bayfield to the extreme end of Keweenaw Point, there is not a harbor for a vessel to take shelter in. The interests of commerce demand this improvement, and if it is not provided for as this bill contemplates, an appropriation of money will soon be demanded to make it, to relieve commerce from the most dangerous navigation on the lakes, around the rocky promontory of Keweenaw Point.

2. Since the opening of the Sault Ste. Marie canal—now about ten years—the navigation interest has grown up on Lake Superior from one steamboat and two little schooners to two hundred sail vessels and twenty-seven steamships. The copper and iron interest, then but little developed, now yields to the national wealth a product of full $10,000,000 annually. To construct the Sault Ste. Marie canal Congress appropriated seven hundred and fifty thousand acres of land. Experience has shown that to have been one of the wisest appropriations Congress ever made. The State engineer, in his report on the proposed Portage Lake canal and harbor—the measure now before the House—uses the following language:

"The St. Mary's Canal Company had seven hundred and fifty thousand acres of land given it for building that canal, many of them as good mineral lands as there are on the whole range. The extent of this work [the Portage Lake canal and harbor] is greater than the St. Mary's canal, and its importance, as one link in the chain of public works for the Northwest must eventually be as great."

It will be remembered that the St. Mary's canal cost $1,150,000.

3. The construction of the proposed canal and harbor will not only give an impetus to the development of the mineral resources of Lake Superior, but the agricultural, commercial, and railroad interests of Minnesota and Wisconsin, centering on Lake Superior, will be greatly promoted. Nor will these States, and others bordering on the great lakes, be the only States benefited by it. New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Connecticut are very largely interested in both the mining and transportation business of that section, the citizens of some of those States owning larger interests in the mines and in the vessels employed in the commerce of the lakes than any State bordering on those lakes, all of which are to be benefited by it.

4. For these reasons, the committee unanimously recommend the passage of the bill before the House.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAC LA BELLE SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 219, granting certain lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a ship-canal to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the lake known as Lac La Belle, in said State, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration appropriates one hundred thousand acres of land to aid in the construction of a harbor and ship-canal from Betegrise to Lac La Belle, which bay and lake are situated near the northern end of Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, in the State of Michigan. The lands are to be selected from alternate odd-numbered sections in the upper peninsula, not mineral, and from the nearest vacant land to the proposed improvement. It will be seen that no lands are to be acquired by the company until the work is entirely completed, and accepted by the Governor of the State, and as the grant only extends for two years, unless completed within that time the lands will revert to the United States.

Lac La Belle is a small inland lake of some two by five miles in extent, with an average depth of twenty-seven feet of water. To afford an entrance from Lake Superior and Betegrise to this lake it is only necessary to widen, deepen, and straighten a natural channel less than a half mile long. When this is done and the proposed pier and breakwater at its entrance are completed, it will afford one of the best and safest harbors on this immense inland sea, and will secure a refuge at a point half way between Bayfield and Sault Ste. Marie, which now afford the only safe harbors, with the exception of Grand Island and Portage Lake, for a distance of four hundred miles, and these two harbors are a long distance out of the usual route taken by vessels in going to and returning from Ontonagon and the head of the lake.

Mr. Speaker, this grant is considered of very great importance to the safety and convenience of commerce, not only by the people of Michigan, but by all the States bordering on the great western lakes. I have before me petitions from nearly all the shipping interests of Oswego, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee, and Chicago, with resolutions recommending this grant from the Boards of Trade of all the important lake cities, with similar expressions from the Chambers of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, the committee have also in their possession a letter from the Governor of Michigan transmitting joint resolutions of the Legislature of that State in favor of the grant; a letter from Colonel W. F. Reynolds, topographical superintendent of the lake surveys, showing the necessity and practicability of the work, an official map accompanying the same; and a petition signed by twenty-five hundred miners, masters of vessels, merchants, and others, of Lake Superior, the lake cities, and by citizens of New York, Boston, Hartford, Philadelphia, and other cities.

In addition to all the foregoing, your committee have had before them numerous other letters and petitions praying for the grant. The bill has passed the Senate and has been unanimously approved by the House Committee on Public Lands. And I have been directed to report the same back with the recommendation that it pass. I therefore call the previous question, and ask that a vote may be now taken.

Mr. PRICE. I only wish to say that it is a most singular thing that such a bill as this should come from a committee that has heretofore insisted so pertinaciously upon having limits to land grants. Here is a bill without any limitation whatever, I believe, unless it be the boundaries of this continent.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether this amendment which I hold in my hand is germane or not. If it is I desire to offer it.

Mr. DRIGGS. I will hear it read before I agree to allow it to be offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW HAVEN, June 27, 1866.

To Hon. H. C. DEMING, 291 E street:

The constitutional amendment finally approved today, 125 to 88. We are firing one hundred guns.

JOSEPH R. HAWLEY.

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is not germane.

Mr. DRIGGS. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] that no lands are to be acquired by this company until they have completed all their work. The time is limited to two years, and the lands are confined to the upper peninsula of the State of Michigan. If that is not so I will have it inserted.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. How much land does it grant?

Mr. DRIGGS. One hundred thousand acres. The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the request of the House for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 513, to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and that it had appointed as managers on the part of the Senate Messrs. FESSENDEN, VAN WINKLE, and GUTHRIE.

LAND GRANT TO MINNESOTA.

Mr. DONNELLY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back bill of the Senate No. 156, making an additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota in alternate sections to aid in the construction of railroads in said State. The Senate amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DONNELLY. I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DONNELLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DONNELLY also, from the same committee, reported back bill of the House No. 382, granting lands to the State of Minnesota for the establishment of an asylum for the relief of disabled soldiers and sailors of that State and of the United States.

Mr. DONNELLY. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DONNELLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DONNELLY, from the same committee, reported back bill of the House No. 191, to amend an act making a grant of lands to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of a railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior, approved May 5, 1864.

Mr. MORRILL. I would like to make an inquiry or two of the gentleman in relation to this matter. I would like to know how many of these bills there are behind. We seem to be passing these measures without any knowledge, so far as I can ascertain, of what they are. We have already passed a bill giving six hundred and forty acres of the most valuable lands in the United States.

Mr. DONNELLY. I would say, in reply to the gentleman's question, that this bill does not make any additional grant of lands. It only changes the boundaries and location of the land grant already made. There has been a grant of land made to Minnesota to build a very important railroad from St. Paul, which is the head of navigation on the Mississippi river, to Lake Superior. The city of St. Paul, anxious to encourage the building of that road, has offered a bonus of $250,000, provided the road should be built on the most direct line practicable. The result is that the company have to carry their road very close to the boundaries of the State of Wisconsin, and as the grant is confined to Minnesota, and the road necessarily in the center of the grant, the value of the land grant is impaired to that extent, unless it is allowed to take the same amount of lands in Minnesota further to the west. That is all that this bill proposes to do.

Mr. MORRILL. I would ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] if there is in this bill the same provisions that there were in the former bill.

Mr. DONNELLY. Precisely.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know that the gentleman has seen a map of the State of Minnesota, such as I saw a day or two since. If I had it there, so as to show the House the lines drawn across it, indicating the grants that have been given to railroads, I think it would rather surprise the House. And it is the same with other western States. These western States are covered all over with railroad grants as with a gridiron; the whole country completely braided. I think that no bill in relation to these railroads ought hereafter to pass without a close inspection by the House.

Mr. DONNELLY. This bill has been thoroughly inspected by the Committee on Public Lands, whose business it is to look into the details of such measures. I am not surprised that gentlemen coming from small and rock-bound States like Vermont can scarcely appreciate the condition of our western States. The State of Minnesota, for instance, is twice the size of the State of New York, and it contains, according to the United States Annual Record for 1864, 90,776,000 acres of public lands. In those great expanses of plain and level country, railroads are as important as population. And we should not be guided by any narrow or illiberal spirit in this species of legislation.

By the homestead law we have already relinquished all intention on the part of the Government to derive revenue from the public lands of the United States. We have offered them to the whole world upon condition of settlement alone. It is then to us simply a question of the administration of this great public donation so set apart for the good of mankind. And I say, speaking here as a western man, and responsible to my constituents for what I say, that railroads are as important to that country as population. I have seen the map to which the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] refers. But he does not understand, as western men do, the character of that map. He must recollect that that map not only represents the actual direct grant to the railroads, which is ordinarily limited within ten miles on each side of the line of the road, but that there is also represented on that map the secondary or contingent grant, extending twenty miles on each side of the road, from which deficiencies are to be made up. As I said here the other day, I do not believe that the State of Minnesota has received for railroad purposes one sixth of the public lands in that State; I doubt if it has received one fourth.

But, sir, this reasoning, while it is proper that it should be presented to the House in answer to the argument of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] does not apply to this particular case, because this bill does not give a single foot of public land in addition to what has been already granted. It is merely a shifting westward of the boundary lines of the grant, a matter of accommodation to the company, which may thus be enabled to construct their important railroad in as direct and short a line as possible without any detriment to their land grant. If there are no other inquiries to be raised, I will call the previous question.

Mr. ROSS. I will say that if we have not given Minnesota more than a fourth of our public lands in that State, it might be as well for the gentleman to introduce a bill to give the State the balance.

Mr. DONNELLY. I have no doubt that when the delegation from Minnesota ask for it Congress will respond liberally, not for our sakes alone, but because we are doing a great and national work there; we are developing great communities there, and thus benefiting the whole country. And when my friend, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL,] shall succeed in getting through his great measures for raising revenue, he will find in the mass of population and settlement spread over the great West the best testimony in favor of the wisdom of that policy which has encouraged the building of railroads by grants of public lands; and the best basis not only for the collection of revenue, but for the prosperity of the whole land. We deserve well of the country. We are laying the foundation for a mighty future and the whole nation is interested in our work. I demand the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays on this bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] whether in this grant the alternate sections are reserved.

Mr. DONNELLY. They are; the grant is precisely the same in its details as all other land grants.

Mr. GRINNELL. I simply wish to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota whether the objection made in regard to giving away these public lands is not one unworthy to be uttered here, when the Government charges just double the usual price for the reserved alternate sections. And I would also suggest that there can be no objection to this bill, because by it no additional land is given.

Mr. DONNELLY. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I have already said that this bill does not give a foot of land in addition to the former grant, but simply changes the western boundary of the grant. I renew the call for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question: does not this bill propose to vary the original grant?

Mr. DONNELLY. It proposes to change the shape of the land grant; that is to say, the effect will be that the road, instead of running through the center of the land granted, will run through the eastern part of the grant.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Then it simply proposes that this company shall have a further choice of the public lands.

Mr. DONNELLY. Yes, sir. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill, Mr. DONNELLY called for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. DAWSON. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be laid on the table, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 45, nays 73, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Benjamin, Bergen, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Cobb, Conkling, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Dixon, Eliot, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Hale, Hulburd, Humphrey, Kerr, Ketchum, George V. Lawrence, Marston, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrill, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Patterson, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Trimble, Upson, Williams, and Winfield—45.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Buckland, Cook, Davis, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farquhar, Ferry, Grider, Grinnell, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Deas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Kuykendall, Lathin, Latham, William Lawrence, Longyear, Marshall, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Price, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Seefeld, Shellabarger, Stilwell, Thayer, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Walker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Blaine, Brandegee, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Cullem, Culver, Darling, DeFeves, Delano, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hart, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Jenekes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Le Blond, Loan, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, Moulton, Newell, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Schenck, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Van Aernam, Bart Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—64.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

The question recurring on the passage of the bill, it was agreed to.

Mr. DONNELLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were delivered to the House by Mr. EDWARD COOPER, his Secretary; who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 249) to establish a land office in the Territory of Idaho;

An act (H. R. No. 342) in amendment of an act to promote the progress of the useful arts and the acts in amendment of and in addition thereto; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of James M. Blake.

FORT HOWARD MILITARY RESERVE.

Mr. DONNELLY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill No. 168, to provide for the disposal of certain lands therein named.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be authorized to cause to be offered at public auction all the unsold lots of that portion of the public domain known as the Fort Howard Military Reserve, which is situated in the county of Brown, and State of Wisconsin, giving not less than two months' notice of the time and place of such sale, by advertising the same in such newspapers and for such period of time as he may deem best. Every such lot shall be sold separately to the highest bidder for cash, and when not paid for within twenty-four hours from the time of purchase, it shall be liable to be resold under the order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, at such reasonable minimum as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and no sale shall be binding until approved by that officer. It also provides that it shall be the duty of the President to cause patents to be issued in due form of law for every such lot, as soon as may be after purchase and payment.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this bill goes over until next Saturday morning.

SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. DAWES moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN KANSAS RAILROAD, ETC.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House the message from the Senate in which it was announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 145) entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph," had asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. POMEROY, BROWN, and RIDDLE.

The conference asked for was agreed to.

WOODWARD AND CHORPENNING.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 123, for the relief of Elizabeth Woodward and George Chorpennning, of Pennsylvania. The resolution provides for the payment of $32,325, in equal moieties, to Elizabeth Woodward, widow of Absalom Woodward, and George Chorpennning, for destruction of property by Indians between Salt Lake and California prior to the 1st of July, 1852; the moiety paid to Elizabeth Woodward to be for the use of herself and her four children. It also provides for the payment of $30,670 to George Chorpennning for property destroyed by Indians between Salt Lake and California prior to the 1st of April, 1856; and the amount thus paid is to be deducted from any annuities now due or that may hereafter become due to the Indians inhabiting that territory.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

The first amendment was in section one, line three, to strike out "$32,325" and to insert "$28,175."

The next amendment was in section two, line two, to strike out "$30,670" and to insert "$26,370."

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, this was unanimously agreed to by the committee here, and reported on favorably in the Senate, but the amendments which have been read were adopted reducing the amount. The parties are compelled to acquiesce from necessity.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the message from the Senate which announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 613) entitled "An act to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes," with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Mr. ELIOT moved that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and that a committee of conference be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

It was so ordered.

GRANTING AMERICAN REGISTERS.

Mr. PIKE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of providing that in all cases that may be reported by them for granting American registers to foreign-built vessels, the owners of vessels shall, before receiving such American registers, pay forty per cent. ad valorem of said vessels into the Treasury of the United States—forty per cent. being the average of duties under the existing tariff.

DITCHING COMPANY.

Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the United States Fencing, Ditching, and Land-Reclaiming Company; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

LAWS OF DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, at the request of Mr. BURLING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for the publication of the laws of Dakota Territory; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Territories.

IRON-CLAD NAVY-YARD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with a report of the board of examiners appointed under joint resolution of June 1, 1866, to examine a site for a fresh-water basin for iron-clad vessels of the United States Navy; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

HONORS TO REBEL DEAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a message from the President in answer to a resolution of the House as to whether any of the civil or military employes of the Government have assisted in the rendition of public honors to the rebel living or dead; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY BILL.

On motion of the SPEAKER, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, detained from the House by illness, and at his own request, was excused from service on the committee of conference on the Army bill, and Mr. THAYER was appointed in his place.

TARIFF.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, at this late period of the session and in this hot weather I know the dispatch of business will be hailed with more good-will than any discussion of great principles of political economy involving protection or free trade, or of the minute details of a tariff bill involving the present condition of trade, and the nice adjustment of duties on imports to our system of internal taxation; and I shall therefore, as a matter of taste, as well as from the impossibility of doing otherwise from sheer exhaustion, trespass upon the patience of the committee no longer than may be necessary to show that some action is imperatively required at our hands, and that the action proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, taking into careful consideration the circumstances of the country, the condition of our national finances, and the currency with which all commercial transactions must be conducted, is reasonable and proper.

The close of the war exhibits a northern loss by death in the service of not less than two hundred and fifty thousand men, and an equal number, it may be computed, have been physically incapacitated for manual labor. So that not less than half a million men, between twenty and thirty years of age—the athletes of the world—have suddenly been withdrawn from the fields, workshops, and mines of the old free States of the Union. This loss represents, in the aggregate, the industrial and vital force of not less than two million five hundred thousand men, women, and children; and the two million old men, women, and children, though survivors and dependents of the five hundred thousand smitten in battle or of those who tasted the bitter cup of rebel prisons or who failed of complete restoration to health and soundness of body, notwithstanding the sweet mercies tendered under our own flag, are the precious legacies of the war, to be provided for, though consumers and no longer producers of wealth, nor perhaps of even the ordinary means of subsistence. The loss of the South, though nominally less, may be practically equal, as their recuperative power appears comparatively inferior and was more crippled by the relentless track of war.

This great subtraction from the industrial forces of the country cannot be at once repaired. Many of those who went forth to the war, though untouched by steel, shot, or shell, have found new fields of enterprise and labor, as yet unremunerative, but promising in the end prosperous homes. A wave of population has gone southward, hardly perceptible now, but which is likely to exhibit itself in the returns of the next census. Some accessions from Europe have come, amounting to two hundred and eighty-seven thousand three hundred and ninety-seven in the year 1865; but the pitiless war conscriptions now going on there and the perpetual allegiance demanded will most likely arrest the tide of emigration which otherwise might justly have been anticipated from that quarter. The deduction to be made from all these considerations is, that our present supply of labor is largely deficient—so largely that we cannot at present compete with the dense and crowded populations of the eastern hemisphere in hardly any branch of human industry; and yet it is more important here than ever that every man should find work. I hope labor in America will forever be far more highly rewarded than elsewhere. It is so now, and that distinction is the glory of our country, of our institutions, and of American policy; but just now labor, like everything else, is artificially dear. High prices must be paid, or our laboring men will be degraded. High prices must be paid, or the capital invested in lands, mines, and manufactures must be wrecked and abandoned.

But for the war and had we remained in our normal condition, unvisited by unusual taxes and the disturbing flood of an exclusively paper currency, our people would have occupied a more impregnable position, as against foreign competition, than they ever occupied in their previous history. Now we are vulnerable to the attacks of anybody from any quarter who has anything to sell. Foreign artificers of brass and iron and even of clay, we cannot resist; they are able to undersell our own people.

Our present amount of circulating currency is vast. Of legal tenders, so called, we have $401,252,468; of national bank notes, $280,301,900; of outstanding notes of the old State banks, (not including those having less than five per cent. of their capital,) $48,479,782; of fractional currency, $27,053,709 04; and of compound-interest notes, $154,926,910, amounting in all to $917,014,769 04. I do not cite these figures as a reproach to anybody, but as a fact, and a monstrous fact, attended by evils increasing day by day; and the longer contraction, the true remedy, is withheld, the more difficult will be found its application. At the time of the surrender of Lee and Johnston any terms of settlement might easily have been obtained from southern rebels with ample guarantees for the future, as they panted for nothing so much as deliverance from the pains and penalties of treason, and anything short of expatriation would have been promptly accepted. That opportune moment passed away never to return. So the transition from paper to specie at that time might perhaps have been made with less strain upon the country, with less inconvenience to individuals, than it can now or ever again be brought about. The people were prepared for it. The goal in point of fact was almost reached. Nobody was in debt and nobody was distressed. The nominal reduction of inventories would have left all with relatively equal purchasable values.

But unfortunately this policy did not prevail, and now trade stands in serried ranks against any reduction of values, and Congress itself grudgingly authorizes the retiring of only about four millions per month of our huge volume of currency, the presence of which stimulates sales and strangles production. Our country, from one of the cheapest places to live in, is becoming one of the dearest. The wages paid for labor are not too much, considering what those wages will pay for in bread and meat, in rent and clothes. No manufactures can be made, while this state of things lasts, to be sent abroad. And, unless war, pestilence, or famine occurs among foreign nations, they will want none of our corn or wheat, beef or pork, at anything like what it costs to produce it. Our gold, it is true, they eagerly despoil us of, and why not? It is said to be "demonetized," and at any rate as money it is getting to be obsolete. Gold coin is itself depreciated in our markets, because it is useless save as so much convenient and portable merchandise. If used for the payment of an existing contract it is worth no more than an equal amount of United States legal-tender notes. Our whole monetary system is bloated by more than a fourfold addition to the currency in circulation. This is unnatural and daily begets diseases of a new type, formidable because unknown, as well as those with which we are already familiar and know to be dangerous. Having to deal with such facts, and it being impossible to remove this incubus upon the labor of the country at once, our legislation must recognize the situation, and trim our sails for such breezes as may blow. Our imports of foreign goods this year are nearly double what they were last year, and we pay for them by sending abroad gold and silver, and United States bonds at a little more than half their face value.

Another reason, and one of the most cogent, for a revision of the tariff at this time, is the insufficient rates now levied on foreign wools. This is a question which has vexed Congress for forty years. The evils endured by wool-growers somehow never disappear, let the laws take what shape they may. The flocks of sheep in South America, in Australia, at the Cape, and elsewhere, have become so large, so much improved by mixed breeds, that they threaten to force the American wool-grower to abandon a chosen and most attractive pursuit. Formerly the wool obtained from Buenos Ayres was coarse and full of burs, but by crossing with the merino breeds it has become entirely changed in character, and now wool equal in grade to the average American growth can be bought in South America for fifteen cents per pound. It is not washed, and burs still accompany it, but no American husbandman, not even those who are located in proximity to unfenced prairies where the summer feed can be appropriated without let or hindrance, can compete with such prices. They must, unless at once taken care of, succumb. For the past four years, notwithstanding the nominally high prices for wool, the amount received when reduced to a gold standard shows that the business of wool-growing has not been remunerative; not affording one half the profits of any other kind of farming, and many owners of sheep have been preparing to quit the business for something more hopeful. Unless Congress shall do something to revive the courage of these men the stock of sheep that will be offered for slaughter the coming fall will exceed anything the country has heretofore witnessed. The complaint is loud, universal, and real, not simulated. Never since I have had the honor to be a member of this House have so large a number of petitions been received, or with so many respectable and genuine signatures, upon any subject. The Committee of Ways and Means have been flooded with these documents from the East to the farthest West.

The tariff of 1857, against which I voted, allowed wool under eighteen cents to come in free and reduced the ad valorem tariff on wools costing more than that. The tariff of 1861 placed a small ad valorem duty on wool under eighteen cents and a specific duty on all wool above that rate, besides providing many provisions against fraud. This was considerably improved by the tariff of 1864, but the value of wool abroad being less than represented or believed to be, importers still got competing wools through the custom-house at rates never above six cents per pound and sometimes at even less. Last fall and winter the wool-growers, through their various agricultural societies and other State and national organizations, got together for the first time and discussed the subject of wool-growing in its relation to rival foreign interests. The wool manufacturers also met with them in joint convention. After months of patient toil and critical examination they presented to us in April last the fruits of their joint labor so far as it relates to the duties upon wool. The proposition as it relates to woollens came along considerably later. A mutual agreement was arrived at and upon a basis fair and equitable of parties that never agreed before. I think their work does honor to those who conceived and who have so far successfully matured these several propositions. These propose much higher rates upon wool because of the perfection of the classification, which is so framed as to catch all wools that can by any possibility compete with American wool. There is no loop-hole through which any wool can escape the duty intended to be placed upon it. It is fixed and certain. The custom-house officer, though a fool, cannot err therein. "I know the wool-growers will be satisfied with their own proposition, as they should be, for it amounts to more on mestiza wool than would a duty of seventy-five per cent. ad valorem, and I hope we shall not attempt to offer anything less or in other shape, for whatever is not in the form of a specific duty would be as in most other cases valueless. The greatest protection the American wool-grower could have would be the disclosure of the fact, at every sale of woollen cloths, whether the same were made of American wool or not, as cloths made of sound American wool are really worth, for actual service, for hard wear and tear, far more than those made of the tender and brittle foreign wools.

The duties upon woollens, it will be seen, are very carefully adjusted so as to cover the duties which the manufacturers pay first on wool and dye-stuffs, the internal taxes on their sales, and in addition twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. The compound duties in the bill, though following the principle first adopted in the tariff of 1861, may not be understood at a glance, but when carefully studied they will be found to have the extent I have indicated and no more. If this bill becomes a law, as I trust it will, the woolen manufacturer will not find his condition any better than now—not a whit. Foreign goods, I fear, will crowd our marts in nearly the same imposing procession that they have done heretofore, or at the rate of over a million dollars for every day in the year.

Last year (1865) our imports amounted to $234,756,447, but this year they will reach not less than $409,411,513. This is a drain that we are in no condition to bear. Every spare dollar in the country is needed to fund our rapidly maturing national obligations.

For the past year we have received from California but a little over $29,000,000, and yet our exports of gold and silver at New York alone, from May 12 to June 16, amounted to $36,515,402.

When can we resume specie payments if this stream of merchandise inward and flow of gold outward is allowed to continue? Clearly it is the duty of the Government to moderate if it cannot control this reckless course of trade before bankruptcy ensues and the business of the country receives a check from which it may take years to recover.

I do not think it necessary to go into the details of many branches of business. There is not a member of the House who does not know and feel that there is urgent need of legislation upon the tariff. To adjourn without such legislation would be a calamity and a blunder. Take the iron trade. It is true they made money during the war, but they are not doing it now. They are paying laborers for making a ton of iron nearly as much as a ton would cost abroad.

There are some little items in the tariff bill, which hardly arrest the eye, which give employment to thousands and therefore require considerate treatment at our hands. Among these permit me to cite one or two examples. Eyelets, made of brass and then tinned, have but recently been introduced as an article of commerce so far as to attract attention. They will be noticed in shoes and boots, and though invisible in other articles for ladies' wear, they are still there. I find that of these small and very cheap articles, costing no more than seventeen to eighteen cents per thousand, the amount we consume rises to the respectable sum, annually, of $4,000,000. Hoop-skirts is another article of extensive use for which we are supposed to be indebted to the genius of Eugenie, who, failing to rule the Emperor of the French, has great audacity in French fashions. In New York city alone twenty-five thousand persons find employment in all the branches of the hoop-skirt manufacture. It would be possible to mention many other articles, apparently "trifles light as air," which furnish the means of support to a large number of industrious and thrifty families.

The articles added to the free list in the bill are few in number and of inconsiderable importance. Such articles as form the base or raw material of other manufactures, and of which there is no domestic supply, scientific theorists, as well as practical legislators, agree should be charged with little or no duty. When any country has superior natural advantages for the production of a specific article it may be useless and a waste of capital for others to attempt rivalry in the same direction. We have nothing that will compete with the white cliff stone of England for chalk and whiting, and as it enters into other manufactures to a considerable extent, and gives business to our homeward bound vessels, it deserves to be free. We produce rock oil or petroleum, and while it bubbles up and spontaneously runs away from its fountains, to be had only for the catching, it will be difficult to find any article in other markets to supplant "the poor man's light," as my friend the Chairman [Mr. SCOFIELD] aptly calls it, and so long as we have a surplus to spare it will find purchasers.

Salt, when it is made from springs, depends mainly for its cheapness upon the amount of saline matter contained in the water. The relative value of salt springs in Virginia, Michigan, New York, and Ohio differs widely. In some of these States the business may continue, but without a higher duty most of them will wind up. If in any of these States mines could be found where salt could be taken out in pure crystals the saline springs would have to be abandoned. As it is we cannot afford to be dependent upon other nations for so indispensable an article in peace and war as salt, even if it can be obtained elsewhere nominally at a less price. Our own establishments must be preserved, encouraged to the full amount of their capacity, and even then one half of all we consume will be brought from abroad. We cannot afford to make it free, nor yet can we afford to tax it so heavily as to make it a luxury or anything but what it is—an article for human nature's daily use.

The discovery of an enormous deposit of chloride of potassium in a bed of rock-salt in Germany may prove to be the chief source from which commerce will draw its future supplies. Manifestly the maker of ordinary potash salts, who cuts down timber and burns it to ashes for this sole purpose, cannot compete with an article already made and which only needs to be taken from the mine and purified. This is an advantage of which Germany cannot be deprived. The Indian who stole his brooms already made could always undersell the Indian who only stole his timber. England, with untold wealth in minerals, coal, clay, and cheap salt, eclipses in many productions all the nations of the earth. Soda-ash is one of these productions entering greatly into other manufactures of various descriptions. The cost of soap, glass, and of many textile fabrics depends much upon the price of soda-ash. At Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, they have salt and cheap coal, and have from time to time striven to establish the manufacture of soda-ash, but thus far without marked success, and if the manufacture cannot succeed at this point it will hardly do better elsewhere. Under these circumstances, but for the glimmering hope that the manufacture of an article of such extensive use may yet be established, it might have been well to place it upon the free list. We have left it where it is, to pay a duty of a half cent per pound.

The supply of ivory cannot be increased, and is supposed to be annually diminishing. It takes twenty thousand elephants, it is said, to furnish the annual supply of a single manufacturing town (Sheffield) in England. Our wants are large and increasing. It is proposed, therefore, to remove the small duty now imposed upon this useful as well as beautiful article; and as the gigantic gano from which ivory is obtained is hunted by persons without regard to race or color I presume no one will object.

One of the main reasons for a new tariff bill now is that the termination of the reciprocity treaty leaves the duties upon agricultural productions, and upon lumber, fish, and coal at such rates as were imposed at times when it made no difference what those rates were, as all such articles came in from the Provinces practically free, and of course our tariff laws in this respect now call for revision. The wisdom of terminating the treaty alluded to is already apparent. There are none of its provisions that we cannot surrender without a pang. Some of the pretentious claims concerning the fisheries, as, for instance, the right of excluding our fishermen from the shore within three miles, and from bays, drawing the line from headland to headland, might be annoying; but even if admitted on our part, as they are not likely to be by any modern Secretary of State, such claims, were they to be strictly enforced, would be of little damage to us and of no profit whatever to the Provinces. There is no more reason for exempting grain, flour, cattle, horses, wool, and butter and cheese imported from British Provinces, from revenue duties, than there would be in the case of the importation of similar articles from Great Britain. In peace, the mother country and her colonies are all our friends; in war, they are not less our enemies.

It is due, however, to the present British minister, Sir Frederick Bruce, to say that he has manifested a high-toned spirit of fairness touching any remaining questions as to the fisheries, and that he seeks their solution without making such exactions as would be likely to produce national conflicts. Through the courtesy of the Secretary of State, I have learned that the British minister has information that the Canadas, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia will issue licenses to fishermen other than British subjects, upon the payment of fifty cents per ton on the tonnage of vessels engaged therein, and that a license will secure the right to fish within three miles of the shore, and also to land for the purpose of curing fish and obtaining supplies. More than this, a license from one Province is to confer the right to fish in all the Provinces which unite in the system of giving licenses. Without this Zollverein principle, Americans would find the license of no value, and would not avail themselves of it. In the end all the Provinces may unite in such legislation, or if they do not the confederated Provinces—and that scheme appears likely to be speedily adopted, more speedily, perhaps, in consequence of the recent Celtic eruption—will undoubtedly adopt the principle.

Mr. Chairman, I will now send to the Clerk's desk, to be read for the information of the committee, a letter from the Secretary of State upon this question, and also one from the British minister, Sir Frederick Bruce.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, June 23, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose for the information of the committee over which you preside a copy of a note of the 24th instant, addressed to me by Hon. Sir Frederick W. A. Bruce, the British minister, relative to the course determined upon by the governments of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Canada in regard to licenses to fishermen of the United States.

By a note of the 31st of May last, Sir Frederick Bruce informed me that P. Forbin, Esq., the magistrate commanding the Government vessel La Canadienne, employed in protecting the fisheries of Canada, had been authorized to issue fishery licenses on the payment of the sum of fifty cents per ton of measurement of the vessels proposed to be used in fishing; that these licenses would remain in force during this season, and would confer upon the holders of them, as far as the Canadian fisheries are concerned, all the rights enjoyed by the fishermen of the United States under the reciprocity treaty.

An official notification embodying this information was made public upon its receipt, and the same course will now be pursued in regard to that contained in the inclosed.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON, June 24, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to state that I am informed by his Excellency the Governor General of Canada, that the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have agreed that the possession of a license issued by Canada to fish shall entitle the holder, during the season of 1866, to fish in the waters of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia as well as in those of Canada; the holder of a license from the government of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, if any such shall be issued, being entitled to fish also in the Canadian waters. I shall feel much obliged if you will communicate this information to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient, humble servant,
FREDERICK W. A. BRUCE.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, it may be proper for me to add that I have just received a note from Sir F. Bruce saying that another of the Provinces has enacted laws in relation to licenses similar to that of Canada, &c. It is also due to myself to say that in a conversation with the British minister I informed him that I thought our fishermen would be reluctant to take out licenses for the right to fish in British waters, but that they probably would be willing to pay a license for going on shore to cure fish.

The greater cost of fitting out our vessels and the taxation to which they are subjected, enables provincial fishermen, who have no long voyages to make to reach the most desirable fishing-grounds, to bring fish to our markets at cheaper rates than our own people. In addition to this, our fishermen will now, when they enjoy the privileges of the shore fisheries—only needed for catching mackerel late in the season—have to pay a license of from fifty to one hundred dollars for each vessel, according to its size. Under these circumstances justice requires the imposition of reasonable duties upon foreign-caught fish. As we are now, however, met in a generous spirit, I hope Congress will suitably respond and place only moderate duties, sufficient to cover the items already indicated, upon mackerel and cod-fish. Mackerel may, perhaps, need to be placed even lower than it will be found in the bill. In the cod-fisheries it is no longer necessary to go within three miles of the shore, and such duties can be placed on the product as may seem judicious; but it being an article of food consumed largely by those who can ill afford butchers' meat at twenty-five to thirty cents per pound, a moderate duty appears appropriate.

Our trade with the maritime Provinces is one more deserving our fostering care than that of the other Provinces. The people are very friendly and they have articles such as we require in large quantities, such as coal and plaster, for which they take of us flour and other articles in nearly equal quantities. It is a reciprocal trade that is profitable to all parties, and ought to find some favor in our legislation. And here let me remark that for eleven years we have drawn moderate supplies of bituminous coal from Nova Scotia. Enterprising Americans have embarked their capital there and opened mines to supply the wants of the gas companies in a few northern cities on the bleak, ice-bound Atlantic coast. Some of our mills and little iron founderies have been started with the expectation of a continued supply of coal of this character from this quarter. Even if this is granted the coal so used will cost the consumers ten or twelve dollars per ton, while that used by our brethren in Pennsylvania and Maryland, for identically the same purposes, will only cost three or four dollars. Most of the pig iron used in Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, comes from Pennsylvania. Is it now to be insisted upon that no coal shall be used in those regions but that which is dragged over a thousand miles of railroad? Is this necessary to the prosperity of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad—a road that as I have heard is earning fatter dividends than almost any in the land?

I have no feeling on this question, and I am not aware that my constituents have any interest in it, but to use the words which my excellent friend from Chicago emphasizes with so much unction, I desire to see "fair play."

The Committee of Ways and Means have shaped the bill so that all cannel coal, bearing the highest price of any, and all other bituminous coal imported from any place thirty degrees east of Washington, and all anthracite, if there be any that can be imported, shall pay $1 50 per ton, and only propose that the common bituminous coal, such as we have had free for eleven years from Pictou, shall pay fifty cents. Mr. Chairman, we leave it to the good sense of this committee to say whether this is not eminently just and fair. Even the gentleman from the Pittsburg district concedes that is right and proper, and where he leads, on these subjects, I feel sure no Pennsylvanian need fear to follow.

The present bill is not likely to suit everybody, and I regard it only as a temporary measure fit to be introduced because of the imperious necessities of our present condition. Many will think it inadequate to the exigencies of the country and that much more ought to have been conceded to our imperiled industries. The statements made by the gentlemen of the revenue commission, who have long studied the subject, as well as by those whose special interests are touched, in almost every instance, would have justified the Committee of Ways and Means in proposing higher rates than will be found in the bill. But the committee have scrutinized every case, and consented to no higher rates, with only here and there a possible exception, than will, as they are forced to believe, place the American laborer, producer, or manufacturer upon a level of fair competition with foreign capital and foreign labor. During the prevalence of war prices and the excelsior premium of 280 upon gold, while we were accustomed to contemplate money in fabulous sums, something of extravagance prevailed everywhere, but now upon the return of peace we ought to begin to practice the stern duties of economy, be content with moderate gains, and make some approach to our former rule of estimates, when an advance of even five per cent. in the scale of duties was weighed with as much scrupulousness as gold dust in the balance. But unless we are willing to court the usual sequence of war we must now adopt measures that will shield our people from general financial ruin. We are at the mercy of those who have had no unusual war taxes, no bounties to pay to brave volunteers, and we must have a little breathing time, time to recuperate, or we may yet sink under the load, although triumphant at all points in the great struggle of Freedom against Slavery.

Our great revenue from internal taxes is wholly dependent upon the fact whether we can keep our own fields, factories, and workshops fully manned and the men constantly employed. The tax they pay is a percentage on the inflated current value in our markets, and five per cent. here is nearly equal to ten per cent. on any foreign invoice, especially as we know that many invoices, by the adroitness of trade, are largely undervalued. Our taxes which are not direct, also, imperceptibly, press hardly upon all who are engaged in any kind of business. Raw materials are largely increased in cost, stamp taxes insidiously entrap every business transaction, so that after we have levied extraordinary duties we shall find that importations will by no means cease. Although our present tariff, in ordinary times, would be likely to be denounced as prohibitive, yet we find it practically productive beyond all precedent, yielding for the year ending June 30, 1866, nearly one hundred millions more in solid gold than was ever before realized, or about one hundred and seventy million dollars. While the present bill is indispensable to preserve the aggregate of our internal revenue, it will not be likely to diminish, even if it does not increase, the revenue from imports. It will keep our people at work.

I am in favor of taking proper care of American industry as against foreign competition, now and at all times, whether it be that engaged in the production of flour or wool, brogans or ships, or whether it be the tiny artificial flower that embellishes the lady's bonnet or the ponderous engine that moves the floating palace, in spite of wind or weather, from ocean to ocean. Let the time be far distant when an American citizen will be forced to work for the wages of those whose toil furnishes no home-steads, no school-houses, and finally not even tomb-stones for the graves of themselves or their children. But rather than jeopardize a sound public policy, rather than excite the odium which extravagance is always likely to excite, I should counsel temporary inconvenience and the lowest rate of duties under which it is possible for our various branches of manufactures, not to prosper, but to live, hoping that a better time is coming, when labor will be more abundant, taxation less onerous, and when our paper money shall be good for its entire face value. God speed the day!

Mr. Chairman, I will not at this time consume further time of the House, but will, when in the progress of the bill, have something more to say in relation to its details.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not avail myself of the floor at this time for—

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this: if it is the wish of the committee, I would like to move at once that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating all general debate; but if it is the desire on the part of gentlemen to continue the discussion through the day, I have no objection to debate for to-day.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope, after the speech just made by the gentleman from Vermont, we shall be allowed some latitude of discussion. I look upon this bill as a free-trade bill from beginning to end. It is anything but protective. For instance, I see a single item in this bill, not in the former act, relating to what is called scrap iron, which means any kind of iron. The duty on scrap iron is one half that on pig iron, and yet it is worth four times as much as pig iron. This is a tariff particularly fitted for the eastern market.

I shall not say anything about the question of coal until I find whether my colleague has really indorsed the bill or not. If he had not been on the committee I should say it was a most extraordinary imposition upon the protective tariff of the country. But I did not rise to speak on the subject, but simply to ask that we may be allowed a little discussion.

Mr. MOORHEAD. As my name has been introduced by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, very unexpectedly to me, with regard to the tariff on coal, and as I have now been referred to by my colleague, [Mr. STEVENS,] I deem it proper that I should say a few words on this subject. I can only say that while I believe the chairman of the committee quoted me correctly when he referred to the gentleman from the Pittsburg district as conceding this, yet he might have said a great deal more. He might have said that I contended for the full rate of $1 25 per ton on all bituminous coal, and that the rate proposed in this bill is a compromise. I am very free to say, since the chairman of the committee has placed me in that position, that I did concede that point, and that I made use of this argument, which I am willing my constituents and those of every other Representative on this floor should see, hear, and know as coming from me, namely, that it was unnatural that we should prevent the New England manufacturers from using and procuring coal from their own mines in the Provinces, and force them to get it from the Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia coal districts, a distance of a thousand miles or more of railroad transportation. I said that in the committee, and I say it now to the House.

I do not know but there is a constitutional difficulty here, and that under subsisting treaties with Great Britain we ought not make a distinction in this regard as against one of her colonies. But I am not a constitutional lawyer, and I leave that question to be settled by them. But I saw a great difficulty in discriminating, in saying that articles coming from one country should pay a higher rate of duty than the same articles coming from another. The chairman of the committee will bear me witness that I was unwilling at any time or under any circumstances to agree that bituminous coal should be taxed less than $1 25 per ton, which is the present rate. I wanted it increased to two dollars, or at least to a dollar and a half. I did concede, however, that if a discrimination could be made in favor of the coal brought from mines in the colonies owned by our citizens and used by them here, as against the coal of Liverpool or Newcastle, it ought to be done. In asking for a discrimination I stand here as I have always stood, as the advocate of a high tariff. I have sometimes been censured for agreeing to call it a protective tariff. I am in favor of a protective tariff. What is my object in asking for a protective tariff? It is to protect the manufacturers of this country and the labor of this country against the manufacturers and labor of the Old World, where labor costs less than one half what it does here.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOORHEAD. I must decline to yield the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. I believe I hold the floor, and I yielded it temporarily to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] in front of the Chair is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I did not know that that was my position. I had no idea that I was occupying the time of my colleague.

Mr. KELLEY. I thank my colleague for his courtesy. I thought he had brought his explanation to a good point where I might resume the floor, and I would as lief make my own speech as have the gentleman make it.

Mr. MOORHEAD. My colleague knows that I am not much in the habit of speaking, and I do not like interruptions. I thought he wished to draw me from the line of my remarks.

Mr. KELLEY. I will promise not to interrupt the gentleman when he gets the floor, but I must interrupt him now as the floor is mine. Unless it be the understanding that the interruptions shall not come out of my time, I must decline to yield further.

Mr. BEAMAN. I object to further interruption.

Mr. KELLEY. If the objection be withdrawn and the House agree that it shall not come out of my time, I will gladly yield to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is entitled to the floor, and he will proceed.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not avail myself of the privilege of the floor for the purpose of replying to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, nor of assailing the bill he has submitted. I agree, I think, with every principle enunciated by him. I find in this bill much to approve and admire. Pressed as the committee has been by the preparation of the tax bill and its grave general duties, and limited as the time has been which it has had to consider this complex subject, I wonder that it has presented a bill so general in its scope and just in its provisions. There are, however, a few things in it which I feel called upon to bring to the attention of the House. While I find much to appreciate in the bill I find also inevitable evidences of haste and want of due consideration, and I avail myself of this early opportunity to point them out, in the belief that the committee will correct them of its own motion. The chairman of the committee alluded to Pennsylvania when explaining the action of the committee on the question of coal, and I therefore beg the attention of the House first to that subject, and will be gratified if I can have the ear of the chairman of the committee for a moment or two.

One of the palpable evidences of haste and want of consideration that appear in the bill is that it proposes a protection of $1 50 per ton on anthracite coal. Now, I do not want the Legislature of this country to proclaim not only to the savans of the world, but to people of but partial information, that we do not know that we have in this country all the anthracite coal in the world. I do not want it to go to the world that we are giving legislative protection to anthracite coal when scientific men and half-informed men the world over know that outside of four hundred and seventy square miles of our territory within the limits of Pennsylvania no anthracite coal has ever been found. Now, if there is no anthracite coal in the world but our own, why do the Committee of Ways and Means propose to protect it by a duty of $1 50 per ton? It is clearly an oversight which the committee will correct. It is intimated by my friend on my right that there is anthracite coal in Wales. I say no; there is what is called Welsh anthracite coal. It contains too much hydrogen or volatile matter for anthracite. Nor is it purely bituminous. It is a bastard coal, and while it makes all the dust of anthracite, it produces all the smoke of bituminous. It is, therefore, incapable of use for any of the purposes to which pure anthracite coal only can be applied.

I think it desirable that the word anthracite so inconsiderately inserted should be stricken out of the bill. The anthracite, which needs no protection, and which, were it constitutional, would bear an export duty, is the coal interest of Pennsylvania. It prefers no claim to protection, and I speak not for it but for those who are voiceless in this House, the deluded and poverty-stricken people of the insurrectionary districts which it should be known is the preëminent bituminous coal district of our country. Maryland has her own eloquent champions here. Kentucky is not without potent voices; Missouri also has her champions in her able and faithful Representatives; and Tennessee, although her Representatives are not permitted to participate in our debates, has them upon the floor, mingling freely with members and able to tell them of the rich treasures of bituminous coal in her hills, and how their products are excluded from their legitimate market on the Gulf coast by the British coal and that of the Provinces carried thither as ballast without charge of freight in vessels arriving for cargoes of cotton. My own State having no special interest in this question, I argue it on behalf of the people of the wide and rich bituminous fields of the South, and especially of those of Virginia and North Carolina. But, Mr. Chairman, let me remark that it is not a question of the cost of coal to the manufacturers of New England. It does not touch the cost of their coal, as I will demonstrate.

Under the reciprocity treaty the coal of Nova Scotia came into our ports duty free. Since the abrogation of that treaty $1 25 of duty has been collected upon every ton of coal that has arrived from Sydney or Pictou. Where did that duty fall? At the door of the New England manufacturer, or at the entrance of the foreign mine? It did not fall at the door of the factory; nothing is more certain than that. No New England manufacturer has paid more for his coal since that duty of $1 25 was put on than he paid before. The owners of Nova Scotia coal mines have paid into our Treasury the tens of thousands of dollars we have collected as duties. I challenge any New England man to refute that assertion. Coal paying a duty of $1 25 a ton is delivered in Portland, in Boston, in Providence, and in New York at precisely the price at which it was delivered when it came in duty free. We have, I repeat, made the owners of coal mines in the British Provinces pay into the Treasury of the United States $1 25 for every ton of their coal that we have consumed.

Now, sir, let me tell you how it happens that our amiable and loving neighbors could add $1 25 to the cost of their coal per ton, and still sell it at the same price as before. Sir, these American gentlemen, who the chairman of the committee tells us went to Nova Scotia and invested their capital in coal mines, did not go there blindfolded; and they will not be ruined if their dividends be reduced fifty per cent. by the competition of Virginia and North Carolina coal in the markets of New England. Let us consider that question calmly. What have their dividends been? Never below fifty per cent. per annum, and they have not unfrequently risen to one hundred and seventy-five per cent. per annum. Their profits have long since reimbursed their original outlay; and all they had to do when the falsely called reciprocity treaty was abrogated was to conclude to put up with from forty to one hundred and sixty per cent. per annum and pay the duty on the coal delivered in the United States.

Sir, it is my wish to stimulate and promote the manufacturing power of our country. I wish our country to achieve commercial independence, and to accomplish this we must give New England cheap coal. To do this we must establish rivals to the provincial coal-fields. We will cheapen New England's supply of coal by dealing fairly and honestly by the unrepresented people of the South, and by stimulating the development of the rich fields on the Dan, the Haw, and the Deep rivers, North Carolina, and the James river, Virginia. My colleague from the Pittsburg district [Mr. MOORHEAD] said it would be a hardship on New England manufacturers to make them go a thousand miles to his district for their coal. Sir, accepting a point midway of the coast of New England as the point of departure, they need not to obtain better American coal add a mile to the distance their coal is carried. It can be taken by water transportation from Richmond by a route as short as it is taken from Nova Scotia to the ports of Connecticut and Massachusetts.

The suggestion is fallacious; and unless gentlemen want to legislate against Virginia and North Carolina and in favor of Nova Scotia, they will strike from this bill that extraordinary clause which assumes an imaginary line in the middle of the ocean, the thirty-second meridian east; and provides, not like all previous American legislation, that goods coming from the greater distance, say east of the Cape of Good Hope, shall pay but half the duties imposed on goods coming from nearer ports, but in violation of all precedent, and of all principle, provides that the coal which crosses the ocean shall pay $1 50 per ton, while that which comes from just beyond our borders, and within that imaginary line, and upon which the cost of transportation is little more than nominal, shall come in at one third of that duty, or fifty cents per ton.

The question before us is not between the Government and manufacturer, but between the interest of a few American gentlemen who went out of this country and invested their funds in an enemy's territory, and these war-trampled States whose people we are, while unrepentant of a great public crime, justly holding in political subjection, but whose material interests we ought to foster and promote with more than a guardian's, with a brother's or a father's care. The true interest of the New England manufacturer will be found in promoting competition between those patriotic Americans who during the war avoided our increasing taxes, and whose foreign investments were earning average dividends of about one hundred per cent., and the present or future owners of the rich tide-water coal-fields of Virginia and North Carolina. Between these parties lies the whole question, and experience will prove that I am the friend and not the foe of the New England manufacturer.

Having said this much on the coal question, I invite gentlemen to examine the provisions under consideration, which they will find at the close of the fifth section, on page 25 of the bill; and I beg leave to say to the members of the committee that in attempting to protect an investment of American capital in a foreign country they have fallen into error, and that if I wanted to perpetrate a satire upon gentlemen who have labored with such industry, fidelity, and general good judgment, I would conceal the fact that misled them and say they proposed to protect anthracite coal, and that they drew an imaginary line in the middle of the ocean and proposed that coals coming from within that line should pay but fifty cents per ton, and coals coming from beyond that line and beyond the ocean should pay three times fifty cents per ton.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KELLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he does not know that for a half a century such lines have been drawn by American Congresses; if there have not been differential rates of duties upon goods imported from the one side or the other of the Cape of Good Hope?

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman has not done me the honor to listen to my remarks, for I have alluded to that fact. But, sir, I repeat that all the precedents established by Congress are that the lighter duties should be imposed upon goods coming from the more distant points; and that this bill is in direct conflict with those precedents, inasmuch as it proposes to increase the duties in proportion to the greater distance the goods have to be transported. The greater the expense of carrying the commodity to our country, the heavier are to be the rates of duty according to this bill, and in this respect, I assert, and the gentleman will not gainsay the fact, the bill is in conflict with all our past regulations on the subject.

Now, sir, I desire most briefly and cursorily to call the attention of gentlemen to what may become a grave national question in connection with this subject. We must strengthen the patriotism by fostering under patriotic auspices the material interests of Virginia, if we do not want the possibility of a war with France to be thrust upon our attention in the consideration of many questions which should be purely domestic. In this aspect of the case, the question is not merely local. When the rebellion was precipitated by the firing upon Sumter, the rebels of Virginia were inviting Louis Napoleon to direct interference in behalf of the contemplated confederacy. In March, 1861, the Legislature of that State granted to Messrs. Bellot des Minieres, Brothers & Co., of France, nominally in their own right, but really as unrecognized agents of the Emperor, authority to extend the Kanawha canal from the James river, through vast and inexhaustible beds of iron and cannel and bituminous coal, to the Ohio. And the present unconstitutional and rebel Legislature of Virginia are endeavoring to revive and execute that contract.

Mr. PIKE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the loyal people of West Virginia have not tried to do the same thing.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know but they may have been hoodwinked into it, and may be trying to do it. But if it be so I desire to defeat their purpose by inducing New England energy and enterprise and capital to engage in the coal trade and iron and steel manufacturing of Virginia, so that Louis Napoleon shall not have southern rebels to conspire with against our peace or prosperity, but northern patriots to resist and balk his machinations. Sir, the Mexican invasion was incited by no claim or interest of grandeur comparable to this. It had for its pretext an indebtedness of but $750,000 of real indebtedness. Yes, a just claim for less than one million dollars engendered the Mexican invasion; and if we permit the minions of Louis Napoleon to gain control of a line of canal running through the coal and iron regions which extend from the James river to the Ohio, our legislation with regard to many important internal interests will be governed by extraneous influences, as it was for ten years by the influence of the infamous reciprocity treaty which was forced upon us by the men who are engineering this foreign and dangerous project.

Sir, I will not nor did I propose to examine the details of the bill. I have responded on behalf of my State, which was alluded to as claiming advantage in this connection. She does not expect to supply the New England manufacturers with bituminous coal, but her people believe that they better promote the interests of our whole country by promoting those of Virginia and North Carolina than they would by legislating so as to advance those of a few American patriots who have invested their capital in Nova Scotia or any other foreign country. The coal from the mountains of Maryland and Pennsylvania will be excluded from the coast towns of New England by that of the tide-water mines of Virginia and North Carolina, and the people of those States will, in exchange, buy the products of New England. Much as I am tempted I will not detain the House by reading from the admirable book of Mr. Samuel Harries Daddow on Coal, Iron, and Oil, a description of the coals of Virginia and North Carolina. I will, however, say that in gas-producing qualities and in cleanness they exceed the best that are produced by our British American provincial countrymen who are begging us to violate all law and all reason to protect their special investment; and I will ask the Clerk to read a short paragraph from an admirable article in to-day's Chronicle.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Virginia and North Carolina have each more mountains or mineral territory and less agricultural lands than Pennsylvania, yet how reverse all the circumstances of their developments.

"The Richmond or tide-water coal-field in Virginia contains one hundred and eighty square miles of coal territory. The coal has been used for nearly one hundred years as a mineral fuel for smiths' uses, the casting of cannon, producing steam, and as gas coal. It is equal to the coals of the British Provinces for every purpose, is equally available to the New England manufacturers, and is not further from them, taking a general center, than the coals of Pictou or Sydney. It is, like the coal of Nova Scotia, near tide-water, and can be conveyed from the mines to the manufacturers at Boston with the same distance by water as the coals of the British Provinces. Yet this most available deposit of coal is only partially developed.

"The people of Virginia are blinded by a willful, ruinous infatuation, which stupidly rejects all that is promising and productive for all that is blighting and impoverishing. Congress also helps to make their case more desperate by granting to foreigners greater favors than to our own citizens; while taxing the coal produced from our own mines directly and indirectly over fifty cents per ton, the rival coals of Nova Scotia come to our markets duty free.

"At one time Richmond enjoyed an export trade in coal, but since the reciprocity treaty it has vanished. Enterprise and capital have gone from Philadelphia, New York, and Boston to develop Acadian coal-fields, while it is denied to Virginia—first, because Congress legislates against her and in favor of a foreign rival; and second, because her people are poor, impractical, and soured by poverty and distress."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to argue the question of labor—

Mr. MARSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he knows and will disclose the name of the writer of the article, a part of which has just been read.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know who is the writer of that admirable article, and cannot therefore disclose his name. But I read it with great pleasure; and could, if time permitted, more than confirm its statements from the recently published work of Mr. Daddow, giving descriptions of every mine in those States, and which I commend to gentlemen who wish to understand this subject.

Now, sir, I was going to demonstrate to the House that this is not a question of capital, but is a question of labor. This is the point upon which my colleague [Mr. MOORHEAD] was about entering when I resumed the floor, and as he will discuss it more ably than I could, I will heap coals of fire upon his head by saying I will be interrupted and give him the remaining portion of my time.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I did not know my colleague would conclude to let me in. I would rather he had preferred to let me conclude my remarks when I was upon the floor. He is accustomed to speak here, while I am not; but I do not know the House would not as lief hear me as him, [laughter,] for though I do not speak as eloquently, still he speaks till the House gets tired of him. If he will tell me where I left off I will go on and finish my remarks.

Mr. KELLEY. I have come to the point of demonstrating that this is a question of the laborer and not of the capitalist, which is the point on which you were engaging when I resumed the floor.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I did not know that my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] had yielded the floor to me. I would greatly have preferred to conclude my remarks when up before; but I thank him for his courtesy now. And as the House is entertained so often and so profitably by the silvery tones of his mellifluous voice, I presume it will be quite as willing to hear me for a few moments, who so seldom even attempt to engage its attention.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to adopt the remarks of anybody, as I am able to make my own arguments. I believe I was stating, at the time I was notified by the gentleman I was occupying the floor during his hour, which I did not know until he informed me of the fact—I believe I was stating my reasons why there should be a discrimination or difference between the duty under this tariff upon Pictou coal and British coal which comes across the ocean.

I wish to make that a little more clear and explicit if I can have the opportunity to do so. It is very well known by this House—I know it is by my constituents; I do not require any indorsement at home of the fact—this House and the country, sir, know I am and have been a tariff man, a protective tariff man. It is as well known to members as to my constituents that I am in favor of protecting American manufactures against the cheap labor of foreign countries.

I wish now to say that this coal which comes from Pictou and the mines of Nova Scotia is used for manufacturing purposes, and the manufacturers who use it compete with what is flippantly called the pauper labor of the "old country." I think the argument is clear that if we put a high duty upon the raw material used by these manufacturers we disable them to that extent from competing with this low-priced foreign labor. The principle I have advocated all my life, and which I have endeavored to carry into practice, has been to sustain the manufacturers of this country against those of all other countries; and when I find that this raw material is used by American manufacturers who come into competition with the manufacturers of foreign countries, by helping the former I only act upon the principle which has always controlled me in reference to the tariff.

Pictou coal for the last eleven years, as the chairman has stated and as the House well knows, has come in free under the reciprocity treaty. By the bill now before the House we propose a tax upon Pictou coal of fifty cents per ton, and to that extent we protect the coal producers of Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia without oppressing the particular manufacturing interest under consideration. My object, so far as I have aided in framing this bill, has been to protect American labor and American interests against the labor, interests, and competition of all other nations. That is what I ask and all I ask.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, West Virginia having been referred to in connection with this coal question, I desire to say a word or two. The concurrent legislation of Virginia and West Virginia was not had with reference to the sale of the James River and Kanawha canal to the French firm named; that was wholly a Virginia scheme, but to the completion of the Covington and Ohio railroad, negotiations for which have been opened with a company of New York capitalists, and I trust they may soon be consummated, so that both States may have the advantage of this line of improvement, thus opening up a market for the coal and iron and other minerals which both States possess in great abundance. But West Virginia has a more direct interest in this question. She has vast fields of the best quality of bituminous coal, accessible by a railroad already completed and fully prepared to transport it in any quantity. This coal must find a market on the sea-board, where it comes in competition with the coal from the British Provinces, the coal which this bill proposes to admit at a duty of fifty cents per ton. Now, we do not desire to prohibit Pictou coal from being admitted into the New England States, but we do desire that it shall be made to pay its proportionate share of revenue into the Treasury of the United States.

It has been shown by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that this coal has not increased in price any since the termination of the reciprocity treaty, though it was then admitted duty free, and now pays a duty of $1 25 per ton; showing clearly that this duty is paid by the producer and not by the consumer, and that this article will bear the present rate of duty, $1 25, without increasing the price to the consumer.

How was it during the war? At the beginning of the war this coal was sold in Boston at from five to six dollars per ton; before its close the price went up to sixteen and seventeen dollars per ton. Why was this? Simply because our men were withdrawn from industrial pursuits to defend the flag of our country; the price of labor was more than doubled; our railroads and transportation service were overburdened with conveyance of military stores and troops, and the cost of producing and transporting coal was greatly increased. The price went up in the New England market just in proportion as the difficulties increased in the way of home production and home competition, showing plainly that it is the competition of our own mines, from Maryland and Pennsylvania and West Virginia, that keeps down the price of coal in New England, and not the fact that Canada coal is admitted at a low duty or free of duty.

Therefore it is a plain proposition that this reduced rate of duty will inure wholly to the benefit of a people who have no interest in common with us; or to that portion of our people who have investments in the coal mines of Canada; and that coal from Canada can well afford to pay $1 25 or $1 50 a ton without increasing the price, for the duty will be paid by the producer and not by the consumer. Therefore I trust when the proper time comes this section will be stricken out and the duty remain as at present—$1 25 per ton. It will not increase the price the New England people will have to pay. They will be able to maintain their manufactories as before, for we can furnish them with better coal, and at a lower price than they are now paying.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating general debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOTFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of bill of the House No. 178, general debate be terminated thereon in ten minutes.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Does the chairman of the committee intend to cut off legitimate debate on the propositions to amend this bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I have something to say.

Mr. MORRILL. I will modify my motion if the gentleman desires to occupy any time now.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I prefer to make my remarks upon some proposition to amend. There is a single feature in this bill that I desire to be heard upon when we reach that point. It is the one to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred.

Mr. MORRILL. Of course, when general debate is closed, the debate on amendments will be limited to five minutes, but so far as I am concerned I will use my efforts to allow the gentleman a reasonable time if he will state how long he wishes to speak.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I do not want to speak more than twenty or thirty minutes.

Mr. MORRILL. Would it not suit the gentleman as well to occupy that time now?

Mr. F. THOMAS. No, sir; there are some facts in my possession that I wish to present.

Mr. MORRILL. I presume the House will indulge the gentleman. I insist on my motion. The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOTFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the articles mentioned and embraced in this section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all unmanufactured wool, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, imported from foreign countries, the duties hereinafter provided. All wools, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, as aforesaid, shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into three classes, to wit:

CLASS 1.

Clothing wools: that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote: Down clothing wools; and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Capo of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes two (2) and three (3.)

CLASS 2.

Combing wools: that is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used; and also all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals.

CLASS 3.

Carpet wools and other similar wools, such as Don-skoj, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and including all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere.

For the purpose of carrying into effect the classification herein provided, a sufficient number of distinctive samples of the various kinds of wool or hair embraced in each of the three classes above named, selected and prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and duly verified by him, (the standard samples being retained in the Treasury Department,) shall be deposited in the custom-houses and elsewhere, as he may direct, which samples shall be used by the proper officers of the customs to determine the classes above specified, to which all imported wools belong. And upon wools of the first class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be thirty-two cents or less per pound, the duty shall be ten cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem; upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed thirty-two cents per pound, the duty shall be twelve cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem. Upon wools of the second class, and upon all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be thirty-two cents or less per pound, the duty shall be ten cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem; upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed thirty-two cents per pound, the duty shall be twelve cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem. Upon wools of the third class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be twelve cents or less per pound, the duty shall be three cents per pound; upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed twelve cents per pound, the duty shall be six cents per pound: Provided, That any wool of the sheep, or hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, which shall be imported in any other than the ordinary condition as now and heretofore practiced, or which shall be changed in its character or condition, for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, shall be subject to pay twice the amount of duty to which it would otherwise be subjected, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That when wool of different qualities is imported in the same bale, bag, or package, it shall be appraised by the appraiser, to determine the rate of duty to which it shall be subjected, at the average aggregate value of the contents of the bale, bag, or package; and when bales of different qualities are embraced in the same invoice at the same price, whereby the average price shall be reduced more than ten per cent. below the value of the bale of the best quality, the value of the whole shall be appraised according to the value of the bale of the best quality; and no bale, bag, or package shall be liable to a less rate of duty in consequence of being invoiced with wool of lower value: And provided further, That the duty upon wool of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed, and that the duty upon wool of all classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the amount of the duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed. On sheep-skins and Angora goat-skins, raw or unmanufactured, imported with the wool on, washed or unwashed, the duty shall be thirty per cent. ad valorem; and on woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, waste, and flecks, the duty shall be twelve cents per pound.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to amend the section by striking out in line one hundred the word "twelve" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "twenty-five," so that it will read as follows:

On sheep-skins and Angora goat-skins, raw or unmanufactured, imported with the wool on, washed or unwashed, the duty shall be thirty per cent. ad valorem; and on woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, waste, and flecks, the duty shall be twenty-five cents per pound.

Mr. Chairman, I am not acquainted with any clothes-wearers, or wool-growers, or with any other class of men, who are in favor of permitting the importation of this shoddy into this country. We all know that it has been associated with fraudulent contracts. It has been palmed off upon our citizens who use cheap clothing; and every one knows that it has no real value. It is wanting in the wearing properties of wool. I think it is just to all parties, to the manufacturers, to the cloth-wearers, and to the wool-growers, to discourage the importation of this article.

Mr. KELLEY. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman is not familiar with the process of blanket making. He cannot be familiar with the process of making fine cloths such as those which gentlemen wear in their dress coats, and ladies in their habits. He cannot be familiar with the constituents of "Irish frieze" and "Peterboro'"; or he would not talk thus. Shoddy is one of the elements of the softest blankets made for the infant's cradle or the bridal bed. [Laughter.] Gentlemen laugh; being bachelors they are not acquainted with such things. [Laughter.] The finest cloth receives its exquisite softness of touch from shoddy.

I admit, that like every other ingredient, it may be used for purposes of adulteration, and in excess. Ours is the only country that permits woolen rags to be exported. Prussia prohibits it absolutely; and British manufacturers have moved their machinery and capital to Berlin to establish shoddy mills as they would do in America if we prohibited the export of our woolen rags. France also prohibited their export; and when Chevalier and Cobden made their treaty, France agreed to admit their export, but she cheated England by making the tax, or duty, prohibitory.

The woolen rags we export contain the elements of some of the finest pigments used by artists. From the dust of the shoddy manufactory you get that which gives the velvety appearance to the finest papers that embellish our saloons. In England, from the factories of Battly and Dewsbury, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, this material is derived. There is not one element in woolen rags gathered by the chiffonniers on the streets that goes to waste. There is not a raw material that yields so small, so imperceptible a percentage of waste as this. It is used to the last particle in manufactures and the arts.

When 1837 and 1857 were marked by commercial bankruptcy, from one end of our country to the other, the shoddy manufactures of England were closed; and only for two years in their history did their laborers live on public charity. Those were the years following the great commercial crises of 1837 and 1857, when there was a stoppage of the American market for shoddy goods. Let the raw material come in. Let us make blankets that will drive out English blankets. Let us make our own "Irish frieze" and "Peterboro' frosted beaver." Let us be able to rival England and France, and other European nations, in making those cloths, in which softness and fineness of texture are required, but in which durability is not expected.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend the amendment of my colleague [Mr. GRINNELL] so as to make the duty ten cents per pound. I do this for the purpose of saying a few words. It is not often on these tariff questions that I have an opportunity of agreeing with that great advocate of protection, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] I think, however, he is now on that line of true protection to American industry which consists with the general prosperity and advantage of the people of this country as well as of the manufacturers. Therefore I am with him heartily. Let me say, then, touching all these articles that are in the nature of raw material, that just in proportion as you promote the introduction of materials which are used in manufactures just in that proportion do you, on the one hand, increase the profits of the business of manufacturing in this country, and on the other hand cheapen the price to the consumer in this country. I think no gentleman will dispute this point with me. Now, these being articles of no use until they are manufactured, let them come in as freely as possible, so far as it is necessary to use them, in order to facilitate the development of the manufactures of which they form a part, and at the same time cheapen the cost to the consumers of the country.

My colleague [Mr. GRINNELL] evidently intended to accomplish an excellent purpose, in which, however, I think he was mistaken, so far as his proposition is concerned. His purpose evidently was to prevent the use in this country as far as possible of the article known as "shoddy." But he will see at once that his proposition in raising the duty to, as he proposes, twenty-five cents per pound does not accomplish that purpose, because it still leaves the cost of shoddy less than the cost of wool. And as long as you leave any margin of difference in favor of the inferior article, just so long will that inferior article be used to the extent necessary to secure a small profit if a large profit cannot be obtained. Then this article of shoddy will be used unless you forcibly prohibit its use entirely in this country. I say, therefore, that my colleague, excellent as his intention is, entirely fails to accomplish his purpose by his proposition. But I am earnestly desirous that this Congress shall, as far as possible, introduce into the tariff legislation of this country the principle of allowing the indispensable raw material, which we must introduce to a large extent from abroad, to come in with as low a duty as possible, and thus on the one hand develop manufactures, and on the other hand reduce the cost to the consumers of the country.

This is all I wish to say, and therefore I withdraw my amendment to the amendment, saying, however, that I should have preferred that the committee should have put the duty on these articles at a lower rate than the one they have.

Mr. COOK. Before the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] withdraws his amendment to the amendment, I wish to ask him whether his argument would not apply with equal force to the introduction of all foreign wools which may be manufactured in this country.

Mr. KASSON. The answer to that is, that we produce an amount of wool in this country that is probably adequate to the consumption of the country. That is not the case in reference to shoddy and rags. There is a species of wool which we introduce largely for the purpose of mixing with the wools of this country; yet there is a respectable duty placed upon them by this bill.

Mr. COOK. It seems to me that this shoddy wool, which I am informed, though I have no knowledge upon the subject, is imported into this country in great quantities from the British Provinces, does come in direct competition with the wool of this country. In so far as it is used in the manufacture of woollen fabrics it necessarily comes in competition with the wool-growing interests of the country. I insist that there is no force in the argument addressed to this committee by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] in relation to shoddy, that it has no value until manufactured. The same argument might with equal force be addressed to the committee in favor of the importation of unmanufactured wool, because when manufactured it makes an article that is valuable. But shoddy makes an article that is not valuable, because it deteriorates the article in which it is placed, which article might otherwise be valuable.

Let me state another reason why I hope to see a heavy duty placed upon shoddy. Our western manufactures have grown up to some extent during the war. Many branches of manufacture in my own State which before the war were scarcely able to live, have since the war commenced done well. By the establishment of woollen manufactories in the West the cost of transporting the wool from the West to the East, as well as the cost of transporting the manufactured article from the East to the West, is saved. In the West operatives can be fed at an expense of some thirty-three and one third per cent. less than it costs to feed them in New England. There is no reason why the manufacturers of the West should not prosper except that, manufacturing wool, they come into competition with the manufacturers of this cheap article, shoddy. I affirm, sir, that no western manufacturer can successfully compete with eastern manufactured goods, when he manufactures wool solely or chiefly, while the goods which come into competition with his are manufactured to a large extent of shoddy. The question, therefore, with reference to the duty upon shoddy is simply the question whether the manufacturers of the western country shall live or whether they shall not live.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "twenty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty." I hope this question will not be disposed of without due consideration on the part of the committee. What is the particular proposition of the bill now under discussion? It is, that "on woollen rags, shoddy, mungo, waste, and flocks the duty shall be twelve cents per pound." We are gravely told by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that we should encourage the importation into this country of the old rags and cast-off clothing of Europe, (bringing with them, as my colleague [Mr. BINGHAM] suggests, the itch, the small-pox, and yellow fever,) in order that this foreign refuse may be remanufactured into blankets and the finer qualities of clothing. Why, Mr. Chairman, what is this shoddy, this refuse from Europe, that is to be brought here to increase our manufactures? It is an article that may be bought at from five to ten cents per pound. I will not pretend to speak with precision as to the price, for I am not familiar with the traffic.

Mr. COOK. It can be bought for about twelve cents per pound.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. My friend from Illinois informs me that it sells for twelve cents per pound. This bill proposes that it shall be imported at a duty of twelve cents on the pound; so that its cost when brought into the country will be about twenty-four cents per pound.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to state a single fact in reference to the price of this article? Our Army-cuttings sold during the war for sixty-five cents a pound, being used for making shoddy-wool. Hence the shoddy could hardly be sold for twelve cents a pound.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Why, Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The Army-cuttings to which he refers are not even American shoddy. They are the waste fragments of new cloth, cloth never worn, never rotted, never contaminated by contagion or disease. Hence the remark of the gentleman has nothing to do with the question before us. The question is whether the old rags and worn-out clothes of Europe shall be imported into this country at a low rate of duty for the purpose of breaking down the wool interests of this country. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOK] informs me that he has now here a specimen of shoddy which is offered for sale in Boston at twelve cents per pound, so that with the duty proposed in this bill this article can be imported at a cost of twenty-four cents per pound. I can understand what may be the interest of those whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania represents, but that is not the interest of the western States, nor of the country generally.

I do not propose to weary the committee with a discussion of the inexpediency of encouraging a foreign fraud, as we do by inviting the importation of foreign shoddy. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says our old stockings and all the cast-off rags of the country will be taken to be manufactured into bridal blankets and baby clothes, and the gentleman, not satisfied with that, proposes to invite the shoddy and rags of Europe to come in upon us. I am opposed to any such thing. Instead of twenty-five I hope the duty will be made thirty.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised that we can all of us be so eloquent on so uninspiring a subject. Now, the duty proposed in this bill on shoddy is four times what it ever was before. It is a duty with which the wool-grower himself is entirely satisfied. It is proposed by him and by nobody else.

I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] that the increase he has proposed will not prevent our having foreign shoddy. The only difference will be that under his amendment it will be manufactured by foreign manufacturers instead of by our own manufacturers. If you prohibit this raw material from coming in our manufacturers cannot use it, but of course foreign manufacturers can use it. We cannot discriminate in a tariff on wools in reference to this subject of shoddy. It will take sharper eyes than the members of this House have to say when goods are made partly of shoddy and partly of wool.

Again, the amount manufactured in this country is inconsiderable. We have not reached that perfection in its manufacture which is obtained abroad, and the quantity, therefore, produced, amounting to something, is yet inconsiderable with that made by British manufacturers. It is also used for other purposes than for the manufacture of cloth. It is used for paper-hangings, borderings, and fire-boards, giving the velvet appearance to wall-paper and borderings, and it is also used for various other purposes.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I will inquire whether, if we produce enough of wool in this country to carry on the manufactures of the country, the old clothing and old woollen goods will not supply all demand for shoddy.

Mr. MORRILL. The fact is, the wool grower in this country is protected upon this article to the fullest extent he would be if wool were used. Take the article of wool coming from Cordova, the common mestiza wool, valued at fifteen cents per pound: the specific duty of ten cents per pound and ten per cent. ad valorem makes it eleven and a half cents per pound, and we give twelve cents on shoddy; so that if the manufacturer uses shoddy, the wool-grower gets about a half cent more protection than he would if wool only were to be used.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania or the gentleman from Vermont how France cheated England by prohibiting the importation of woollen rags.

Mr. MORRILL. France tried to keep the raw material from going out of the country in order to manufacture it herself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MORRILL. I will only add that the wool-growers themselves have no interest in raising this above the duty on wool.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "twenty" instead of "twenty-five;" and on that I wish to say simply a word or two. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means have assured this House there are no wearing properties in shoddy. It is not denied this shoddy is the importation of rags worn by Italian beggars and the cast-off rags of South American barbarians, and it is not denied we can get shoddy enough here at home. I am prepared to say I know men engaged in the manufacture of shoddy who wish to conceal the fact, understanding that it was disreputable. I have seen soldiers tear in pieces their clothing made from what was supposed to be wool, but which was made of shoddy, and was almost as tender as brown paper. Now, sir, does it become the American Congress to encourage the importation of that which is so filthy that the board of health of New York city was compelled to remove it, in the shape of imported rags?

Mr. MORRILL. I know the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] is learned in regard to wool, but he is not quite posted up in relation to shoddy. It is an article that never has been worn, being made from woolen rags torn to pieces—the chippings from tailor shops. Mungo is the article that the gentleman alludes to.

Mr. GRINNELL. I allude to mungo and shoddy. The House does not understand what mungo means, and I have not time to explain it. I am simply stating that there are no wearing properties in it. It is an imposition, and it ought so to be regarded, upon the clothes-wearing public. There is not a wool-grower nor a clothes-wearer that asks it. It is an imposition upon the people. We have imported in the last four years more than twenty-seven million pounds of these old rags, not the cuttings of cloth, but beggars' clothes. And now it is proposed to have a duty of twelve cents a pound upon the article, the same as upon strong wool proper to be worn by a gentleman. I say it is unequal. I say it is a reproach upon the nation to encourage it. Therefore, in order to secure the amendment, if possible, I will modify it by substituting twenty cents in the place of twenty-five cents.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] were better acquainted with this subject.

Mr. GRINNELL. I do not want to be any better acquainted with shoddy.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman never saw an American soldier clothed in American-woven shoddy such as he described. We send our rags to England where they are torn into wool and woven, and we buy them back again. The ragged soldiers of our early volunteer army were clothed in English shoddy cloth. The grand and well-appointed armies that were reviewed at the close of the war were clad in American-made cloth. But I tell the gentleman that the western manufacturers will never diversify their woolen fabrics until they learn to work up their own old rags. So long as they gather up and export their woolen rags, to be bought back again in cloth, they cannot diversify their fabrics.

The gentleman cries "shoddy," and would exclude an element of more than twenty branches of manufacture; an essential element; in some three per cent., in others five, and in none more than fifteen, until you reach the range of dog blankets and other things which are professedly shoddy. In many branches of manufacture you use shoddy alone. Your felt hats you cannot make without shoddy. And we are, as I have said, the only manufacturing people on the face of the globe that allow their woolen rags to be exported. I agree that there should be a duty on shoddy, on mungo, and on flocks, for they are manufactured articles and involve labor. I deny that there should be a duty on woolen rags. We export them while we want them more largely than the people of other countries. The production of shoddy alone can give us, as I said before, and as the chairman of the committee has well stated, an essential element of embellished papers. These old rags grace the elegant saloons of this country and of Europe.

Gentlemen do not understand the facts of the case. Because we export old rags and import shoddy cloths they insist upon it that we must forego a thousand advantages which science has deduced from them as raw material. I ask that in the final action of the committee they will let this section stand as it is in regard to "shoddy, mungo, waste, and flocks," but strike out woolen rags, and for this simple reason, that the presence of that provision in the bill proclaims us a nation so ignorant of the elements of manufactures that we prohibit the importation of that which France, Belgium, Prussia, and England will not permit to be exported from their limits.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate upon this section.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 313) to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glynnoin oil, and other substances therein named;

An act (S. No. 317) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864;

An act (H. R. No. 18) for the relief of the members of the thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteer infantry;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 158) providing for the settlement of accounts of W. H. Hamrick;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 123) for the relief of Elizabeth Woodward and George Chorpennig, of Pennsylvania;

A resolution (S. R. No. 110) to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 113) for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Cuyahoga river over and upon the Government piers at Cleveland, Ohio.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House resumes the consideration of the special order, the tariff bill, all debate on the pending section shall be terminated in six minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will let us reach the next section of the tariff bill and then I shall be willing to adjourn.

Mr. WARD. I withdraw my motion.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, the pending question being upon Mr. GRINNELL'S amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I deem it only fair that we should allow the duty to remain upon shoddy at as high a rate and no lower than reported. This is a matter which has been long discussed between the parties interested; and this amendment, as I understand it, was agreed upon by the convention of wool-growers. I trust the bill will be allowed to stand as it is.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to inquire of the honorable gentleman from Vermont whether the whole of the provision of this first section touching wool and shoddy was a part of the agreement between the convention of wool-growers and the manufacturers.

Mr. MORRILL. I so understand it.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to interfere at all with the pending amendment, nor do I rise in defense of shoddy. But inasmuch as debate has been closed, and as I desire to offer an amendment, I wish to explain it beforehand. My amendment will be to strike out the word "flocks," and to put it in at the rate of six cents per pound, reducing the duty one half. I think this article of flocks was put in this section by the committee under a misunderstanding as to the difference between flocks, shoddy, mungo, and waste. I have not time to explain the difference; but it is as much for the interest of the wool-growers as of the manufacturers that flocks should be omitted from this section. I object to its being retained here for two reasons. One is that it does not cost half as much as shoddy, and to place a duty of twelve cents upon it would be discriminating in favor of shoddy, against flocks. Flocks is the shreds of new cloth. It will not weave in as shoddy does. It is used for felting. It is used also in the manufacture of fine satinet to put a face on the back. It will wear until the cloth wears out. My friend from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] does not know anything about that kind of satinet.

I say to him that if he desires to prevent the manufacture of his fine wool into fine satinet he will succeed absolutely if he will only put a duty of from twelve to twenty cents per pound upon flocks. Now, the introduction of this flocks will not interfere at all with the shoddy trade. It has nothing to do with the shoddy trade. It goes into the manufacture of felt hats; it is also used in the manufacture of the finer kinds of wall-paper. And when it is in order, I shall move to reduce the duty on flocks to just one half what is proposed in this bill, or to twice as much as it is under the existing tariff law. The duty proposed in this bill is just four times as much as it is under the present law, simply because it is put here in bad company with shoddy, mungo, and waste. I hope, therefore, that some regard will be had to the nature of the article. It is like wool in that it will felt, while shoddy, mungo, or waste cannot, by any process under heaven, be made into felt. Shoddy is only used in woven goods, and that is the way in which it deteriorates, if at all, the value of the cloth.

Mr. GRINNELL. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] if this bill does not afford additional protection to the species of cloth in which this flocks enters.

Mr. DAWES. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GRINNELL,] what is the reason he desires to discriminate against flocks and in favor of shoddy after the speech he has made?

Mr. GRINNELL. I do not. But I would like to have the gentleman answer my question.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this section is closed by order of the House.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. GRINNELL, as modified, to strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "twenty," at the close of the first section; so that the clause will read:

And on woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, waste, and flocks, the duty shall be twenty cents per pound.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the last clause of this first section by striking out the word "flocks," and also to add to the section the words, "on flocks the duty shall be six cents per pound." That is double what it is now under the law; and really, in view of the difference between flocks and shoddy, I trust the House will discriminate in favor of flocks.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 32, noes 39; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DAWES and MORRILL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes forty, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk began the reading of the second section, when

Mr. MORRILL said: Agreeably to my promise I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. PRICE. I ask leave to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That this House will, until otherwise ordered, commence its sessions at eleven o'clock a. m., beginning with to-morrow, Friday, the 29th instant.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to consider this resolution at this time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

And then, on motion of Mr. BINGHAM, (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BENJAMIN: The petition of Albert S. Pierce of Kirksville, Missouri, for relief.

By Mr. CUBB: A memorial of C. C. Washburne, of Wisconsin, in re the proposed bridging of the Mississippi river at Winona.

By Mr. DODGE: The petition of a large number of commercial brokers, praying for a reduction of the tax on sales.

By Mr. HUBBARD, of New York: Two several petitions of 39 citizens of the county of Chenango, New York, praying for a repeal of the tax of ten per cent. imposed by a recent act upon any bank that shall pay out the notes of any State bank or banks on all they shall pay out on and after the 1st day of July next.

By Mr. MILLER: Two petitions from citizens of Pennsylvania, asking the tariff to be so amended as to protect labor, &c.

By Mr. McKEE: The petition of Chenant & Co., of Lexington, Kentucky, praying an act for their benefit, to enable them to secure payment for pork used by the Federal Army in Kentucky.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Mrs. Eliza H. Barnwell, of Philadelphia, for permission to redeem a store and wharf in Beaufort, South Carolina, sold without her knowledge for taxes and bought by the United States, by the payment of said taxes and expenses.

By Mr. WILSON, of Pennsylvania: The petition of 130 citizens of the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, praying for an amendment of the tariff so as to protect labor to the extent of the difference of the cost of capital and labor here and abroad, with the addition of the taxes paid by American industrial products from which the foreign are free.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: The petition of 60 working men of Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, praying for protection to labor to the extent of the difference between the value of foreign and domestic capital and labor, with the addition of the internal duties levied upon American industrial products.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 29, 1866.

Prayer by Rev. A. D. GILLETTE, D. D., of Washington.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the Legislature of Connecticut, in favor of the passage of an act whereby the comparative merits of each site offered for a navy-yard and naval depot for iron-clads may be ascertained, with a view to the adoption of that one by which the public interest will be best promoted; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of citizens of Washington, North Carolina, praying that a light may be placed on the obstruction in the Neuse river known as the "Blockade;" the petitioners alleging that the obstructions are so constructed as not to be visible above low-water mark, and that a light should be placed there for the protection of vessels entering and departing from that port; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER presented resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of an appropriation by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Orleans to Provincetown; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POMEROY. I have a memorial from the board of common council of the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, with some accompanying papers, relating to a bill that passed the House of Representatives appropriating a portion of the military reserve at Fort Leavenworth for a park for the city of Leavenworth. The Committee on Military Affairs yesterday reported adversely on that bill, without the proof and papers which are now in my possession and which have been received by mail since the report was made. I now move that the bill reported by the committee yesterday, (H. R. No. 447,) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell a portion of the Fort Leavenworth military reservation to the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, for a public park, be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs; and that the memorial and papers I now present take the same reference.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. BUSH.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, who is absent to-day, I move that House bill No. 705, for the relief of George W. Bush, which was yesterday reported on adversely, be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 491) to remove the office of surveyor general of the States of Iowa and Wisconsin to Plattsmouth, Nebraska, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ethan Ray Clark and Samuel Ward Clark, praying that their title to a tract of land in Florida may be confirmed, reported a bill (S. No. 402) to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clark and Samuel Ward Clark to certain lands in the State of Florida, claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 385) for the relief of Thomas W. Stevens, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHANDLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 399) relative to collection districts in North Carolina; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 401) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 403) to place the name of Sarah Bacon on the pension list; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 191) to amend an act making a grant of lands to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of the railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior, approved May 5, 1864; and

A bill (H. R. No. 629) for the benefit of William G. Lee.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, with amendments to each, in which amendments it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 215) concerning certain lands granted to the State of Nevada; and

A bill (S. No. 156) making additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State.

The message further announced that Mr. RUSSELL THAYER, of Pennsylvania, had been appointed as one of the managers on the part of the House of Representatives, in place of Mr. E. B. WASHBURN, of Illinois, who was excused, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1867.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. No. 145) for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph, which were disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BENJAMIN F. LOAN of Missouri, Mr. SIDNEY CLARKE of Kansas, and Mr. CHARLES A. ELDRIDGE of Wisconsin, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 613) to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THOMAS D. ELIOT of Massachusetts, Mr. JOHN A. BINGHAM of Ohio, and Mr. HIRAM McCULLOUGH of Maryland, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 313) to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glycoin oil, and other substances therein named;

A bill (S. No. 317) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864;

A bill (H. R. No. 18) for the relief of the members of the thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteer infantry;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 110) to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 113) for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Cuyahoga river over and upon the Government piers at Cleveland, Ohio; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 158) providing for the settlement of the accounts of W. H. Hamrick.

JOSEPH PARKINS.

Mr. WILSON. I am very anxious to get through two or three bills that it is important to pass at once. I move to take up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) for the relief of Joseph Parkins.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is an instruction to the proper accounting officer of the War Department to pay to Joseph Parkins, who has been and now is delivering the stone for the construction of the arsenal at Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, in lieu of the contract price, the sum of $13 50 per perch for all stone delivered and to be delivered for the construction of the arsenal. Parkins is to receive and accept this sum as full satisfaction of all claims under the contract, and is never to make any further claim for any services rendered by him thereunder.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTRA PAY TO VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up House bill No. 456.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 456) to extend the benefits of section four of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866, approved March 3, 1865, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that section four of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1865," be so construed as to entitle to the three months' pay proper, provided for therein, all officers of volunteers below the rank of brigadier general who were in the service on the 3d day of March, 1865, and whose resignations were presented and accepted, or who were mustered out at their own request, or otherwise honorably discharged from service after that date.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia reported the bill with an amendment to strike out the words "that date" at the end of the bill and to insert "the 9th day of April, 1865."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

LEASING OF SALINE LANDS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 351.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 351) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease such of the public lands of the United States as are known as saline lands or lands containing mineral springs, and to provide for the preservation and development of the same. Authority is given by the bill to the Secretary of the Interior to lease to responsible parties such saline lands or lands containing mineral springs as in his judgment may be leased with advantage to the Government and the public; but no such lease is to be for a longer period than twenty-five years, subject to readjustment every five years by disinterested referees, nor at any rate of rental less than the revenue assessed from time to time on manufactured salt or income tax upon mineral springs by act of Congress. The Secretary of the Interior is to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for the leasing, preserving, and developing of these saline lands and mineral springs, and for the securing and collection of the rental revenues due the Government therefrom; but such rules and regulations may be subject to revision by Congress.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment in section one, line five, after the word "springs" to insert "situated east of the one hundred and second meridian of longitude."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York what objection there is to having these saline lands sold.

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot answer that question. This bill is furnished to the committee by the Secretary of the Interior. He informs us that he can save something to the Government by the lease of these springs, without any disadvantage to anybody.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose members of the Senate—and I desire simply to call their attention to that fact—are aware that by the passage of this bill we are to inaugurate a new system in this country, and that is, the leasing of the public lands for manufacturing purposes. The result will be that these salt lands will never be half developed under such a system as this. We shall have agents scattered all over the country, appointed by the central power here at Washington, who will have the control of these salt springs, and I cannot apprehend that any advantage at all will result to the Government. The right way is to sell these lands, let them be owned by citizens of the country and let them develop them. This bill introduces a new practice, and I think it should receive more consideration than I fear it is likely to receive at this time.

Mr. CONNESS. This is a bill to make the Government of the United States a landlord and the citizens of the United States tenants. It originated, I believe, in the Land Office, and, singularly enough, it is not made to apply to the cases that gave it its origination or its birth. Some cases came up recently in the State of California where persons had settled upon land containing soda springs and sulphur springs. In some instances they were claimed in connection with land adjacent to them by reason of land-warrants issued by the State of California and laid upon those lands; and as against such claimants there were preëmptors claiming the same quarter section of land. The contest in those cases came up to the Land Office, and the decision of that wise tribunal was that neither of those parties could have the land. Now, let me inform the honorable Senator who has reported this bill, whom I understand so well, and whose motives I know to be so good, that in a single case improvements upon a quarter section connected with one of those springs had been made by a citizen of California amounting to over $150,000, and yet this Land Office decided that this was of a class of property that could not go to the citizen in fee. Why? Because there was a law of the United States against it? Not a scratch nor a word; but because of the assumption of an official that a property which he thought of great value was too valuable to pass into the hands of a citizen. Why, sir, there is nothing in this country nor in this world that is too good for an American citizen; and it is time that officials were taught that simple fact. But the bill as reported does not apply to our country at all, and hence the honorable Senator who reports the bill will see that I have no motive coming from locality in opposing the bill. It has been amended by the committee so that it shall not have application west of a certain meridian. Why? A citizen of Iowa cannot take a piece of saline land or a soda or sulphur spring, but he must become the tenant of the Government of the United States forever, while the citizen of California can. What is to be done in the mean time by the decisions made at the Land Office in regard to the cases arising in our State I know not. The bill was intended to apply to them also, but the committee have excluded its application from our country. I am very glad they have done that. They want but to go one step further to do the wisest thing, and that is, to exclude such an act from the Senate.

Sir, it is too late in the day to teach the doctrine, by proposing an act here, that Government is in its most legitimate capacity when it undertakes to be a landlord over the people. It is too late in the day to teach the doctrine that the citizen is in his proper relations to the Government when he is made a tenant of the Government. Does the Senator from New York propose to reestablish upon a small scale, or upon a large scale, the Van Rensselaer estate system, simply substituting the Government for the Van Rensselaers, and give to us a war such as that which in the State of New York was called the anti-rent war, twenty-five or fifty years hence?

I hope that no bill of this kind will secure the attention of the Senate. It is kindred with a measure that was passed here in 1864, that never ought to have received the sanction of Congress, but which went through without much consideration. I refer to a bill for the sale of coal lands, fixing as the minimum price for coal lands upon the public domain of the United States twenty dollars an acre, while you can go into the State of Pennsylvania and into the State of Illinois and buy the most valuable coal lands in the world for a third of that sum. What is the result of that act passed in 1864? Where the Land Office suspects—not knows, but suspects—that coal exists in Oregon, in California, in a whole district, they issue an order withdrawing all that land from sale, and the citizen cannot buy it unless he pays twenty dollars an acre, which is the minimum price; but it is first to be sold at public auction for a higher rate, if that can be obtained. There is not on the entire Pacific coast a single coal mine of great value. There are small strata of coal, of not a valuable quality, in different places on the Pacific coast, but no valuable coal mines; and our people are prevented from undertaking to mine or to look for coal until they first buy the fee of the land at twenty dollars an acre. Now, we are to have added to that an act from the Land Office which proposes to make the Government a landlord and the citizens tenants wherever a piece of saline land or a soda or sulphur spring is found. I hope, sir, that there will be no more of such legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. I will consent that this bill lie over until I can inform myself more in regard to it. I move that it be postponed for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

RICHARD W. MEADE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of joint resolution No. 39.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, to the Court of Claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The preamble recites that doubts are entertained whether the claim of the estate of Richard W. Meade, deceased, upon the Government of the United States is covered and embraced by the ninth section of the act of 3d March, 1863, entitled "An act to amend an act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States," approved February 24, 1855, which case was referred to the court by resolution of the Senate, passed 27th February, 1861. In order to remove all doubts on that subject, the resolution directs the claim of Richard W. Meade, administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication pursuant to authority conferred upon that court by any existing law to examine and decide claims against the United States referred to it by Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON GLASS COMPANY.

Mr. RIDDLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 227, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is a short bill, and will occupy no time and give rise to no debate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 227) to incorporate the Washington Glass Company. It proposes to constitute William S. de Zeng, Robert Rose, and John L. Kidwell, their associates, successors, assigns, and such other persons as shall become shareholders, a body politic and corporate, in deed and in law, by the name, style, and title of the Washington Glass Company, to be located in the District of Columbia, for the manufacture of glass and porcelain in all their varieties, with a capital stock of $100,000, with power to increase the same to any sum not exceeding $500,000.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill, with an amendment in section one, line ten, after the words "capital stock of $100,000" to insert "twenty per cent. of which shall be subscribed and paid in before said company shall proceed in its operations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

ASBURY CHAPEL.

Mr. WILLEY. I move to take up Senate bill No. 361.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 361) to authorize W. J. Sibley, and others, to sell and convey lot number nine, in square number seventy-six, in the city of Washington. The preamble recites that lot number nine, in square number seventy-six, in the city of Washington, was conveyed by J. H. McBlair to W. J. Sibley, and others, in trust, to erect thereon a place of worship for the use of the people of color, members of the Methodist Episcopal church in the United States; that the trustees have not had the means of erecting such church, and the purpose has been abandoned, and another church, called the Asbury chapel, has been erected in or near the neighborhood of the lot, which the trustees desire to sell and apply the proceeds to the benefit of the congregation worshipping in Asbury chapel, a purpose which J. H. McBlair, as far as he had any interest therein, has approved by his subsequent deed made to the trustees. The bill therefore authorizes W. J. Sibley, and others, trustees of the lot mentioned, or the survivors of them, to sell and convey it for such price as they shall think proper, or to confirm and carry out any contract for sale already made by them with any person, and to convey the same accordingly, freed and discharged of the trust upon which it was originally conveyed to them, and to apply the proceeds of sale to the benefit of the congregation worshipping in the Asbury chapel, as the proper and legal authority thereof may deem expedient, and for no other purpose whatever.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with two amendments. The first amendment was in line three of the preamble, after the name of "W. J. Sibley," to strike out the words "and others" and to insert "Ro. Ricketts, R. W. Bates, R. L. Sanders, Benjamin McCoy, and G. Spoarder."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line three of the bill, after the name of "W. J. Sibley," to strike out the words "and others" and to insert "Ro. Ricketts, R. W. Bates, R. L. Sanders, Benjamin McCoy, and G. Spoarder."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 191) to amend an act making a grant of lands to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of the railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior, approved May 5, 1864—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. No. 629) for the benefit of William G. Lee—to the Committee on Claims.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. CONNESS as the committee of conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes.

PUBLIC LANDS IN NEVADA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 215) concerning certain lands granted to the State of Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. The amendments to that bill are merely verbal. I ask that the Senate concur in them.

The Secretary read the amendments of the House of Representatives, which were in section six, line nine, to strike out the word "under;" in the same section, in lines ten and eleven, to strike out the words "and sale;" in line thirteen, after the word "right," to insert "in tracts of land not less than forty acres;" in line fourteen, after the word "same," to insert "in tracts not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres each;" and in line fifteen, after the word "occupants," to insert "and provided further, that city and town property shall not be subject to selection under this act."

The amendments were concurred in.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 508.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 508) to amend the organic acts of the Territories of Dakota, Colorado, Nebraska, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico.

The Committee on Territories proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the words "to wit," in the seventh line of the first section, to the end of the enacting clause of the sixth section. The words proposed to be stricken out were as follows:

The Legislative Assemblies of each of the Territories named shall pass no special acts conferring corporate powers, but they may authorize the formation of corporations (except for banking purposes) under general laws, which may be altered or repealed at any time; and the property of all corporations which may hereafter be organized, or which now exist, shall be subject to the same taxation as the property of individuals.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid, respectively, shall, at their first session after the passage of this act, provide by general laws for the organization of associations for commercial, manufacturing, and mining purposes, for ferries, bridges, turnpikes, and toll-roads, for churches, colleges, and literary and other associations, and for the incorporation of cities and villages, restricting their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit, so as to prevent the abuse of such power.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assemblies of each of the Territories aforesaid shall, at their first session after the passage of this act, prescribe by law the manner in which all corporations, except for benevolent purposes, heretofore authorized by acts of said Territorial Legislatures, shall reorganize under general laws: Provided, That all corporations or associations now duly organized in pursuance of law, and engaged in legitimate business, shall have precedence of any proposed new association, in reorganizing under such general acts of incorporation as may be passed: And provided further, That such reorganization shall be within one year from the date of the adjournment of the first Legislative Assembly in each of the aforesaid Territories after the passage by such Assembly of the act herein required.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all special charters granted by any of the Legislative Assemblies of either of the Territories herein named, to associations which have not been organized, are hereby declared void, and all persons who may have secured special grants for ferries, bridges, turnpikes, toll-roads, or special grants for any purpose, shall be subject to such general laws as the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid shall enact as required by this act.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts of any of the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid, granting to associations or to individuals the exclusive right to go upon and occupy any part of the public domain, or to the exclusive use of the timber or water powers thereon, or the right to the exclusive use of water to be taken from lakes, rivers, or streams be, and the same are hereby, declared null and void: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed in anywise to invalidate any vested rights of persons acquired under the existing laws of either of said Territories in any mines, nor to invalidate any corporation or mining company within any of said Territories organized under and in pursuance of any State law or law of Congress.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to strike out the eighth section of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid shall hereafter have no power or authority to grant divorces, but divorces may be granted by the courts of the United States in each of said Territories for such cause as may appear to them good and sufficient: Provided, That both parties shall reside in the Territory where the application for divorce is made: And provided further, That public notice shall be given by advertisement in at least two newspapers published in said Territory, stating the court before which the application will be heard, and the causes for which the divorce is demanded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, reads thus:

Be it enacted, etc., That the several acts establishing territorial governments for the Territories of Dakota, Colorado, Nebraska, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico, and all acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same are hereby, amended as follows, to wit: that no person now appointed, or who may hereafter be appointed by the President to any office in either of the aforesaid Territories, shall receive any compensation out of the Treasury of the United States, or out of any contingent fund for services or as compensation for his salary until he shall have entered upon the discharge of his official duties within the Territory; nor shall any officer thus appointed be paid for the time he may be absent from the Territory if absent without authority of the President of the United States.

SEC. [7] 2. And be it further enacted, That in case of the death, absence, or inability of any judge of the United States superior courts for any Territory, at the time when the courts for his judicial district are appointed by law to be held, a judge of either of the districts in such Territory, not then occupied, is hereby authorized and may hold court in such district during the absence or inability of any judge, and all judgments, decrees, and orders of said court shall be as binding as if the same were held by the judge appointed therefor.

SEC. [9] 3. And be it further enacted, That within the Territories aforesaid there shall be no denial of the elective franchise to citizens of the United States because of race or color, and all persons shall be equal before the law. And all acts or parts of acts, either of Congress or of the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid, inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby declared null and void.

SEC. [10] 4. And be it further enacted, That where a secretary of a Territory has heretofore performed, or hereafter shall be required to perform, the duties of acting Governor by reason of the absence from the Territory of the Governor, or during a vacancy in said office, said secretary shall be entitled to receive for the actual time during which the said duties of Governor devolve upon him by law, and are actually performed by him, a sum sufficient to make his salary equal to the salary of the Governor.

SEC. [11] 5. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to strike out the section in regard to the regulation of suffrage. I think it is the ninth section. I ask for its reading.

The Secretary read section [nine] three, proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. WADE. I hope that section will not be stricken out. We have all thus far, I suppose, proceeded upon this subject on the hypothesis that the General Government had not the power to regulate the elective franchise in the States of this Union; but of course we have the power of legislation to all intents and purposes in the Territories of the United States, and I believe it is pretty well understood here now that when a Territory shall refuse to grant this franchise in its most extensive signification, the Senate will refuse to receive that Territory into the Union as a State. It is that, perhaps, which prevents us now from passing a certain bill over the veto of the President, because the constitution of the State which that bill proposed to admit has not this stipulation in it.

I do not now suppose it is necessary to go into the argument that is ordinarily resorted to, either pro or con, as to the right of franchise and the expediency of granting it generally, because the whole subject has been so often up and so thoroughly debated that in my judgment no good would come from prolonged discussion at this stage of the session.

I only wish the Senate to understand what the question is. The section now proposed to be stricken out provides that these Territories shall make no discrimination in the elective franchise between any races of people within their limits. The question is fairly raised by this motion whether the Senate will make that provision for a Territory where we have entire power or control over the subject, or whether they will not. I think that it is time it was understood that when Territories come knocking at our doors to be admitted as States they are not to be admitted if they have improper provisions in their constitutions, and now is the time to test the question by imposing such provisions as we think proper, so that all the Territories framing constitutions and bringing them here for our sanction may know on what terms they may expect to be admitted. It is for that purpose that this section was inserted here, and I think it ought to be tried.

For myself, at this period of the session and in this year of grace, I surely need not say that I am for the most extensive right of suffrage to every human being who is rational, who is above the age of twenty-one years, and who is a citizen of the United States. I am for that on all occasions. I am inclined to think and I do believe that it is one of those inherent and "inalienable" rights which were alluded to by our fathers in that great Declaration which has had so much effect upon the destinies of the world. I believe that in civilized communities it is a right which pertains to a man from the same high source and in the same way that any other of his rights to person or property are held. That is my judgment, and I think that the Declaration of Independence in this respect was only declaratory of the great law of nature itself, and introduced no new principle. I am for living up to that Declaration, and I am for bringing the Territories to understand that if they come here for admission they must come without any taint of aristocracy in their constitutions, but must make them conform to the reformed state of public opinion now existing. Therefore, sir, I am opposed to striking out this section, and I hope that the Senate will keep it in and that it will be passed into a law.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The effect of the amendment which I have submitted is to leave this question wholly untouched, to allow all the provisions which exist in the acts organizing the Territories to have operation as heretofore, without the interference of Congress. Now, sir, the Senator from Ohio appears, from his remarks, to desire this provision as a notice to the Territories with reference to the question of the formation of constitutions by them preparatory to their admission into the Union hereafter. In other words, he desires indirectly to dictate to those Territories the form of constitutions which they may hereafter make for themselves preparatory to their admission into the Union. Our old doctrine and our correct doctrine, as I understand it, has been that the constitution made by a new State, or made by the inhabitants of a Territory preparatory to their admission into the Union as a State, shall be their own work, completely and entirely, in every respect whatever, except that it must be republican in form. From the beginning of our Government down to this day, I believe that doctrine has obtained; it has received general admission.

Now, the Senator from Ohio proposes, as I understand his argument, by this measure to give direction to the action of the people of the respective Territories who may hereafter apply for admission into the Union—to give direction to their action in the formation of their constitutions preparatory to admission. Of course, sir, we are not now forming territorial governments; that has already been done by Congress, and the subject has passed from us as to those already established. The object at present must be to anticipate future action with reference to the admission of these Territories as States. I understand—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No 344.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce; and upon that question the Chair is advised that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COWAN. I merely rose yesterday to put some interrogatories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. Let the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be commenced at the point where it was interrupted yesterday.

The Secretary read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was in section two, line three, after the word "engineers" to strike out the word "to" and insert "appointed by the company to be organized as hereinafter provided, who shall;" so as to make the section read:

That the President shall appoint a topographical engineer, to be associated with two civil engineers appointed by the company to be organized as hereinafter provided, who shall make such preliminary examinations and surveys, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two of section three to strike out the word "secure" and insert "aid in securing;" and in the same section, line three, to strike out the words "to acquire" and insert "and in acquiring;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to aid in securing the right of way for such canal and in acquiring the title to such lands, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line nine of section three to strike out the words "President by," and after "agents," in the same line, to insert "of said company;" so as to read:

Then the engineers and agents of said company may, at any time thereafter, enter upon and take possession of said lands, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twelve of section three to strike out the words "the United States" and insert "said company;" so as to read:

Appropriate the same to the use of said company for the purpose of the construction of said canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line twenty, after the word "paid" to strike out the words "by the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, after the words "notice of," in line two, to insert "not less than;" so as to read:

Such application shall be made on the service of notice of not less than twenty days to the parties in interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "and," in line four of section four, to strike out the words "in case personal service thereof cannot be made upon the parties, such service may be made by the publication of such notice in the State paper of the State of New York and in a public newspaper printed in the county of Niagara aforesaid, for four weeks prior to the day on which such hearing is to be had, by petition describing," and in lieu thereof to insert "if it shall be made to appear to said court or the judge thereof that personal service of such notice cannot be made for any cause, such service may be made by publishing the same in such newspaper and for such a length of time as the court or judge may direct, which notice and the petition on which it is issued shall in all cases describe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ten of section five to strike out the words "the United States" and insert "said company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "notice," in line four of section six, to strike out the words "and the court may confirm the report of the commissioners or recommit it to the same or other commissioners, as justice may require, who shall proceed in like manner, and report their proceedings to the court," and in lieu of these words to insert the following:

And they shall make a report of their proceedings to one of the courts named in section three of this act, with the minutes of the testimony taken by them, if any. On such report being made by said commissioners, the company shall give notice to the parties to be affected by the proceedings or their attorneys, according to the rules and practice of such court at any general or special term thereof, for the confirmation of such report; and if no appeal be taken therefrom the court shall thereupon confirm such report, and shall make an order containing a recital of the substance of the proceedings in the matter of the appraisal, and a description of the real estate appraised for which compensation is to be made, and shall also direct to whom the money is to be paid or in what bank, and in what manner it shall be deposited by the company. But either party feeling aggrieved at said appraisement may, within thirty days after the same has been returned into court, file an appeal therefrom and demand a jury of twelve men to estimate the damages sustained; but such appeal shall not interfere with the rights of said company to enter upon the premises taken, or to do any act necessary and proper in the construction of its canal. And said party appealing shall give bonds with sufficient surety or sureties for the payment of any costs that may arise upon such appeal; and in case the party appealing does not obtain a verdict increasing or diminishing, as the case may be, the award of the commissioners, such party shall pay the whole costs incurred by the appellee as well as his own; and the payment into court, for the use of the owner of said premises taken, of a sum equal to that finally awarded, shall be held to vest in said company the title of said land and of the right to use and occupy the same for the construction, maintenance, and operation of said canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section seven, lines two and three, to strike out the words "commissioners shall have made a satisfactory report the court shall make an order confirming the same, and," and to insert "report of such commissioners shall be confirmed, or in case of appeal therefrom final judgment thereon shall have been rendered, the court;" in line seven, after the word "confirmation," to insert "or final judgment;" and at the end of the section to strike out the words "the United States" and to insert "said company;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That whenever the report of such commissioners shall be confirmed, or in case of appeal therefrom, final judgment thereon shall have been rendered, the court shall direct a summary of the petition and the report, with the order of confirmation, or final judgment, to be entered of record in the clerk's office of the county of Niagara, in said State, in the book of miscellaneous records. And said commissioners shall be entitled to eight dollars each for their services, together with their traveling expenses, for every day they are actually engaged in the performance of their duties, which shall be added to the amount agreed upon in their report, and paid as a part of said claims. And upon the payment of the compensation specified in said report for such right of way and any such land to the owner or owners thereof, or upon depositing the sum in such bank or other institution as the court shall designate for that purpose, the title to such right of way and lands shall pass to and be vested in said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eight, line two, after the word "canal," to strike out the following words:

For military and commercial purposes, and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the States bordering on the northern frontier, and to regulate commerce among the several States, as well as to relieve the Treasury, as far as may be practicable, from a large expenditure of money, by availing itself of private enterprise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eight, line forty, after the word "appropriated," to strike out the words "by the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eight, line forty, after the word "provided," to strike out the following words:

The title to and fee in which land shall be and remain in the United States, as a guarantee that the canal to be constructed thereon shall at all times, during the season of navigation, be kept in repair and open to the free use of the United States for military and naval purposes; but the corporation hereby created, and its successors, shall always and at all times, and in perpetuity, have, hold, and enjoy the right, and be allowed and permitted, without let or hindrance of any kind, to enter upon, use, occupy, and enjoy the said land and every part thereof, free of rent or any charge whatever, for the purposes and objects herein expressed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. There is a change of phraseology that I wish to make in the clause immediately following the one just stricken out. It is in line fifty-three of section eight to strike out after the word "upon" the words "pass to," and after the word "and" to insert the word "may;" so that it will read:

And all the rights, powers, and privileges created hereby shall be, and the same hereby are, conferred upon, and may be used and enjoyed by, said company upon the terms and conditions following, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alteration will be made if there be no objection.

The next amendment of the committee was in section eight, line seventy-six, after the word "appointed," to strike out the words "by the President."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to have the Senator having the bill in charge refer to the part of the bill in which the appointment of these engineers is provided for. This amendment proposes to strike out their appointment by the President. In looking over the bill I do not see how else the engineers who are to examine this work are provided for.

Mr. HOWE. It is in the second section of the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The provision on which we are now acting is this: it speaks of the construction of the canal as it progresses, that it shall be of "permanent and substantial material and in good workmanlike manner, subject, as the work progresses, to the examination, direction, and approval of the engineers to be appointed by the President as is herein specified." Now, the words "by the President" being stricken out, the engineers will then be, under the second section, the engineers and agents of the company.

Mr. HOWE. Two of them.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If this amendment be made, as I understand it, the Government really has no supervision over the work as it progresses, to know whether it is done in a workmanlike manner or not.

Mr. HOWE. It will have the supervision of one engineer appointed by the President, and three directors.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is no control at all.

Mr. HOWE. Certainly not. The Government do not propose to control the company. If the Government was going to build the work itself it would not employ a company.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand that; but is the Government to have no controlling power as to the manner in which the work shall go on; to see whether it is according to the law or not, as set down here?

Mr. HOWE. It has whatever protection the supervision of that engineer and its three directors can give.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Otherwise it will be left wholly with the company?

Mr. GRIMES. All the duty of the Government is to furnish the money.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand that in building the Pacific railroad there is no money allowed to be paid to the company until a commission appointed by the President shall go on and view the work and certify that it has been built according to the law. Now, by this amendment, if it prevails, we have no such safeguards in regard to this work; but the certification of an engineer of the company alone is all that is required before we are called upon to pay the money under this bill.

Mr. HOWE. The security of the Government is provided for in another clause of the bill. It is not affected by this clause at all. When we come to that the Senator will see whether it is adequate or not. If it is not adequate that will be the place to make it adequate. This, however, has nothing to do with that question.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. This amendment can be adopted now, and we can have a separate vote on it hereafter if necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was in section eight, line eighty-three, after the word "thereof" to strike out the following words:

And when thus completed the said canal and Niagara river shall be a military, naval, postal, and public highway, connecting Lakes Erie and Ontario, and shall be established as such to the United States and the people thereof forever, and no obstructions shall be placed therein which shall impede or interfere with the uninterrupted navigation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eight, line one hundred and twenty-five, to strike out the words "or neglect" before the word "to," and after the word "to" to strike out the word "perform" and insert the words "comply with;" and in line one hundred and twenty-eight, after the word "declare," to strike out the words "the said contract void, and;" and after the word "rights" in the same line to strike out the words "thereunder and" and insert the words "of said company;" so that the clause will read:

8. In case of any failure on the part of said company to commence said work or to complete the canal within the period herein specified, or to keep the same in good repair and condition, or of a neglect to perform any and all of the conditions hereinbefore stated, the President of the United States shall notify the president of such company thereof in writing, specifying wherein said company is in default; and upon receipt of such notice, if the said company shall fail to comply with the terms and conditions of this act set forth and specified in said notice, for the space of six months after the service thereof, the President may declare all rights of said company under this law forfeited.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eight, line one hundred and thirty, after the word "and" to strike out the following words:

May terminate said contract, and at once proceed to relet said canal, and make and enter into a new contract for the construction and operation of said canal with any other company which may be incorporated for such purpose, under the laws of the United States, upon the terms and conditions above stated.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

May take such proceedings as he may deem advisable to terminate the possession of said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nine, line seven, to strike out the word "hundred," and insert "thousand;" so that the clause will read:

And shall be divided into shares of $100 each, and which shall be subscribed for and held in not less than one share or more than two thousand shares by any one person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section ten, line six, after the word "commissioners," to strike out the following words:

To open books for subscription to the stock of said corporation, on which shall be paid at the time of subscription ten per cent. thereof, and they shall open such books on or before the 1st day of August next, at such places as they may appoint, having first given notice of the time and place of meeting for that purpose by publishing the same once at least in each week for four weeks successively, in a newspaper printed and published in the city of New York; Chicago, in the State of Illinois; Detroit, in the State of Michigan; Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin; Cleveland, in the State of Ohio; and Boston, in the State of Massachusetts. The aforesaid subscription books shall be kept open, at the places designated in the aforesaid notice, for at least three days. A majority of said commissioners shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and they may adjourn from time to time, and, after the first three days, to such places as they may think fit, until the requisite number of shares shall be subscribed for; and in case a surplus of—

And to insert in lieu thereof:

One or more of whom shall open books of subscription to the stock of said company in each of the cities of New York; of Chicago, in the State of Illinois; of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin; of Detroit, in the State of Michigan; and of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts. Notice of the time and place for opening said books in each of said cities shall be given by publishing the same in two leading newspapers printed or published in each of said cities, at least once in each week for four successive weeks prior to the time of meeting. Such books of subscription shall be kept open at each of the places above designated, at least three days, and no subscription shall be received unless the subscriber shall deliver to the commissioner in charge of the books, a certificate of deposit issued by some national depository for ten per cent. of the amount subscribed and payable to the order of the treasurer of the Niagara Ship-Canal Company. In case twenty thousand shares of said stock shall not be subscribed for in manner aforesaid within said three days, said books may be opened at such other places and for such further time as a majority of said commissioners may direct, and until the requisite number of shares shall be so subscribed; and in case more than twenty thousand.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend that amendment in the forty-third line by striking out the words, "the requisite number of" before the word "shares," and inserting "twenty thousand."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was in section eleven, line sixteen, to strike out the word "States" and to insert "of the cities;" in line eighteen to insert the word "and" before "Oswego," and after "Oswego" to strike out the words "and New York;" and in line nineteen, after "New York," to strike out "and in the city of Chicago;" so that the clause will read:

The annual meetings of the stockholders shall be held at such time, between the first Wednesday of May and the first Wednesday of June in each succeeding year, and at such place in the county of Niagara, State of New York, as shall be from time to time fixed by the directors for the purpose; and in all cases at least four weeks' notice of the time and place of meeting shall be published in one newspaper in each of the cities in which subscription books have been opened, and in the counties of Niagara and Oswego, in the State of New York, in the manner in which the notice for opening the books for subscription is required to be published by the preceding section of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section twelve, line two, to strike out the word "eighteen" and insert "fifteen" before the word "directors;" in line four, after the word "appointed," to insert "by the President;" in line five to strike out the words "pleasure of the President" and insert "term of three years;" in line seven to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "twelve" before "directors;" in line thirteen to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "twelve" before "directors;" and in line twenty-one to strike out the word "five" and insert "four" before the word "directors;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the affairs of the said corporation shall be managed by a board of fifteen directors, three of whom shall represent the Government and be appointed by the President, and hold their offices during the term of three years, and shall not be stockholders in said corporation. The remaining twelve directors, with the exception hereinafter mentioned, shall hold their offices for three years, and until others shall be elected in their places. A majority of the board of directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of all business connected with said corporation. Immediately after the first election of directors, as herein provided, the twelve directors, representing said corporation, shall be divided by lot into three classes of equal number; and the term of office of the first class shall end on the first Wednesday of June next succeeding the due organization of the said corporation, according to the provisions of this act; of those of the second class, on the first Wednesday of June in the year next succeeding; of those of the third class, on the first Wednesday of June following. At each succeeding annual meeting of the stockholders four directors and three inspectors of election shall be elected, by ballot, to fill the places of those whose term of office will expire on the first Wednesday of June of that year. And on all questions submitted to the stockholders for determination, each shall be entitled to one vote, either in person or by proxy, for every share of stock held or represented by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the sixteenth section of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That whenever $500,000 of the capital stock of the said corporation shall have been subscribed for and the subscribers shall have paid ten per cent. upon the stock subscribed for by them respectively, the said corporation shall be deemed to be duly organized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section seventeen, lines seven and eight, to strike out "such lands" and insert "the same."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made, no objection being interposed.

The next amendment was in section eighteen, after the word "company," in line four, to strike out "at any rate of interest, not exceeding ten per cent. per annum, as may be agreed upon between the parties."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same section, after the word "dollars," to insert "payable in twenty years from date, with interest thereon at seven per cent., to be paid semi-annually, upon coupons attached;" so that the section will read:

That the said corporation is hereby authorized to borrow money on time, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,000,000, on the credit of the company, for the purpose of building and constructing said ship-canal and the works connected therewith, and may issue its corporate bonds therefor in denominations not less than $500, payable in twenty years from date, with interest thereon at seven per cent. to be paid semi-annually, upon coupons attached, and to secure the payment thereof, with the interest that may accrue thereon, may mortgage its corporate property, effects, and franchise, or convey the same by deed of trust for said purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same section, in line eighteen, after the word "prices" to insert "not less than par;" and after "company," in line nineteen, to strike out "and if such bonds or stocks are sold at a discount, such sale shall be as valid and binding in every respect as if sold at par value;" so as to read:

And said company may by its president or other officers or agents, under the direction of the board of directors, sell, dispose of, or negotiate such bonds or stocks of said company, at such times and places and at such rates and for such prices, not less than par, as, in their opinion, will best answer the interest of the company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nineteen, line four, to strike out the word "impose" and to insert "provide;" in line five, after "such," to strike out "forfeitures of money and penalties" and insert "fines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nineteen, line twelve, after "as," to strike out "due" and insert "prima facie;" and in line thirteen, after "regulations," to strike out "and forfeitures;" so as to read:

And a copy thereof, certified by said clerk under his hand and seal of his office, shall be received in all courts of law as prima facie proof that such rules and regulations were established by said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seventeen of the same section to insert "defendant" after "parties."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the end of section nineteen to insert:

And provided further, That no money shall be loaned to said corporation by the United States nor borrowed by it from any other source until the full sum subscribed to its capital stock shall have been collected and in good faith expended upon the construction of said work, which expenditure shall be duly verified by the oaths of the president and engineers aforesaid, and thereafter such loan shall be advanced only upon the terms and conditions in this section prescribed: And provided further, That all interest accrued on any bond to be issued to said corporation by the United States under the provisions of this act prior to the date of its delivery shall be duly canceled prior to its delivery.

Mr. HOWE. That amendment is printed in the wrong place. It is designed as a proviso to section twenty-one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made, and the proviso will be put in at the place indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HOWE. I suppose it will be proper to consider it when we come to section twenty-one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be considered at the present time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think we had better consider this proviso when we reach section twenty-one, for it seems to me to be inconsistent with that section.

The Secretary read the next amendment of the committee, which was in section twenty, line two, after the word "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as said company may desire to borrow."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section twenty-one the following proviso:

And provided further, That no money shall be loaned to said corporation by the United States nor borrowed by it from any other source until the full sum subscribed to its capital stock shall have been collected and in good faith expended upon the construction of said work, which expenditure shall be duly verified by the oaths of the president and engineers aforesaid, and thereafter such loan shall be advanced only upon the terms and conditions in this section prescribed: And provided further, That all interest accrued on any bond to be issued to said corporation by the United States under the provisions of this act prior to the date of its delivery shall be duly canceled prior to its delivery.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to amend this amendment by inserting after the word "sum," in the twenty-second line, the words "of $2,000,000;" so as to read, "until the full sum of $2,000,000 subscribed to its capital stock shall have been collected and in good faith expended."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems to me that the proviso is inconsistent with the body of the section, if I understand it. Section twenty-one provides:

That whenever said company shall have expended in and toward the construction of said canal the sum of $300,000, and shall deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury the certificate of the engineers aforesaid and the president of said company, duly verified by them on oath, stating that such sum last above named had been expended and paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith pay and deliver to the treasurer of said company, or to his order, $200,000, in the bonds aforesaid, as a part of the sum to be loaned by this act; and whenever and as often thereafter as the like certificate and proof shall be furnished to the Secretary of the Treasury that other and the further sum of $300,000 has been paid and expended by the said company in the further construction of the said canal, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay and deliver to the treasurer of said company, or to his order, other of said bonds to the amount of $200,000; and he shall continue from time to time to pay over and deliver other of said bonds to said company, or to its treasurer, to the amount of $200,000 at a time, or such parts thereof as may be necessary to make the whole sum hereby ordered and directed to be loaned upon such certificates and proof of expenditure as aforesaid, until the whole $6,000,000 above specified shall be duly advanced and paid.

This provides that whenever the company shall have expended $300,000 the Government is to deliver $200,000 of its bonds to the company, as part of the sum to be loaned by this act. What is the proviso? The proviso is that no money shall be loaned to the corporation by the United States, nor borrowed by it from any other source till the full sum of $2,000,000 subscribed to its capital stock shall have been collected and in good faith expended upon the construction of the work. Are not the provisions inconsistent? When $300,000 are expended by the company, $200,000 of Government bonds are to be delivered, as I understand the body of the section; but by this proviso the two millions must all have been expended upon the work before the company can receive anything.

Mr. HOWE. I will state to the Senator the idea of the committee, and he will see whether we have carried it out or not. Our purpose was to insure the expenditure of at least two millions of the money of the company before any money was advanced by the United States, and we had this section twenty-one to amend so as to effect that object, and we agreed to this proviso, supposing it would do it. The section twenty-one provides that as often as $300,000 are spent by the company, $200,000 shall be loaned by the United States; but the proviso requires that the Government shall not begin to loan at all until the company have spent $2,000,000, and then as often as they spend $300,000 we loan $200,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The section provides that when the first $300,000 is expended by the company, the Government shall loan $200,000. It seems to me that to carry out the purpose stated, the language of the first part of the section ought to be altered as to read, "that whenever said company shall have expended in and toward the construction of said canal the sum of $2,000,000, and shall deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury the certificate of the engineer aforesaid and the president of said company, duly verified by them on oath, stating that such sum last before named had been expended and paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith pay and deliver to the treasurer of said company, or to his order, $200,000 in the bonds aforesaid," and so on. Certainly the proviso is utterly inconsistent with the first provision of this section as it now stands; but it would carry out the object which I understand the committee have in view to insert "$2,000,000" in the third line of the section.

Mr. HOWE. Our idea was that the proviso covered and controlled the operation of the section; but I suggest that we pass over it for the present.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think the proviso had better be attached to section twenty, and then the change made in the twenty-first section suggested by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOWE. I propose to pass this amendment by for the present, and I ask Senators to look into it. We want to effect the object which I have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By common consent the proposed amendment to the twenty-first section will be passed over, and the next reported amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the next amendment, which was to strike out the twenty-third section, in the following words:

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That the tolls to be imposed upon vessels, rafts, and property passing said canal may be altered and revised once in every five years after the completion of said canal by five commissioners, one to be appointed by the President of the United States, one by each of the Governors of the States of New York, Massachusetts, and Illinois respectively, and the remaining one by the canal company. And if the said company, or any ten owners of vessels navigating said canal, shall at any time notify said commissioners in writing of their dissatisfaction with the tolls agreed upon by them, the said commissioners shall unite with three additional commissioners, to be appointed by the Governors of Maine, Wisconsin, and Michigan, and such new board of commissioners shall again revise and determine the rates of tolls to be imposed and collected upon vessels, lake craft, and property passing through said canal for the next five years thereafter: Provided, That said rates of toll may at any time be revised and regulated by Congress.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should be glad to know why it is proposed to strike out that section. I think it is a good one.

Mr. HOWE. It is a pretty good section in one point of view, and may not be so good in another. If you want to secure the lowest possible rate of tolls on this canal when it shall be built, and that is the only object you aim at, probably this section had better be retained. It was the idea of the committee, however, that it would have a tendency to discourage the building of the canal; that it would have a tendency to discourage capitalists from embarking their capital in it; that they would not be willing to put their capital (as this bill requires them to do to the amount of $2,000,000 before the Government advances a cent) into a work the profits of which were to be regulated by the Governors of different States in the Union. And it was thought by the committee that it was not necessary to retain this section, because they argued that the competition of other routes would of itself be probably sufficient to keep the tolls down to a fair rate; but if it should not prove sufficient to keep them down to a fair rate, the first consequence of an exorbitant rate would be that the Government would get its money back quicker, and the next consequence would be that the Government would see how advantageous it was to the public to own this canal, and therefore they would simply be invited by this high rate of tolls to come in and take it from the company. I ought to say in this connection that a general provision is proposed here authorizing Congress to amend and alter this act.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am afraid you could not do that in the matter of tolls.

Mr. HOWE. In section twenty-seven it is proposed that Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I used to have a good deal more faith in this matter of competition between corporate companies of this kind than I have now. In fact, instead of competition there has come to be combination to a very great extent. The companies doing business between particular points, which were intended to be brought into competition with each other, now make combinations with each other by which they keep up the rates of toll. We have a good many railroads running from Chicago into the State of Iowa, but instead of competition between them, there is combination, the result of which is to take from us the very last cent that our produce will bear in getting to market. I do not like to trust this matter in the future entirely to competition.

This section provides in substance that the tolls may be altered and revised once in every five years after the completion of the canal, by five commissioners, one to be appointed by the President of the United States, one by each of the Governors of the States of New York, Massachusetts, and Illinois, and the remaining one by the canal company. That is to be done every five years; and if the company or any ten owners of vessels navigating the canal shall notify the commissioners in writing of their dissatisfaction with the tolls agreed upon by them, these five commissioners are to unite with three additional commissioners, to be appointed by the Governors of the States of Maine, Wisconsin, and Michigan, and this new board is to again revise and determine the rates of toll; and then there is a proviso that the rates of toll may at any time be revised and regulated by Congress. If this section remains in the bill, the people will have some assurance that the money of the Government—which is to be put into this work to the extent of $6,000,000 upon the idea that it is to benefit the producing classes of this country and enable them to get their produce to market at less rates, and to benefit the consumer by allowing him to get our produce at less prices—the people will have some assurance that the money of the Government is to be used to produce these ends, and not be used for the purpose of placing in the hands of the corporators enormous profits. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to this provision now. I shall not ask for a division at this time, but when the bill comes into the Senate I shall ask for a separate vote on this amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for a division on the amendment.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 11, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Mr. SUMNER and Mr. HOWARD called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 7, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Edmunds, Foster, Howe, Morgan, Poland, and Pomeroy—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Doolittle, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Kirkwood, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Wilson, and Yates—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Williams, and Wright—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not take effect unless the Legislature of the State of New York shall within one year from the date hereof give its assent thereto.

Mr. HOWE. Before the vote is taken on that amendment I wish to move to amend it by striking out "one year" and inserting "two years."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. POMEROY. If they give their consent at all, they ought to give their consent before the work commences.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; they will of course. It does not take effect until they do consent, and does not take effect at all unless they give their consent within the time fixed.

Mr. POMEROY. Do you propose to legislate now and have nothing done for two years?

Mr. HOWE. This amendment proposes, if it is agreed to by the two Houses, that we shall do nothing until the State of New York assents. Whether the two Houses will agree to this amendment is a question to be considered.

Mr. POMEROY. If you want to defeat the measure you had better put in "any time within ten years," so as to put it off.

Mr. HOWE. One of the members of the committee, I understand, who feels a deep interest in the question involved in this amendment is not able to be in his seat to-day, and there are some circumstances which seem to me to make it improper that I should press the bill forward to a vote when he is absent; and I therefore ask that the further consideration of the bill may be postponed.

Mr. SHERMAN. With leave of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will move to take up another bill which I am very anxious to get rid of and have disposed of to-day if possible—the telegraph bill.

Mr. HOWE. Do I understand that the amendment which I proposed to this section is adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words "one year" have been stricken out and the words "two years" inserted by common consent.

Mr. HOWE. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill and to make it the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Say Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator alluded to may not be here to-morrow or on Monday; but by simply postponing the bill, it will be in the power of the Senator from Wisconsin to call it up at any time.

Mr. HOWE. I will modify my motion, and move that the bill be postponed until Monday at one o'clock and be made the special order for that hour.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that Mr. SAMUEL HOOPER, of Massachusetts, had been appointed one of the managers on the part of the House of Representatives at the conference upon the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and the acts amendatory thereof, in place of Mr. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, of Vermont, excused from service.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bills without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 56) granting a pension to Mary C. Hamilton;

A bill (S. No. 299) granting a pension to Jane E. Miles;

A bill (S. No. 368) granting a pension to Margaret A. Farran; and

A bill (S. No. 314) for the relief of Sarah J. Purcell.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 739) for the relief of Le-mantha Rader;

A bill (H. R. No. 740) for the relief of Matilda J. Monroe;

A bill (H. R. No. 741) granting pension to Jonathan W. Beach;

A bill (H. R. No. 742) for the relief of the minor children of Salvador Accadi, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 743) amendatory of an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of Edgar T. Harris.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 30) to create an additional land district in the State of Oregon;

A bill (S. No. 198) granting lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, in that State;

A bill (S. No. 219) granting certain lands in the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a ship-canal to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the lake known as Lac La Belle, in said State; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) for the relief of Joseph Parkins.

LINES OF TELEGRAPH.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to take up the bill which I have already indicated.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 357) to aid in the construction of telegraph lines, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. GRIMES to strike out in line three of section one the words "the National" and insert "any;" and in lines three, four, and five to strike out the words "a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, April 16, 1866," and insert "now organized, or which may hereafter be organized under the laws of any State in this Union;" so as to read:

That any telegraph company now organized, or which may hereafter be organized, under the laws of any State in this Union, shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which have been, or may hereafter be, declared such by act of Congress, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have submitted to the Senator from Iowa another amendment which accomplishes the same purpose precisely; but is in different form, and I suggest to him the propriety of withdrawing his amendment and letting the amendment which I have drawn be adopted in lieu of section four of the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I am content, at the instance of the Senator from Ohio, although I do not like his amendment as well as my original proposition, to withdraw the amendment I moved the other day, and allow the amendment to be adopted which he has sent to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is withdrawn. The Senator from Ohio now offers an amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN, which was to strike out the fourth section of the bill, and in lieu of it to insert the following:

That any other telegraph company organized under the laws of the United States or of any State, for the construction of telegraph lines in different States or Territories in the United States, may have and enjoy such rights and privileges as are hereby conferred, subject to the same restrictions, conditions, and obligations as by this act are imposed on said National Telegraph Company: Provided, That such other company shall first file with the Postmaster General its resolution, regularly passed and certified under its corporate seal and the hand of its president, accepting such rights and privileges on the terms herein expressed.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not like this amendment. I think it is a very objectionable one. It makes this bill one to grant a special charter, as originally proposed, to a particular company, and then makes it a general bill in that other companies may have like privileges thereafter, on certain terms.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill does not charter any company at all.

Mr. CONNESS. I will correct my expression in that respect. The bill proposes to confer privileges upon a company chartered by the State of New York, but the privileges proposed to be conferred by the bill are special, although by this amendment other companies may hereafter avail themselves of like privileges on conditions named. I think it better to relieve the bill from the complexion of being special in its character, and make it general at once.

Mr. SHERMAN. I really see no difference between the two, and I am, myself, indifferent as to which course is pursued; but the persons who are interested in this bill prefer that the bill should stand as it is, and then that the same general privileges should be conferred on any other company. If, however, Senators desire to have the bill stand in the form proposed by the Senator from Iowa, I have no special objection.

Mr. CONNESS. I think that is preferable, for this reason, if for no other: it will then be relieved of a general objection which the President has communicated to us that he has against special legislation. I do not mean to say, by any means, that our legislation should be conformed to previously expressed opinions of the President; but when we can accomplish the same result in another manner, I think we should avoid running counter to those expressed opinions, and I must say that in the main I agree with him in those opinions.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is this difficulty that occurred to me and to those interested in the bill, that the other companies may come in and claim the benefits of this bill without filing their formal acceptance of the bill so as to place themselves under the restrictions contained in it.

Mr. CONNESS. I would require them to do that.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely what my amendment does, and that is the only difference between the two propositions. My amendment requires the new companies who come in and seek to avail themselves of the provisions of this bill to accept the terms and conditions it imposes; that is, to allow the Postmaster General to fix the rates of conveying Government dispatches, &c. If the Senator from Iowa will modify his amendment in such a way as to embrace that idea, I shall have not the slightest objection to it.

Mr. CONNESS. I think that would be a great improvement.

Mr. GRIMES. That could be done in a separate section. I understand the objection that the Senator from California raises to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is, that the Congress of the United States, by the bill, indorses and stands sponsor for some telegraph company created by the laws of the State of New York. He prefers, and so do I, that Congress should authorize, without specifying any particular telegraph company, any company, whether created by the laws of the State of New York or of Illinois, to build a telegraph line wherever they choose to build one.

Mr. CONNESS. And under all the privileges we can extend to them.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir; so far as we have any authority to bestow any privileges upon them. The rights they may derive under our legislation is a question for them to have settled by subsequent judicial decision. Whether they have any rights under it or not is another question.

Mr. SHERMAN. As Senators seem to prefer that course I will withdraw my amendment and allow the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to be acted upon, and I will endeavor to frame a section to meet the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio is withdrawn.

Mr. GRIMES. I now renew my amendment.

Mr. NYE. I should like to hear the Secretary read the section as it will be if amended.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

That any telegraph company now organized or which may hereafter be organized under the laws of any State in this Union shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, &c.

Mr. NYE. I would like to inquire of the honorable Senator who has the bill in charge what the particular object of this class of legislation is with regard to telegraphs. From reading the bill I am unable to determine.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill on its face is very clear and definite on that point. The bill, as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Iowa, will give to all telegraph companies organized under any State law the right to cross navigable rivers, to go wherever the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, to cross over the public lands, and to build telegraph lines along the postal routes of the United States. Now, there is not, as I said the other day—and I have looked at the legislation since—a single privilege conferred by this bill that has not been already conferred upon existing telegraph companies; and the purpose is to enable new companies that may be organized by any of the States or by the United States to enter into a fair competition with one existing monopoly which now controls the telegraphing of the United States. There is nothing more nor less in this bill. It may be doubted whether the privileges here granted will be sufficient to enable new companies to enter into competition, but so far as the powers conferred by this bill are concerned, they are not new, and indeed the monopoly which now includes the Pacific telegraph has a bounty from the United States of $40,000 a year besides.

Mr. NYE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio when this company was organized in New York—the National Telegraph Company, so called.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now "the National Telegraph Company" is stricken out, and this bill applies to all companies.

Mr. NYE. I understand that the object is to help that company.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was undoubtedly the object of this bill, to aid that company.

Mr. NYE. When was that company formed?

Mr. SHERMAN. Very recently.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I think this kind of legislation is uncalled for; and I do not see what possible benefit it can be to existing or non-existing companies that may exist hereafter if it is passed. The whole system of telegraphing has grown up within my recollection; first there was a single wire on one line, then double wires; then other companies were authorized to carry on the same business, and all for the purpose of opening up the great good of competition, and, sir, what has been the result of it all? There is not a telegraph company existing now on this continent that stands independent and alone by itself, unless it be some small work of minor importance. The lines form one great combination from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and it seems that the more of them that are created enlarge and swell the powers of this organization.

Now, sir, I undertake to say that the real object of the formation of this National Telegraph Company in the State of New York was but to compel the existing company to purchase their franchise and keep them out of this field of competition.

Mr. BROWN. There is a provision in the bill that it shall not be sold.

Mr. NYE. I understand that there is a provision in the bill that it shall not be sold without the consent of Congress; and my friend from Missouri will pardon me when I say that I think the consent to sell would be as easily obtained as the consent to create. Sir, what is true of the past will be true of the future, and the great consolidation of these telegraph companies has been formed now within a very few days from the Atlantic to the Pacific. An independent company was started not long since for telegraphing to the Pacific ocean. When it reached the boundaries of the State of Nevada it was stopped by an injunction by the old company. What is the result? A trial? No, but a purchase of the new company by the old; and you may create to-day as many franchises to telegraph to the Pacific as you choose, but there will be no more telegraphs built to the Pacific ocean, and why? Because the facilities now opened up are adequate and equal to all the necessities of that coast.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not believe that.

Mr. NYE. My friend says he does not believe it.

Mr. BROWN. I know it is not so.

Mr. NYE. It is difficult to argue against the belief of my pertinacious friend, and the entire knowledge of my more quiet friend. But, sir, notwithstanding, I shall venture upon it. It is quite likely that when the northern route shall be opened up there will be a line of telegraph upon that. The Senate will bear in mind that every railroad that is authorized to be constructed to the Pacific coast is by its charter compelled to build along with it an independent line of telegraph, or to make arrangements to use the other line, so that the telegraph shall go with the railroad, and that the cars may be run by telegraph if necessary.

I think the object of all this is to give this National Telegraph Company the right to sell out, and to compel the existing monopoly to become more monopolizing in its influences by adding to its prices what it has to pay these other companies to secure their franchises. There is no obligation in this bill on this company to construct a telegraph anywhere. They do not propose to construct a line of telegraph to any place. The bill does not make it their duty to construct one single rod of telegraph; but it is an open permission to them, that whenever they desire it in the present or the future they shall have this privilege.

Sir, I never have believed, and I do not now believe, that the assent of Congress to the putting up of a telegraph line through any State or across any river is at all essential or important. This company is a corporation created by the State of New York, and the distinguished Senator from Ohio who fathers this bill must be aware that the Supreme Court of this nation have held over and over again that a corporation created in one State has a right by the comity of States to perform its functions in other States. It was so decided in the celebrated coal cases of Pennsylvania and Maryland. There is no necessity for the legislation here proposed in that respect but to give additional sanctity to it by giving it the indorsement of Congress so as to enable this company or any other—but there is no other, probably, that will try it—to sell out its franchise. The project that was started for a new Pacific Telegraph Company has answered the end designed; and I entertain no doubt that they were privy to that injunction in Nevada. They had got far enough to give evidence that they were going to build the line; and when that was made evident what was the result? A combination of both companies; the concentration of all the telegraph interests; and I repeat, you may authorize a dozen more and you will never get another line of telegraph, except what are built as the country increases in importance across, until you get your Northern Pacific railroad through.

Now, Mr. President, if there was any necessity for this bill I would not object to it; but there is none. The men who live upon the Pacific coast and reside here six or seven months in the year are burdened already as great as they can bear, without the additional purchase of any other telegraph line. There is nothing in this bill. It is simply prospective in its character, for an ideal company that may be hereafter organized, or one that now exists. The National Telegraph Company that ask to do this have not a rod of telegraph anywhere, and they never will have one. It is simply an effort, I repeat—I am glad that my friend from Iowa has knocked that feature out of the bill—to get an indorsement of a New York charter by Congress to make the existing companies buy them out. I do not propose, for one, to be a party to any such speculation. It will be time enough to legislate for additional telegraphs when companies really propose to build them.

Mr. CONNESS. The position of my good-natured friend from Nevada, as I understand it, is this: in the first place, that the present company is a monopoly of such a character that we never can get any other line but it; that no matter how many we create by legislation, the existing monopoly will buy them out, and therefore it is useless to provide for creating any others, for this mammoth corporation will immediately include them; as my honorable friend from Massachusetts would express it, in another connection, the principle of inclusion will occur and be rendered practical. The next position of the Senator from Nevada is, that the present monopoly furnishes facilities enough. I understood him to say that distinctly. I submit that those propositions are inconsistent with each other. First, he declares that the existing monopoly is sufficient to destroy all other companies and imposes so many burdens on us that we can bear no more, but to induce the establishment of another line will only result in the monopoly buying up that other line, and we shall be taxed for that additional purchase-money in the cost of dispatches.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have provided against that purchase.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand that. I have not come to that part of the bill.

Mr. NYE. Will my honorable friend allow me to ask him where this telegraph is proposed to be built?

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator, I think, does not understand the scope of the amendment of the honorable Senator from Iowa. If the amendment now pending be adopted, this bill, so far as we can authorize it, authorizes the formation of companies everywhere or anywhere, and confers all the powers and privileges that an act of Congress can confer, for carrying on the telegraph business. For that reason I am in favor of it; and I confess that I cannot understand the consistency of the honorable Senator's argument.

Mr. NYE. Will you allow me to explain?

Mr. CONNESS. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. My point is this: that every kiting charter like this one—I speak of the National Telegraph Company as an illustration—that has not a rod of telegraph, that procures its charter for the mere purpose, of selling it out, with no intention to build, increases the tax upon every one of us that has to use that telegraph, for this additional purchase is counted in as the cost of the line, and we have to support it with its additional cost. I hope the Senator will understand that. It is like adding freight to the purchase of goods. That is just what it is; it all constitutes the cost.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to read in this connection the names of some of the men who are engaged in this business, to show that they are not men of straw. I should like to show the character of the men who have been denounced by the Senator from Nevada as undertaking this as a speculation. I have had a list furnished to me of the men who are engaged in this enterprise. The first is Frederick Prentiss, who is estimated to be worth $4,000,000.

Mr. NYE. And he will be worth another million dollars by the sale of this telegraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then there is Mr. Holladay, who is running the overland express across the continent. I have a list here of men from all the different States engaged in this business, who are going into it as a matter of fair and legitimate competition, showing that they are men of the very highest character, many of them the leading merchants of Boston, Philadelphia, and New York. I will state further that this bill contains an express provision that they shall not sell out their franchise.

Mr. NYE. Unless with the consent of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. They can do it by consent of Congress; but that is avoided entirely by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which now makes the privilege general; so that if they do sell out any other company can step in and enter into this competition. The truth is, that it is a matter of absolute necessity to provide for some competition with the existing company. Mr. Holladay, who is running this overland route, cannot build a telegraph wire along the line of his route without the assent of Congress, because it goes through three Territories and two States, and he is liable to be stopped at any moment by a rival company. He cannot cross a navigable stream. All these new companies have arrayed against them, not only the present powerful corporation with a capital of $50,000,000, but they have arrayed against them the grants made by repeated acts of Congress to this company; because this company now represents not only $50,000,000 of capital, but all the powers that have been given since the organization of telegraphing to the various companies that are now combined in one.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Senator allow me to inquire what grants have been made by Congress to telegraph companies?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a list of them here. There is quite a number of them. From 1846 up to this time there have been several acts of Congress granting powers to different telegraph companies, all of which are now absorbed in this one company.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir; granting powers undoubtedly; but where is the statute granting them public lands?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have it before me; it is familiar to every Senator here. We gave to one of them $40,000 a year for ten years, and we gave them a quarter section of land for every station; and this one company now owns all these vast powers. We gave them a quarter section for every station of fifteen miles. My friend from California knows more about that than I do.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator refers to the overland route.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; but they are all now absorbed into one company.

Mr. CONNESS. And the State of California gave the same company $6,000 a year for ten years.

Mr. SHERMAN. All that this bill does is to give by a general law, to all the companies that may be organized for the purpose of competing with this monopoly, a very small moiety of the privileges conferred on and already exercised by that company. This proposition was not originally the one upon which the select committee of the Senate raised to consider the subject desired to act. They proposed, in the first place, to authorize the Postmaster General to contract for the telegraphing of the United States; but the Postmaster General thought that at present the measure would be too expensive; and we therefore introduced this bill simply to beget competition, knowing that it could do no harm. The Government gives up nothing, but, on the other hand, retains important advantages and privileges; among the rest, the right in the Postmaster General to fix the price to be paid by the Government for all dispatches sent by Government officers. I may state now that in the miscellaneous expenses of the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars are now paid to this existing monopoly for telegraphic dispatches by all the various officers of the Government. This bill provides that for all messages sent by the Government, or by any officer of the Government, or to any officer of the Government, the Postmaster General shall have the right to prescribe the rates. Now those rates are regulated by the company. In every view, therefore, this bill, if it is ever acted upon, will be for the benefit of the Government. The only doubt I have is, whether by the privileges conferred by the bill, the new companies can compete with the old one. If they break down in the effort, it is not our loss; if they succeed, by the very act of competition and by their very success, they will necessarily reduce prices. Further, we save to ourselves the right at any time to step in and assume these telegraph lines. I beg pardon for interfering with my friend from California.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator occupies the floor always with more profit to the Senate than I do.

The argument of my honorable friend from Nevada sounds to me very much like that of a Senator who was opposed to any competition, although that is not asserted by him. He assures us with great confidence that there can be no competition; that we may provide for organizing, or encouraging the organization of as many lines as we please, and yet the present monopoly will include them all, and therefore we should do nothing of that kind. I submit, while I have no doubt that it is not so, that if the present monopoly desired an argument made in the Senate in their favor, the Senator has made just such a one as they would choose to make. I cannot conceive how a Senator from the Pacific coast, at least, should not be in favor of any and every provision that proposed to encourage the establishment of rival lines. There is no tax so burdensome upon us at the present time as the tax imposed by the telegraph monopoly. Not only is it a monopoly in point of the charges that are imposed, but, as we happen to know, it is a monopoly in other respects of far more consequence and importance. They are enabled to control the commercial transactions of both sides of the continent by their control over a single line of telegraph. I know of an instance that came to my knowledge, while we were sitting here during the past winter, of a land case decided in the Supreme Court, in an adjoining chamber in this building; and the decision was no sooner known to be rendered than the telegraph was seized and made use of by men engaged in its ownership to carry out a great speculation on the Pacific coast before the result of that decision should be known.

Mr. NYE. My friend will allow me to ask him whether the number of telegraphs will lessen that opportunity.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to inquire of the Senator from California whether that telegraph dispatch was sent in anticipation of its regular order?

Mr. CONNESS. Certainly.

Mr. GRIMES. Then I trust the Senator will at once introduce a bill to take away the gratuity we have agreed to bestow on that telegraph company.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I shall first address myself to the inquiry of the honorable Senator from Nevada. He inquires, shall we not be subject to like acts if competition be created? I do not mean to say anything to the contrary of the proposition that a noble man cannot do an ignoble act, and that an ignoble man cannot but by chance do a noble act; and therefore, whether we have one or more lines, if they are in the control of bad men, they will be badly controlled and directed; but, sir, the chances of the public, in all respects, for fair dealing, are increased by the establishment of rival lines. The Senator need not be told that, for he very well understands it.

I am not a little surprised that there should be any opposition, particularly from our coast, as we familiarly speak of it, to a bill which now proposes to offer all that the national authority can give in the way of inducement for the establishment of rival lines. The great difficulty that the Pacific coast labors under constantly, notwithstanding its many great natural advantages, is, that it is on the other side of a great continent, while the Government is principally on this side, and therefore the wants of that distant country can never be known or understood fully here. This great means of intercommunication, instantaneous in its character, is provided; but, unfortunately, by the love of gain established as a principle in the human mind, it consolidates itself and becomes a monopoly. To-day we are asked to vote with the Senator from Ohio to offer inducements for liberalizing this great agency and inducing the establishment of rival lines. I do not think there can be any objection urged successfully against the project. The bill is no longer an act to authorize the National Telegraph Company to do anything. Its title must necessarily be changed after the adoption of the pending amendment, and it must be called an act to grant to all parties who may choose to organize themselves under the laws of the States of the Union the right to build telegraph lines over the post roads of the United States. I hope, sir, that we shall have such an act.

Mr. NYE. I am not to be charged by the Senator from California—

Mr. CONNESS. I did not charge the Senator.

Mr. NYE. With any want of kindly feeling toward the Pacific coast equal to his own. I have been connected with that coast as he has. My object is not what the honorable Senator presumes it to be, by any means. My object is to lighten the burdens from off the shoulders of the people of the Pacific coast. They are already as great as they can bear. I repeat, the experience of the past proves that every corporation that has been organized and gotten up with a view of breaking down this monopoly and combination has but increased the power of this combination and this monopoly. Does the Senator need to be told that millions when invested must pay interest in some way? And how is it to be paid? It is to be paid by the persons who use the facilities offered. Is there any proposition contained in the bill presented here by the Senator from Ohio to build a rod of telegraph anywhere? Is there any proposition to build a telegraph to the Pacific coast? If so, I shall be happy to aid in its construction, and to throw around it all the guards that Congress has the power to throw around it, in order that the newly constructed line to the Pacific coast may not become a monopoly like the other. But, sir, that is not the proposition. My honorable friend from Ohio has read me some of the names to show how wealthy the men are who are engaged in this enterprise. Sir, that is the way they have made themselves rich. Instead of Mr. Prentiss being worth four millions, authorize the National Telegraph Company to build a line as this bill first proposed and he will be worth five millions to-morrow. Who has got to pay the additional million? It is the honorable Senator from California and myself and every one who uses the telegraph.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator will permit me, I know, to say a word right here. The Senator persists in fighting what is not before us, the bill to establish the National Telegraph Company and enfranchise it. The question before the Senate now, and that I have endeavored to address myself to, is a bill to enable all companies whatever to build telegraph lines over the post routes of the United States. That is my answer to the Senator.

Mr. NYE. This thing started, at least, in substance, and now my friend says it is a shadow. It is spread so thin that you cannot see it. [Laughter.] I know that this bill never would have been born if it had not been for that National Telegraph Company of New York. They have not got an inch of wire, nor a post, nor a place to put a post; but they hold an act of incorporation created in New York; they want to get a congressional indorsement; and then what? Then to go to this existing company and say, "Gentlemen, we are now going to construct a new telegraph to the Pacific; what will you give us if we do not do it?" The reply will be, "Let us have no rivalry; we will buy you out; we will increase the stock of our company $1,000,000, and that shall be yours."

Mr. SHERMAN. We make the bill so that they cannot buy it.

Mr. NYE. Nonsense! Tell me what cannot be done by the consent of Congress and I will show you a white blackbird. [Laughter.] That is the way this monopoly is to be broken down by the honorable Senator from California. I have no doubt his intentions are good, but his reasoning entirely fails to convince me. Sir, I have seen the various companies started from the day the first telegraph wire was stretched from this city to Baltimore; I have lived to see every inch of telegraph in this country laid; and where now are your independent companies? All together; all consolidated; the United States, and the Union, the Pacific, and all these numberless companies are all one company, with one set of directors; and, sir, make your National Telegraph Company which this bill was intended to brace up, to give it power to walk, and that will be under the same set of directors to-morrow. How? By increasing the stock of the old monopoly to pay for it, and then we shall have to pay an additional price for telegraphing.

Now, my friend from California has a startling case of fraud upon a land grant in California. I repeat the question, suppose there were a dozen lines to California, would that lessen or increase the facilities for cheating?

Mr. CONNESS. No; but as I understand the honorable Senator, he is entirely willing to sleep and lie contentedly under the present order of things.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, that shows either how obtuse I am or the Senator from California is. I have repeated over and over again that I desire the same object that he does, to lighten the burdens of the persons who have to use the telegraph, but the modus operandi by which he would cheapen it has, by the logic and the history of the past, been shown to increase the burden every time it has been attempted.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator at this point.

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I ask the Senator if I am to understand him to believe that no means possible remain to excite competition or rivalry in the telegraphing business in the United States?

Mr. NYE. Not at all.

Mr. CONNESS. Then we understand the Senator.

Mr. NYE. You do not understand me if you echo that. I will try again to make the Senator from California understand me, and if he does not, it will not be my fault. There is a way to do it: to authorize the construction of a telegraph line from New York to the Pacific ocean, and say that they shall not receive over so much a word for telegraphing, cutting it down one half; and if the Senator from Ohio will so frame his bill as to authorize the National Telegraph Company to construct a line to the Pacific coast and carry messages for one half the price now charged, I will vote for it. That is the way to do it. The Senator from California remembers the old story of the fox covered all over with flies as thick as they could stick. A kindly friend came along and asked permission to drive them away. "For God's sake do not do that," was the reply, "for if you do a more hungry swarm will come." [Laughter.] That is what I am afraid of here. It is of this new hungry swarm that is coming, with no restrictions upon them, to increase rather than diminish the price of telegraphing from here to the Pacific coast, or from here to Baltimore. The old swarm have got fat; do not drive them away and let a leaner class come in.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to inquire of the Senator how the limiting of this company to one half the present price per message would prevent them from being bought up by the old company. And yet the Senator says he would vote for that, but would not vote for the other.

Mr. NYE. No; you have not understood me. I would not vote for it unless it was made a positive fact, without the consent of Congress, that they should not sell out.

Mr. BROWN. You said that could not be done.

Mr. NYE. No; I have not said that.

Mr. BROWN. That is in this bill.

Mr. NYE. No; it is not. This is "without the consent of Congress."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada if he has the least notion that Congress can take away from a corporation organized by State law the power to dispose of its franchise according to that State law.

Mr. NYE. I was just coming to that point. All that Congress would have the right to do would be to say that across these navigable streams they should not sell their wire; but in the State of Missouri, where my ardent friend for this measure resides—

Mr. BROWN. The Senator misrepresents me; I am not an ardent friend of this measure at all.

Mr. NYE. You were the friend of a better measure.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NYE. All right; I am glad of it. But take the State of Missouri, across which this new line, if the National Company had not been knocked out of the bill, would go; and do you suppose that Congress has any right to say that across the State of Missouri this company shall not sell their line of telegraph? I do not suppose that they have any such right.

But, sir, my objection to this measure is, that it is legislating for a phantom. As the thing now stands, there is no corporation and no company that proposes to build a line anywhere; and this legislation is in anticipation of what may occur. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." We have got pressing business enough to engage our immediate attention, and which should command it, without legislating upon ideal cases that may hereafter exist.

I have said all I desire to say on this question. It is legislating at a shadow and for a shadow, and the result will be nothing. Its inception was to bolster up the National Telegraph Company. That is dead already in the progress of this bill.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator reasons in a circle. That is the objection.

Mr. NYE. It might or might not improve the Senator to get within the circle. [Laughter.] I do not propose to discuss that. It is spending day after day to legislate upon something that may come up hereafter. Now, sir, I would sooner undertake to legislate—and with this remark I have done—to cut down the rates, to so regulate the subsidy to that overland telegraph company as to cheapen the rates. My friend from Ohio is quite a stickler for State rights, occasionally, and for vested rights, and I should like to inquire of him whether there are any vested rights in this old line.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we can hardly say that they shall not charge more than so many dollars or cents a message. I wish we could.

Mr. NYE. Why not?

Mr. SHERMAN. If we had the power to say that this old monopoly should not charge more than, say a dollar for every ten words, I should think then there was no necessity for this legislation; but I do not think we can do that.

Mr. NYE. I do not see why not. If the Government was a party to the contract in building it—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In the law which was passed in relation to the overland telegraph line to California there was a provision limiting the amount which the company should charge for a message.

Mr. SHERMAN. For the Government.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No; to any person. A message of a given number of words.

Mr. SHERMAN. You are mistaken.

Mr. NYE. I had no recollection about the law, and sent for it. I have it here, but have not had time to examine it; but I know from what is calculated to make a more lasting impression than the reading of the section of the statute—from practice and habit—that it costs $7 50 to send ten words—

Mr. CONNESS. Seven dollars and eighty cents.

Mr. NYE. Seven dollars and eighty cents to send ten words from San Francisco to New York or Washington; and from Carson City, where I reside, the price is the same, although that is three hundred miles nearer. Now, sir, if the Senator from Ohio, with his acute legal mind, will set himself to work to control the prices upon these old lines, he will do his country a substantial service; but I repeat, in my judgment, he never can effect it by this bill for a line which only exists in fancy, the purchase of which will increase the capital of the present monopoly, and every time the capital is increased the price for telegraphing is increased.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, all the telegraph companies of the country have combined, and have formed a most oppressive monopoly. They have now their rights and their charters. It is very clear that there is no power in Congress to reduce their prices. All the companies which have obtained special privileges from Congress have been bought up or consolidated, thus creating a vast monopoly, which is acknowledged to be oppressive. The simple question is, is there any remedy, and if so, what? To reduce the charges every lawyer knows is impossible. They have their contract and their vested rights. The question is, is there any remedy for high prices against a monopoly? I believe but one remedy has ever been discovered for such a case; and that remedy is competition. The only way to reduce fares upon railroads is to build more railroads. The only way to reduce the charges of telegraph companies is to build more telegraph lines.

No more telegraphs can be built across the public domain unless we grant privileges in some way. If we grant special privileges to particular companies they will sell out, as they have done before, and become a part of a monopoly. If we grant these privileges to whomsoever will build a line, and these gentlemen in New York organize a company, there will be no great object in buying them out; because if they were bought out somebody would organize another company the next day, and so on. So long as you grant special privileges, so long will they continue to buy them out; but if it is free to all the world to build telegraph lines, and the present arrangement is a monopoly charging high prices, the enterprise of the American people will devise a remedy. The commercial interests of the country, the men who are oppressed by it, will constantly combine to make other lines. There would be no use in buying them out, because another combination could be formed the next day. The business community throughout the entire country is interested in the question. I believe in competition. There can be no other remedy devised but building other telegraph lines. There is no other way to prevent these companies from selling out, except by conferring the privilege on all who choose to do so to build these lines. Suppose we had the power, and should grant a special privilege to a company to navigate the ocean between here and England. You might grant the same privilege to a hundred different corporations by name, and they would soon be swallowed into one and become a vast monopoly; but while the ocean remains free companies are constantly organized and competition exists.

I say that the privileges that this Government can grant to corporations for the purpose of telegraphing, for the purpose of conveying information, should be as free as the air to competition. Your American Company sold out to your Pacific Company. They would not have bought the American Company if it had not had special privileges, because otherwise another company could have been formed the next day. If we can open the door and make this free, there are commercial interests enough to build the necessary lines of telegraph, and the evil will then cure of itself. It is not true, if we are to be governed by the history of these transactions, that the monopoly will still grow more and more oppressive. It will reduce its charges in view of the fact that exorbitant charges increase the liability of the organization of new companies. Pass this bill, and the charges of this monopoly will be reduced to-morrow; or if they remain as they are, the business men of New York, Boston, and every other city will unite to build opposition lines. The very fact that you pass this bill, making this business free, granting no exclusive monopoly to one company, will induce the reduction of the present charges. If the charges remain as they are the people will build more telegraph lines. I believe the mere fact of passing this bill will do good and reduce the charges. If they intend to retain their present monopoly, it must be a reasonable monopoly, and they must be reasonable in their charges, because if this company continues to oppress the business community that business community has the wealth and enterprise to build more lines.

I would not vote for a special privilege to a company of this sort. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. I think this bill would be of very little use without an amendment to make it free to all; because I believe that if we organized a single company for this purpose, it would sell out to the present monopoly, and thus add probably to the cost of transmitting dispatches. You might grant this privilege to an individual company every year, and still they would sell out before the next year, and probably make money, and the result would be to increase the burdens of the country; but if it is free to all, and we keep it free to all, the laws of trade, and the laws that govern competition, will bring telegraphing within reasonable rates, and that within a reasonable time. The interests at stake in this matter are too vast, too important, to allow them to be at the mercy of a single corporation.

Mr. HOWARD. I cannot vote for this bill as I understand it. I understand that the National Telegraph Company is a private corporation created within the past few weeks by the Legislature of the State of New York. It is not pretended that the company have taken a single step toward establishing a line of telegraph anywhere within the United States. All they have is the parchment charter granted by the State of New York under the great seal of the State; and at present that is their only corporate property, if I am not misinformed. They have not bought a pound of wire, nor a post, nor a spade, nor employed a single agent or laborer to commence work anywhere within the wide world. The bill itself does not designate any place where the contemplated line of telegraph shall commence or where it shall end; and for aught that appears in the bill, the company, when it shall have received the benefits contemplated by the bill, may at once, by the consent of Congress, sell them out to the present monopoly, and that monopoly will acquire the right to construct another line of telegraph lying right along-side of the one which they now occupy and use; or they may construct a line somewhere else; but if they should become the purchasers they would probably be shrewd enough to understand that their right is to construct another line of telegraph side by side with the one which they now own and use; and in doing this they would have the right to take all the material they should find necessary for its construction and growing or being upon the public domain of the United States, where their line should happen to be. They are authorized, in the language of the bill, to preempt a quarter section of land, that is, one hundred and sixty acres, at each and every one of their stations. The number of their stations is not given; the distance which they are to be from one to another is not provided for, and for aught that appears in this bill, the corporation would have a right to preempt a series of one hundred and sixty acre lots wherever they could find them lying along in a range or in a row touching upon one another. They have a right to put a station at every mile or every half mile on their entire route, and to enter upon and occupy and use this public land as their own, in fee-simple, clear across the continent, without let or hindrance. That is the effect of the bill, whether we treat the bill as being for the benefit of the National Telegraph Company, or of some other company, with or without a name.

What I object to particularly in this bill is its entire looseness, its generality. It fixes no beginning and no terminus to the line which is in contemplation; and it is just as easy for the present monopoly to purchase it and to unite it and consolidate it with the existing line, and thus unite the two interests, as it is to pass this bill through Congress. All this may be done, and easily done, without removing in the slightest degree the oppression under which the commercial community is now laboring arising from the high price of telegraphing. I must confess that the bill looks to me like an undisguised attempt on the part of this new company, that owns not a dollar of corporate property, to acquire important and valuable rights and valuable lands belonging to the United States merely for the purpose of selling out its charter to some other company, and making a large profit out of the operation. Why not fix the line? Why not say to this company, "If you accept the land and the other privileges granted by the bill commence your line at such a place, run upon such a parallel of latitude toward the Pacific coast, and terminate it at such a place; if you will do this, we will grant you these privileges; if you will not, we withhold them?" That would be to institute a competition, as it seems to me, between the existing monopoly and the corporation about which we are speaking. As the bill now stands, whether it be amended or not according to the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Iowa, granting this so-called privilege to any and all companies, I cannot vote for it, for I do not think that amendment makes any difference whatever, or in any degree removes the objectionable features from the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not so well satisfied with this bill as I was before it was amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment is still pending.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I supposed that the amendment had been adopted. I am advised that it has not been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CLARK in the chair.) The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am satisfied with the bill as it now stands, and prefer it without the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa; but if that amendment be adopted, as I presume it will be, I shall still vote for this bill, and hope it will pass. I think that this bill, or some such bill, is necessary for the transaction of the business between the Pacific coast and the Atlantic States. I think that the present line of telegraph is not sufficient to do the business that the people require to be done, and that the construction of other lines is necessary for commercial purposes, and that their construction will not only promote the commercial interests of the country, but they are necessary for the protection of the people. Persons living on the other side of the continent who have occasion to send messages by telegraph know something about the burdens imposed upon the people by the present company. It costs ten dollars in gold to send a telegraphic dispatch of any kind or description from the city of Portland to Washington; and I suppose that the prices correspond between Washington and the intermediate points. I think that some means should be devised to reduce this imposition and burden upon the people, and this bill tends in that direction. It may not accomplish all the purposes that the people desire to have accomplished, but it certainly will have some effect in assisting another company or other companies to establish a line in competition with the present line of telegraph across the continent.

Now, sir, the Congress of the United States, as I understand, has given its countenance and support to one company. Is there any reason why Congress, if it desires to be fair and just in this matter, should not give its countenance and support to other companies? Why should one company claim the exclusive right to enjoy the favors of the Government as the present company does at this time? I think that the passage of this bill will assist other companies in the construction of telegraph lines across the continent; and the objections that are made to this bill seem to me to have very little weight. If a corporation was to be organized without any restrictions, the probability is that the present company would purchase that company, purchase out its rights, its privileges, or its charter, and so destroy all competition. But there must be some way, it seems to me, by which competition can be established; and if there is any way, the most feasible way would seem to be by an act of Congress organizing a company or companies to construct another line, and forbidding that line from transferring its rights or privileges to the company now in existence. If that remedy fails, then, according to the argument that has been submitted, it seems to me that there is no remedy, and the entire country must forever submit to the burdens imposed upon it by the existing monopoly.

The present company has been characterized by all that have spoken on the subject as a very great monopoly. If it be such, it seems to me it is the duty of Congress to take some steps to destroy that monopoly, or, at any rate, to alleviate its burdens upon the people. The objection that the companies organized under this act may sell out, seems to me to be an objection that ought not to prevail here. In the first place, Congress is constantly organizing corporations that have no railroads, no telegraphs; that have not engaged in the business for which they were organized. The argument is, that because some particular corporation in the State of New York, which was named in the original bill, is not engaged in the business of telegraphing at this time, therefore no additional powers or privileges should be extended to it. That argument would defeat every bill that is proposed in Congress for the organization of a corporation to construct a railroad across the continent, or for any other purpose; because Congress is constantly organizing companies that have not engaged in this kind of business.

Mr. NYE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. Were you a member of the select committee on this subject?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir.

Mr. NYE. There has never been in the annals of our legislation so sweeping a corporation as this, to construct a line of telegraph everywhere, wherever they please, and at every station they are to get lands. There never was, in my judgment, such a corporation as this formed. If gentlemen are afraid of a monopoly let them look at the title of this bill. I wish to make this inquiry of the Senator: if this bill passes, will it authorize the National Telegraph Company to construct telegraphs in the United States wherever they have a mind to do so?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me ask the honorable Senator, where is the objection to allowing telegraph companies to extend their telegraph lines anywhere in the United States? Would you not like to have them extended to every man's homestead if it could be done? Why not? Then my friend must remember another thing, the National Telegraph Company is stricken out of the bill, and any company, he himself, may embark in the business.

Mr. NYE. Then of course this bill, if it passes at all, will consist simply of a single section, saying that any telegraph company existing, or that may hereafter exist, may run a telegraph in the territory of the United States anywhere, and get this land.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the general privilege. Any telegraph company organized in a State may run the wires anywhere along the post routes. They may take them to every man's door, if they choose, if it will pay.

Mr. NYE. The title of the bill is "to incorporate the National Telegraph Company."

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has not got the bill at all. He has got some other bill. That is the bill that was sent to us.

Mr. NYE. That is the bill I have.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought the Senator was talking about something that was not before us. This is "a bill to aid in the construction of telegraph lines."

Mr. NYE. The bill that I have is a bill reported by you from the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not report any such bill. The title of the bill that I reported is, "A bill to aid in the construction of telegraph lines, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes."

Mr. NYE. Look above that. "In the Senate of the United States, June 7, 1866. Mr. SHERMAN, from the select committee on incorporating a National Telegraph Company, reported the following bill, which was read and passed to a second reading. A bill to aid," &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true. The bill sent to the committee was to organize a particular company; but we laid that aside and reported this bill for general purposes.

Mr. NYE. That is what I want to know. Three hundred and fifty-seven is the number of my bill. What is the number of yours?

Mr. SHERMAN. The same.

Mr. NYE. Then I guess I am right about it. It is a child of your begetting, and I am a little surprised that the Senator should disown it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill referred to is not the bill that we reported back.

Mr. NYE. This is your bantling, and is stamped as yours.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. That bill was referred to the special committee of which I was chairman, and we reported back another bill. The Senator has been talking about a bill that is not before us.

Mr. NYE. Not at all. I have got the same number, and it purports on its face to come from you, as a member of the select committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not particular as to the form of the bill. I am prepared to go for any bill that appears to me to be constitutional, and as this bill is the only one that has been submitted, I am willing to take it, either in its original form or as the Senator from Iowa proposes to amend it. I am in favor of any bill that will strike at the existing monopoly in telegraphing in this country, for I think it is necessary that some effort should be made on the part of Congress to put down this monopoly and to protect the interests of the people.

There are only two objections made that I have heard to this bill: one was stated by the Senator from Michigan, and the other by the Senator from Nevada. The objection made by the Senator from Michigan is, that the company named in the original bill has not yet engaged in the business of telegraphing, and therefore this bill ought not to pass; as though Congress could pass no bill authorizing any company to construct telegraphs across the continent unless that company at the time the bill was passed was engaged in that business. In answer to that objection, I have to say, in the first place, that it is evident to my mind that this will not be the end of this project, from the fact that men of capital, men of enterprise, and men of energy are taking hold of this business, and because it has become obvious to the whole country that another telegraph line across the continent is necessary and will be profitable to those who invest their capital in that enterprise.

Mr. HOWARD. Allow me to call the honorable Senator's attention to the last clause of the first section of Senate bill No. 357, which, I believe, is the one under discussion, in which it is said that the company "may preëempt and use such portion of the unoccupied public domain through which its said lines of telegraph may be located as may be necessary for its stations, not exceeding one quarter section for each station." Who is to judge of the necessity of taking land? Plainly, the company. What then is to hinder these companies or all of them from squatting upon every foot of the public domain belonging to the United States, whether lying within the limits of a State or within the Territories? If they see fit to multiply themselves so as to become an uncounted number of squatters, they can take the entire public domain of the United States by way of making telegraph lines all over the United States. Is Congress prepared to give such an enormous privilege as this? And what is to hinder one single company from taking a series of one hundred and sixty acre lots upon a line lying in one direction, and then another series of the same lots lying adjacent to the former lots? The whole public domain might in this way be absorbed by these uncounted telegraph companies. Does the honorable Senator from Ohio, who has so vigilant an eye over the public money and public property, feel willing to grant these privileges to telegraph companies? It seems to me to be utterly absurd. If you are going to make a line of telegraph state in your charter or in your act of Congress where it is to begin and where it shall run and where it shall end, so that the public generally may understand what the privileges are which you are granting, and not give a roving, unlimited commission to a dozen, fifteen, twenty, or a hundred, or a thousand telegraph companies to pervade the entire public domain and absorb it all by way of preëempting it for telegraph companies.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I find the language of this portion of the section to which the Senator objects to be as follows:

And said corporation shall have the right to take and use from such public domain the necessary stone, timber, and other materials for its posts, piers, stations and other needful uses in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said lines of telegraph, and may preëempt and use such portion of the unoccupied public domain through which its said lines of telegraph may be located as may be necessary for its stations, not exceeding one quarter section for each station.

These companies are authorized to preëempt and use such portions of the unoccupied public domain as may be necessary for the construction of their telegraph lines not exceeding one quarter section for each station. I think that there is no danger that the public domain will be absorbed by the construction of these telegraph lines, for there is no human probability that more lines will be constructed across the continent or upon the public domain than will probably pay those persons who may invest their capital in such lines. Is it probable that there would be a line run over every section of the public land lying between the Atlantic States and the Pacific coast? Is there any ground for any such apprehension? The business of the country may sustain two or three lines, and it would be of advantage to the people concerned, on both sides of the continent, if large portions of the public domain were appropriated to the construction of these telegraph lines, and I do not believe that the public lands could be applied in a more useful manner than for the construction of these telegraph lines. I believe in the application of the public lands to the construction of railroads and telegraph lines, and there is no way in my judgment in which the public lands of the country can be used more for the public advantage than by appropriating them for such works of internal improvement, for then they are made useful and of advantage to all the people.

I think this is an apprehension in which the Senator from Michigan indulges without any foundation, and I will invite his attention to the old law under which the existing company was organized, in which the same phraseology is employed as is employed in this bill: In the "act to facilitate communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electric telegraph" the phraseology is this:

"And permission is hereby granted to said parties to whom said contract may be awarded, or a majority of them, and their assigns, to use until the end of said term, such unoccupied public lands of the United States as may be necessary for the right of way and for the purpose of establishing stations for repairs along said line, not exceeding at any station one quarter section of land, such stations not to exceed one in fifteen miles on an average of the whole distance, unless said lands shall be required by the Government of the United States for railroad or other purposes."

Mr. HOWARD. But here the stations may be adjacent to each other. The old act requires the stations to be not nearer than fifteen miles.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator if he thinks they would establish a station in the wilderness in order to get a quarter section of wild land?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly I do. Let one of these companies go into the wilderness and preempt and squat upon every lot of one hundred and sixty acres upon a particular line—the one hundred and sixty acres are worth $200 at the minimum price—and it would be a very great speculation.

Mr. SHERMAN. They would make a station there to do that?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly they would make a station there for that purpose. There is no difficulty about it. It makes a settlement upon the lot, brings it into market, changes ownership from the United States to the occupant, and thus the public land will go.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that if it was true that this telegraph company would do all that the Senator from Michigan apprehends, it would be an advantage to the country. If this telegraph company can cause a settlement across this continent upon the public domain as frequently as he supposes, it will be an advantage to the country, it will enhance the value of the public domain that may not be taken by the company, and it will extend the population of the United States across the continent and conduce to the settlement of the public lands.

Mr. HOWARD. Perhaps it would, but suppose the telegraph company should abandon its line after it had acquired the title and go off, no reversion to the United States would follow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The honorable Senator can indulge in all possible suppositions. I doubt whether any project for any public enterprise can be submitted to the Senate about which Senators may not indulge in improbable suppositions. But is it probable that when a company has invested millions of dollars in a telegraph line across the continent that is paying a large interest upon the money invested, it will abandon that line?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator this question: When the right of preemption is secured, the purchase made, and the patent given to the company, what is to prevent the company withdrawing its station from that land to another station, at its pleasure, and going on with one preemption after preemption, according to its own pleasure, under the language of this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I supposed my friend from Michigan was merely joking on this point; but if the Senator from Indiana is serious, if he really thinks there ought to be a limitation on it, I should say one station to every fifteen or twenty miles.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not charge of this bill, and it is not my business to defend its particular phraseology, and I did not take the floor for that purpose: I intended simply to express my hope that this bill—or if this bill is not satisfactory in its phraseology to Senators, I hope the gentleman having it in charge will make it conform to their wishes so long as the end in view is preserved—I simply intended to advocate the passage of this bill or some such bill for the purpose of putting down the present monopoly.

Mr. HOWARD. I will help you to do that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I find that my remarks are extending further than I originally intended, and leading to protracted discussion, on account of the lateness of the hour I will not trouble the Senate further.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President—

Mr. GRIMES. Let us vote on my amendment, and then discuss the general merits of the bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to be to change the whole character of the bill. The bill as it stands is granting rights to a particular company; but the bill as it will stand after that amendment is adopted is to grant the same privileges to all companies that now exist or hereafter may exist under the laws of any State, not confining its operation to any one company.

I rose not so much to discuss the bill as to refer to the statute under which the existing company received what rights it received from the General Government; and I think that when it is spoken of as a monopoly which has been granted by the Government the character of that measure is not properly understood. The truth is, that in 1860, before we had any such communication as telegraphs across the continent, and when by the great mass of the people it was regarded as almost a Utopian scheme to propose to build a telegraph to the Pacific, Congress passed a law by which it let to the lowest bidder the right to build a telegraph line from Missouri across to San Francisco. The bids were to be advertised for, I think, sixty days, and as an inducement to enable some person or company to go into the construction of this telegraph line Congress agreed in behalf of the Government that it would use the line across the continent and pay for the use of it $40,000 per year. They further agreed that if the company did more than $40,000 worth of telegraphing for the Government at the ordinary price for which telegraphing was done for individuals, they would pay the excess over the $40,000. Congress agreed that the Government business should amount to the sum of $40,000 a year to the contractors. The fact is, that the business of the Government has much exceeded, I suppose, the $40,000 every year since the telegraph line was completed.

In 1844 the first telegraph line was established in this country, from Washington to Baltimore, and the first message which passed over the line, as I recollect, was the message of the Baltimore convention announcing the nomination of the candidate for the Presidency, who was elected that year. From 1844 down to about 1856 there were various competing lines of telegraph built up all over the United States, and as a general thing they were failures upon the hands of those who were operating them. Although they were a great convenience to the country the men who put their money into them and engaged in building them failed. O'Reilly had his great telegraph line; other persons had their telegraph lines; but from 1854 to 1856 the gentlemen who were interested in the lines came to an arrangement by which the lines were consolidated more or less throughout the country; and in 1860, after the lines had become consolidated, this act was passed by Congress letting out this matter of telegraphing across the continent to the lowest bidder, and the contract was taken in behalf of this consolidated telegraph company, and the line was built. The line became a magnificent success, and the result was that this telegraph stock or telegraph property sprung like a new creation out of nothing, and has advanced itself, I suppose, to be worth thirty or forty or fifty million dollars.

It is a new creation of wealth growing out of this new discovery. But, sir, when you look into the statute of 1860 it really does not confer any monopoly upon that company.

Mr. SHERMAN. One section of that bill expressly authorized Congress to extend the same rights to other companies.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The act provides that the Government will, for a given length of time, employ this telegraph to the amount of $40,000 a year at least. The Government guaranty to do at least as much business as that with the company, and so far the guarantee has been kept. We also agreed that the company, in building its line, might preempt at each station a quarter section of land, but those stations were not to be within fifteen miles of each other. That was the provision of the statute. The contract was to be for the period of ten years and to be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. That was in the year 1860. The act declared further:

"Provided, That no such contract shall be made until the said line shall be in actual operation, and payments thereunder shall cease whenever the contractors fail to comply with their contracts; that the Government shall at all times be entitled to priority in the use of the line or lines, and shall have the privilege, when authorized by law, of connecting said line or lines by telegraph with any military posts of the United States and to use the same for Government purposes: And provided also, That said line or lines, except such as may be constructed by the Government to connect said line or lines with the military posts of the United States, shall be open to the use of all citizens of the United States during the term of the said contract, on payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches: And provided also, That such charges shall not exceed three dollars for a single dispatch of ten words, with the usual proportionate deductions upon dispatches of greater length: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall confer upon the said parties any exclusive right to construct a telegraph to the Pacific, or to deprive the Government of the United States from granting, from time to time, similar franchises and privileges to other parties."

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand that to be a limitation of three dollars for ten words on messages across the continent?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It was from the west line of the State of Missouri to San Francisco. What I insist is that the company must act in good faith.

Mr. BROWN. It is clear from the reading of that provision that they have violated their charter.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In relation to what the facts are I will not undertake to state; but I say that it would be held in any court if any proceeding were taken against them for damages, or any proceeding against them by way of injunction or for forfeiture, that they could be compelled to carry out this law in good faith, so that the price of dispatches should not exceed the sum which is here mentioned in the statute.

Mr. STEWART. But the Senator will observe that there is a very small portion of the people of the United States who reside west of the Missouri river. The great mass of the people reside east of that; and the same combination owns the lines east. The people east have to get their messages to that point and must pay for getting them there.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That may be all true; but here is the real fact: we in 1860 let to the lowest bidder the business of building a telegraph line across the continent; and the question is, as that contract only runs for the ten years, shall we now, is it good policy, is it wise, is it just to provide for building on the same line another telegraph? Although the power is reserved to us to do it, ought we to exercise that power, is the question. That is a question which addresses itself to the good faith of Congress. The fact that this company took upon itself the risk when it was supposed to be a risk, when many believed it was a chimera to suppose that a line could be built and kept up across the continent, ought to weigh something with us. My judgment is that if this company has exceeded in its charges what it has a right to charge for its dispatches, there should be a proceeding against it. It would work a forfeiture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Allow me to suggest that

I know it costs ten dollars in gold—they will take nothing but gold—to send a dispatch of ten words from Portland, in Oregon, to Washington. I do not know who gets the money, but I know it costs that amount.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate. I simply say that the character of the act of 1860 has been misunderstood by some in supposing that it was intended to make a monopoly of this company and put everything out of the power of Congress.

Mr. BROWN. The monopoly has been by buying up each other and consolidating.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will now be necessary to make some verbal alterations in the bill to conform to the amendment just made.

Mr. NYE. Let it be recommitted to the committee to reconstruct the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not necessary to recommit it. Only a few verbal alterations are necessary, and they can be made in a moment. In line four of section two I move to strike out "said company" and insert "any of said companies."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, in line two of section three I move to strike out "said" before "company," and after "company" to insert "acting under this act;" so as to read:

The rights and privileges hereby granted shall not be transferred by any company acting under this act to any other corporation, association, or person without the consent of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, to oblige my friend from Nevada, I move to strike out the words "without the consent of Congress," in the fourth line of section three.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. What will the effect of that be?

Mr. SHERMAN. To provide that the rights and privileges granted to any company acting under this bill shall not be transferred to another company. The Senator from Nevada seems to fear that Congress might assent to such a transfer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In line eight of section three I move to strike out the words "said company" and insert "any or all of said companies."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In line eleven of section three I move to strike out the words "said company" and insert "the company interested."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now let the third section be read as it stands amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the rights and privileges hereby granted shall not be transferred by any company acting under this act to any other corporation, association, or person: Provided, however, That the United States may at any time after the expiration of five years from the date of the passage of this act, for postal, military, or other purposes, purchase all the telegraph lines, property, and effects of any or all of said companies at an appraised value, to be ascertained by five competent disinterested persons, two of whom shall be selected by the Postmaster General of the United States, two by the company interested, and one by the four so previously selected,

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the fourth section after the enacting clause and insert:

That before any telegraph company shall exercise any of the powers or privileges conferred by this act, such company shall file their written acceptance with the Postmaster General of the restrictions and obligations required by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I suggest to the Senator to incorporate in the first section a restriction in regard to the distance of the stations from each other.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see no danger to be apprehended on that score; but I move after line twenty-three of the first section to insert "but such stations not to be within fifteen miles of each other," so as to prevent them making a station in order to get the right to preempt a quarter section of land.

Mr. HOWARD. I move in line nineteen of section one to strike out the words "preempt and." It will then leave the lots upon which the stations of the company are, subject merely to a possessory right or right of occupancy on the part of the company, and will not give them the fee-simple of the land. It will simply tolerate them there while in possession of the lot for the purposes of a station, and remove all doubt as to the meaning of the word "preempt." There are many persons who believe that word implies a title in fee-simple. I am not quite sure myself that it does not. To remove all doubt, I think we had better strike out that word.

Mr. CONNESS. I cannot think that this provision is a grant as it now stands; but if the word "preempt" were left in, the company could go on and perfect their title if they saw fit, and buy the land. As the language stands, it gives no title in fee; but if the word "preempt" is stricken out, the companies cannot preempt and buy at any time, and yet the companies may improve a piece of land and have it subject to being preempted by others.

Mr. HOWARD. Not at all. It cannot be subjected to preemption because the company are in possession under a right of occupancy. That excludes everybody else from being a preemptor.

Mr. CONNESS. What objection can there be to allowing the company to preempt and buy?

Mr. HOWARD. The objection is this, that it is not the business of a telegraph company to become the owner of lands in fee-simple. They are intended for another purpose, and ought not to be allowed to accumulate landed property in their hands any more than any other corporation. They ought to be allowed to own and use as much as is necessary for their purposes, and when their occupancy for that purpose has ceased the title ought to revert to the original donor.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Michigan that I think it probable his proposition will defeat a very important purpose of this bill. Suppose a very desirable town site is selected and a whole quarter section is taken. Of course that quarter section is not needed to put up the telegraph apparatus, but the town site is secured by the quarter section. Now, the proposition of the Senator will cut them off from the right to divide that up into lots and sell it, and will very materially interfere with the speculation which is possible under this bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, and that is one of the purposes which I wished to guard against by the amendment which I offered. I foresaw that.

Mr. POMEROY. There are some reasons why I think the public interest would be subserved by allowing a preemption rather than a mere occupancy. Preemptors are subject to certain laws and restrictions. As a preemptor a man cannot strip a quarter section of its timber. A preemptor can use only that portion necessary for his preemption. But if you give the company the use and occupancy of a quarter section, they may strip it of all its timber and may damage the public lands. There are certain restrictions and limitations thrown around preemptors that do not apply to persons who have a perpetual right of use and occupancy. I do not care anything about it so far as it applies to this company. There is one correction, however, that I should like to make in the bill if I can have the attention of the Senator from Ohio for a moment. The words "public domain" and "public lands" have different significations as administered at the Department. We have domain over military reservations, valuable tracts for military sites. We exercise eminent domain over them. They are part of the public domain, but you do not mean to give a company the right of preemption on a reservation, or any such valuable tract. The word "lands" should be used instead of "domain."

Mr. SHERMAN. Would that cover the unsurveyed lands?

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir; they are all "public lands;" but "public domain" is another thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I used the word "domain" so as to cover unsurveyed lands. I supposed that "public lands" technically meant only those which were surveyed and subject to entry.

Mr. POMEROY. They are all public lands, excepting certain reservations, and those reservations are public domain. If it is in order now, I move to insert the word "lands" instead of "domain," in the twentieth line of the first section.

Mr. HOWARD. Let the vote be taken first on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 12, noes 13.

Mr. POMEROY. I now move, in lines sixteen and twenty, of section one, to strike out the word "domain," in each case, and insert "lands." We had to pass a bill here not long since to restore to the public lands certain reservations that were part of the public domain before.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from Ohio, as I understand, says he wishes to give to companies under this bill the same rights that we give to the company across the continent, by the law to which I have already referred. He will find that there is a provision in that law that the company may preempt land for stations during the time that they occupy the land for telegraph purposes. Furthermore, there is a provision that if the land they preempt should happen to be so located as to be needed for railroad purposes, they must give way to the railroad. They can move telegraph lines, but a railroad may have only one place where it can go through. You will find when you come to build the Pacific railroad through the mountains that there are particular sections where the railroad must go, and if there is a telegraph line that has land preempted it may encumber the railroad company—

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator thinks there is any danger on that score, and will draw an amendment to cover the point, I shall have no objection to it. I do not want to secure to any company under this bill a town site or anything of the kind.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out all after the word "telegraph," in the nineteenth line of the first section, to the end of the section.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And may preempt and use such portion of the unoccupied public lands subject to preemption, through which its said lines of telegraph may be located as may be necessary for its stations, not exceeding one quarter section for each station, but such stations not to be within fifteen miles of each other.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This privilege secured to the company can only be for the purpose of speculation. A railroad company, wherever it has a station, needs land of some considerable extent for its depots, its water stations, &c.; but a telegraph company needs simply room enough for its poles and for its office. It has no occasion for one hundred and sixty acres of land. Of course, if Congress gives it, every fifteen miles, a quarter section of land, it is simply for the purpose of speculation. It enables any company acting under the law to select the most desirable locations upon the public lands along the line of the route. It may be said that the telegraph operator located at a particular station needs a homestead. That is very well, and he, under existing laws, may secure his homestead. He may secure it under the homestead law or under the preëemption law. If he settles down in good faith as a telegraphic operator to live upon the quarter section of land, as soon as he shows to the General Land Office that he has made a home upon the particular quarter section of land, like any other citizen he has a right to preëempt it.

Mr. GRIMES. The land must first be surveyed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But any citizen has a right to settle upon a piece of land and secure the right of preëemption in advance of the surveys under existing laws. This right will be secured under existing laws to the operator who may make his home at the station.

Mr. GRIMES. I inquire of the Senator whether that would not be a personal right pertaining to the operator; and if he was changed, would it inure to the benefit of the corporation whose agent and servant he was?

Mr. HENDRICKS. It would be a personal right to the operator who makes his home upon the quarter section of land.

Mr. GRIMES. Then the title of the property would cease to be in the company or in the operator either the moment the operator was discharged from the employment of the company.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The operator who would secure the one hundred and sixty acres of land under the general law would have the right to sell it, dispose of it, just like any other citizen.

Mr. GRIMES. But he could not dispose of it until after the Government had surveyed all these lands, which we have not yet acquired the title to from the Indians.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is a practical difficulty which will be experienced by any preëemptor, whether it be the corporation or the individual. Now, if one hundred and sixty acres of land is wanted at a station, it is either for speculation or for furnishing a home for the operator. If it is to be a home for the operator, let him have his home like every other citizen. Let it be a nucleus, too, for a settlement. Therefore, I move to strike out this clause giving the company the right of preëemption. I do not think it has any proper place in the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Indiana. Under the language of this bill, how much land can a company take for a station? Does he hold it to be that it can absolutely take one hundred and sixty acres, whether necessary for a station or not; or is the amount it can take limited by the necessity, under the language of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKS. All such laws are construed as giving the right to the extent of the limit in the law itself. If the company preëmits one hundred and sixty acres of land, the Commissioner of the General Land Office cannot say that less than that is necessary if the company says it is necessary. The Commissioner cannot adjudicate the amount necessary when Congress has said that to that extent it may be necessary.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is the point I wished to come at.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Congress has fixed the construction by the law itself.

Mr. CONNESS. The last telegraph bill that was passed by Congress was what was known as the Russian telegraph bill. It will be remembered that in that bill the amount of land at each station was cut down to forty acres. I think that would be fair as a compromise in this case. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Indiana by striking out "one quarter section" where it occurs and inserting "forty acres."

Mr. SHERMAN. That will avoid the controversy.

Mr. HOWARD. That is thirty acres too much.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdraw my motion and let the Senator suggest his amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. I make the motion to strike out "one quarter section" where it occurs and to insert "forty acres."

Mr. HOWARD. Why not say "ten acres?"

Mr. CONNESS. I have already given the reason. My purpose is not to destroy this bill, but to perfect it.

Mr. POMEROY. If there is any use in this company having any land at all, it is not that they want every fifteen miles a place for an operator nor to give an operator any land. The operators of the line across this continent over the public lands would not be perhaps within three hundred miles of each other; but every fifteen miles there is to be a watchman to watch the line and to take care of it. If the company have the right of giving a man a homestead, provided he will stay and watch the line across the public domain, to keep it from being cut by Indians, and can build him a little castle there, he can stay and watch and defend this line. That is the object of having a quarter section of land. Every citizen, to be sure, has the right to take that much now, but you cannot get a citizen away out far from the settlements to settle on a piece of public land unless he is protected by a company who pay him something for it; and if he can have the additional inducement of having some land and having the protection of this company, he can keep the line up. The company have to pay as much for keeping the line up as for operating it, and they must have a class of watchmen whose duty it is to go over the line from one end to the other and see that it is perfect. That is the reason why they want land every fifteen miles. There will not be an operator in a hundred miles.

Mr. CONNESS. This land would not serve the purpose the Senator suggests unless the title of it should remain in the company, because if it did not, the watchman, as he terms him, would take the land when he left and sell it to whom he pleased. The purpose is to give a certain amount of land to the company, where they may have a location.

Mr. POMEROY. It is a misapprehension to suppose that anybody can go on the public lands in advance of survey and get anything he may sell.

Mr. CONNESS. The watchman may make a home outside of the forty acres.

Mr. POMEROY. But he cannot sell it until after the land is surveyed. There is no such thing as a squatter selling a preëemption right.

Mr. CONNESS. There is nothing to hinder this man making another location on one hundred and sixty acres outside of the forty.

Mr. POMEROY. That is true.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be forty acres.

Mr. NYE. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether there is any provision in this bill that there shall be a watchman every fifteen miles.

Mr. POMEROY. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. NYE. And no such thing exists across the plains.

Mr. POMEROY. The line is watched all the way.

Mr. NYE. It is not watched every fifteen miles, or every two hundred miles. The way their lines are watched is this: the telegraph runs by the stage road, and they have an arrangement by which the men employed on the stage route see to the line; but there is no such thing as a watchman every fifteen miles. I can show the Senator five hundred miles without any.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall close this bill. I wish to get up the Indian appropriation bill to-morrow, with the assent of the Senate.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to—ayes eight, noes not counted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This session of Congress has been characterized to some extent by the number of propositions for the exercise of extraordinary powers heretofore conceded to belong to the States, for the establishment of railroad companies and propositions to authorize companies to construct railroads through the States, to make canals, to establish a system of land speculation; and now the proposition is that Congress shall undertake to control the telegraph system through the States. When the bill was read this morning I asked a friend sitting near by how Congress came to be able to pass such a bill as this. His reply was, "By main strength." I think no other reply can be given. I admit that Congress may provide for the construction of lines of telegraph through the Territories, through the lands that are under the exclusive control of Congress, and perhaps authorize the construction of lines across the navigable streams. I would not stop to question that; but I cannot comprehend how it is that Congress can say to a telegraph company organized under the laws of the State of Indiana, "You may go into the State of Ohio and run your lines over any road in the State of Ohio." I ask the Senator from Ohio what right the Congress of the United States acquires over a post route. A road is built by the State authorities in the State of Indiana or the State of Michigan, a common highway, and Congress declares that road to be a post route. Does Congress by that act acquire a right in that road or a control over it? What is the act of Congress declaring it a post route? Simply an authority to the Postmaster General to put the mail service upon that line, and beyond that the General Government acquires no control or power over the road.

Then I want to know how it is that a corporation of one State can be authorized to go into another State and there exercise its powers and its franchise. If it can be done in this case, I cannot see why it may not be exercised in the other cases proposed before Congress; and the friends of the right of the States to prohibit foreign corporations from exercising their franchises within their limits might as well make the fight upon this bill as upon any other; for if Congress can authorize a telegraph company of the State of New York to pass through Pennsylvania and Ohio and Indiana and extend its lines over the States according to its own pleasure, I cannot see why Congress cannot authorize a railroad company of the State of New York to construct a railroad in the State of Indiana.

I admit, sir, that a telegraph line does not make the same impression or occupy the same space upon the surface of the earth as a railroad. It is only the erection of a pole every here and there along the line and the putting of a wire upon those poles; it does not occupy very much space; yet it is a power, and up to this time the people have understood that the permission must be granted by the State. Now, it is proposed to say that Congress may authorize a corporation of one State to exercise its powers in another State, with or without the consent of that State. A corporation is organized in the State of New York; it goes to Indiana and proposes to run along our highways. By what right? That corporation tells us, "We have this right because Congress has said so." Why is it that Congress may say so? Where is the authority for Congress to say so? If a corporation of New York shall go into Indiana and propose to construct a railroad along the post routes of the State of Indiana, may the authorities of the State of Indiana not inquire into the authority, and will that company not be stopped upon proper proceedings, and can that company say, "Congress has authorized us to go into the State of Indiana?"

I do not intend to occupy much time upon this bill; but if we mean to say that corporations of States shall not go into other States to exercise their powers, we had as well say it upon this bill as upon any other of the propositions before Congress.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator whether there ever was a time when corporations of States did not go into other States with steamers, stage lines, and any other means of conveyance.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In answer to the Senator from Nevada I have to say that, according to my knowledge of the law, there never has been a time yet when a corporation of one State had a right to go into another State except by the permission of that other State. That is the law on the subject as I understand it. A railroad company of the State of Ohio cannot construct its road in the State of Indiana, and it has been by the highest court settled that the power of a corporation is co-extensive only with the political power that brought it into existence. A corporation has no existence, it has no life outside of the State that creates it. It is an artificial body, and that artificial body has no life and no power outside of the political power that brings it into existence; and the Senator by voting for this bill admits this to be the law. If the corporations already possess this power, why shall Congress confer it upon them? The very proposition before us, to confer the power to go from one State into another, is an admission that without such legislation they do not possess it. Are Senators prepared now, merely to accommodate some telegraphing scheme, to establish the doctrine that Congress may say to a corporation of one State, "Go into all the States and exercise your powers?"

Mr. President, the bill itself may not be very important. It may be desirable to bring about a competition that will relieve the business of the country from the exorbitant charges that are made; but I think there is a good deal of force in the argument of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NYE] that this bill will finally not accomplish much. You say to a corporation of New York or to a corporation of another State, "You may build telegraph lines," and that corporation will sell out, the Senator says, and we are authorized to believe so by the history of the past. But the Senator from Ohio says that he has provided against that. I ask him the question, can Congress prohibit a corporation having a certain franchise under the law of a State, from selling out its franchise if the law of the State authorizes it? The Senator says that to avoid that he has inserted a section which says that before a company shall exercise any power under this bill it shall file its agreement to the restrictions contained in the bill with the Postmaster General. Then, I ask Senators, will it stand upon the law or the contract? The Senator proposes to make a contract between the General Government and a corporation, that the corporation will not sell out; and suppose, instead of selling out it gets up a parade of an organization; it does a good deal of printing; it proposes to establish a line; but before it commences building it sells out or is bought off by one of the old companies; how can Congress avoid that? It is simply a provision for a system of speculation that has not been equaled heretofore.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed to the first Monday of December next.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to strike out the second section of the bill and insert the following in lieu of it:

That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General, on the first Monday of September of each year after the passage of this act, to advertise in the three daily newspapers having the largest circulation in the United States for sealed proposals for doing the telegraphic business of the several departments of the Government of the United States; such advertisements to be published in each of such newspapers twice each week for two consecutive weeks. And upon the first Monday of October thereafter, in each year, the Postmaster General shall open the proposals which shall be made to him, and shall thereupon award the contract to the lowest bidder for the transmission of each one hundred words, not including the address and signature to any dispatch: Provided, however, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to reject the bid of any person, company, or association whose bid shall not be accompanied by a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $50,000 executed by the bidder and two sufficient sureties, who shall be resident citizens of the United States, conditioned, in case the said contract shall be awarded to such bidder, that he shall execute a written contract according to the terms of such bid, and indemnify the United States against all loss or damage by reason of the non-performance of such contract.

Mr. SHERMAN. The provision of the bill is much simpler and much better than the price of all messages sent by or to any officer of the Government shall be fixed by the Postmaster General. It is much better to leave it with him than to open it to contract or competition. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. It strikes me that the result of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York would simply be to make the Government pay more than it is now paying for telegraphic charges. There would be no competition and there might be combination, and we should be required to pay all that was asked. I think it would be unfortunate if any such amendment were put on.

Mr. MORGAN. We are now providing by a general law for telegraph companies, and while providing for an increase of telegraph companies, it seems to me it would be well also to provide generally for the telegraphic business of the Government.

Mr. NYE. I hope the care of this immense business will not be committed to the hands of the Postmaster General alone. It is a pretty large power. I recollect that we had a pretty lively debate here the other day on giving to the Secretary of the Treasury a couple of hundred thousand dollars to spend as he pleased. This is putting a million into the hands of one man, whoever he may be, to pay just what he pleases to any telegraph company that he chooses to contract with. I hope this amendment of the Senator from New York will be made.

The question being put, there were, on a division—yeas 13, nays 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clark, Cowan, Doolittle, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Morgan, Nye, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Conness, Cragin, Fessenden, Foster, Howe, Kirkwood, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, and Williams—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Grimes, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Wright, and Yates—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in; so that the bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any telegraph company now organized or which may hereafter be organized under the laws of any State in this Union shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which have been or may hereafter be declared such by act of Congress, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States: Provided, That such lines of telegraph shall be so constructed and maintained as not to obstruct the navigation of such streams and waters, or interfere with the ordinary travel on such military or post roads. And any of said companies shall have the right to take and use from such public lands the necessary stone, timber, and other materials for its posts, piers, stations, and other needful uses in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said lines of telegraph, and may preempt and use such portion of the unoccupied public lands subject to preemption through which its said lines of telegraph may be located as may be necessary for its stations, not exceeding forty acres for each station, but such stations not to be within fifteen miles of each other.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That telegraphic communications between the several Departments of the Government of the United States and their officers and agents shall, in their transmission over the lines of any of said companies, have priority over all other business, and shall be sent at rates to be annually fixed by the Postmaster General.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the rights and privileges hereby granted shall not be transferred by any company acting under this act to any other corporation, association, or person: Provided, however, That the United States may at any time after the expiration of five years from the date of the passage of this act, for postal, military, or other purposes, purchase all the telegraph lines, property, and effects of any or all of said companies at an appraised value, to be ascertained by five competent, disinterested persons, two of whom shall be selected by the Postmaster General of the United States, two by the company interested, and one by the four so previously selected.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That before any telegraph company shall exercise any of the powers or privileges conferred by this act, such company shall file their written acceptance with the Postmaster General of the restrictions and obligations required by this act.

Mr. NYE. I now renew the amendment which was offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. MORGAN] when we were in committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. It will only put the Government of the United States to expense. It seems to me not necessary. The bill is very carefully guarded. We have put the price of Government messages in the power of the Postmaster General, who will always, as a matter of course, endeavor to get the business done at the lowest possible price consistent with the public interest.

Mr. HOWARD. It is quite uncertain whether he will endeavor to get the service performed at the lowest rates. I think this is nothing but a reasonable restriction imposed upon the Postmaster General. It is certainly the mode in contracts of importance that are let by the Government, and I see no reason whatever for rejecting it. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Allow me to ask the Senator if Congress cannot require the Postmaster General to state what he pays for telegraphing the public messages.

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly we can ask the Postmaster General to state any official fact of which he has knowledge; but what does it amount to? He will have the authority under this bill to give the contract to any party that he may see fit, and upon any terms that he may see fit, however extravagant they may be. I think it is a power that ought to be restrained within some reasonable limits. Certainly nobody can complain of the amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. If there were a great many telegraph corporations in the United States, so that we could get some contest between them, it would be worth while to advertise; but what we are trying to resist is the overshadowing monopoly of consolidated companies. The idea that when those consolidated companies have got only one organization which embraces all the lines in the United States, you are going to advertise for proposals, so that that one organization can have entire control of the prices which the Government shall pay for telegraphing, seems to me ridiculous. If you make that provision the Postmaster General must make contracts for what they will do the work for.

Mr. BROWN. And he is required to make contracts with them, which he is not now.

Mr. POMEROY. Yes. I was about to say that the amendment requires him to do it while the bill puts it into his hands to fix the prices. What we are trying to resist is the overshadowing monopoly of the existing companies; and the idea of advertising for Government work so that they can agree on the precise price they will have, and then oblige the Department to contract with them, is only adding strength to the monopoly.

Mr. NYE. That illustrates precisely what I have been trying to show all day, that there is no company now in existence that can compete, that it is not a proposition to build a single foot of telegraph by any company. This whole thing beautifully exemplifies the farcical character of the bill. Here you are providing that the Postmaster General shall make a contract with the only company there is. You do not propose to build a foot of telegraph anywhere upon this continent. I think the amendment proposes simply to carry out the practice of the Departments. There are gentlemen here who have been in the Departments, and they know that whenever they want any particular service for the Government they contract for it. I should like to know from the Senator from Ohio why the Government telegraphing, which costs from four hundred thousand to five hundred thousand dollars a year, I have no doubt, should not be let-by contract like other Government service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason is that there is nobody to compete.

Mr. NYE. Then why are you legislating here?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, they resulted—yeas 14, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clark, Cowan, Doolittle, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Morgan, Nye, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Howe, Kirkwood, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, and Williams—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Grimes, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Wright, and Yates—20.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and on the question, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HENDRICKS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Howe, Kirkwood, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wade, and Williams—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Doolittle, Guthrie, Hendricks, Howard, Morgan, Nye, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Grimes, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Wright, and Yates—20.

So the bill was passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 739) for the relief of Lemantha Rader;

A bill (H. R. No. 740) for the relief of Matilda J. Monroe;

A bill (H. R. No. 741) granting pension to Jonathan W. Beach;

A bill (H. R. No. 742) for the relief of the minor children of Salvador Accadi, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 743) amendatory of an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) for the relief of Edgar T. Harris.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move, merely for the purpose of leaving it as the unfinished business for to-morrow, to take up the Indian appropriation bill. I hope to get through with it to-morrow.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House bill No. 613, the Freedmen's Bureau bill, which came from the House to-day, for the appointment of a committee of conference.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we had better adjourn and attend to that in the morning. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 29, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WILLIAM G. LEE.

Mr. McKEE. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of House bill No. 629, for the benefit of William G. Lee, in order that it may be considered at this time.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William G. Lee, or his legal representatives, $28,428 50, which sum is to be in full payment of his claim against the United States on account of corn purchased by him in the department of Kentucky, as the agent of the quartermaster's department, under the agreement made by him with Captain John A. Morris, in 1864, and which corn spoiled on his hands by reason of the Government failing to furnish transportation.

The motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the bill was agreed to.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. McKEE. I do not desire to say anything in reference to this bill unless some gentleman desires some explanation. A report, a very long one, setting forth all the facts, accompanies the bill. The case is simply one of a contract with an agent of the Government.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think it must be apparent to the House that this being a claim under a contract with the Government ought properly to go to the Court of Claims. For the consideration of precisely such cases the Court of Claims was established.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. McKEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXCUSED FROM COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, you have done me the honor to appoint me a member of the committee of conference on the internal revenue bill. I expect to be busily engaged for some days upon the tariff bill; and with this and my other engagements my time will be fully occupied. I therefore ask to be excused from service on that conference committee.

There being no objection, Mr. MORRILL was excused.

IOWA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution, to which I think there will be no objection. Let it be read for information.

The Clerk read the resolution. It provides that the time for completing the Agricultural College of the State of Iowa, in accordance with the provisions of the act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, approved July 2, 1862, be extended for the period of one year.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I have only to say that a committee of the trustees of this institution have requested that an act of this kind may be passed, as the work on the college is in progress, but not yet completed.

Mr. HALE. I desire to inquire whether this has not already been provided for in a general bill.

Mr. KASSON. I had supposed that such was the fact; but on an examination of the bill I do not find it to cover this case.

Mr. GRINNELL. Some time since I was addressed in regard to this matter. I then examined the bill on this subject passed about two months ago, on the recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture. I found that that bill covers the case.

Mr. KASSON. I was under the impression that such was not the fact; but I will make a reexamination, meanwhile withdrawing the bill for the present.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropri-tions for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that this bill be made a special order for next Tuesday immediately after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND TITLES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House that an additional hour be assigned to the Committee on Public Lands to-morrow for the special consideration of Senate bill No. 343, to quiet land titles in California, which was referred to in the debates on yesterday. It will be impossible to consider that question unless the leave I ask for be granted, unless we withhold action on all other matters before us, which would be wrong. I therefore ask for an additional hour on that matter affecting the interests of California so deeply.

Mr. PIKE objected.

NATIONAL BUREAU OF INSURANCE.

Mr. COOK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill for the creation of a national Bureau of Insurance; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF WAR OF 1812.

Mr. HALE called for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER stated the regular order of business was the consideration of the unfinished business of the morning hour of Friday last, being an adverse report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions on House bill No. 168, granting pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812 with Great Britain, on which the chairman of the committee [Mr. PERHAM] was entitled to the floor for thirty-six minutes.

Mr. PERHAM. Mr. Speaker, at the close of the morning hour last Friday I had nearly concluded what I had to say on this question. I had shown, in answer to an inquiry then put to me in regard to the probable expense of paying the pensions proposed, that it would in all possibility be not less than $10,000,000 per annum; and that this proposes to go back something more than a year, so that for the first year the expense would be more than $20,000,000.

It is, as I have said, impossible to say how much it would be in the aggregate. We are now paying the last of the pensioners of the revolutionary war eighty-three years after the close of that war; that is about fifty-two years after the time of granting pensions generally to the soldiers of the revolutionary war. We have, then, probably about thirty years more in which we would be paying these soldiers of the war of 1812, if this bill be passed. At an average of five millions a year you would have $150,000,000, which would be the total outlay under this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say, in behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that we have had this subject of pensions under consideration for a long time. We have had applications for pensions in all forms before us, of destitute women, helpless children, in all conditions of suffering; all presenting their claims to us; and I think no member of this House can feel a deeper sympathy for this class of persons than we do, and none would be more willing to grant pensions to these soldiers than we are could the committee satisfy themselves the country was in a condition now to meet this expenditure. The truth is, we have other claims to pensions which we have not yet met, although we have extended the provisions of the pension laws by acts already passed and which are to be passed to an amount of something like six millions. There are many others not provided for. Many have been killed in organizations known as home guards, having done good service for their country, and their widows are living with large families, and penniless in many instances. We feel we could not extend the pension laws to that class of persons. Should not the widows of men who were killed in battle receive the bounty of the Government sooner than those who only served in the war of 1812 and have not been wounded?

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had many complaints since the action a week ago. These old soldiers have been writing to us, and some of them have said very hard words to us because we have not been more willing to meet their expectation in this regard. I have a letter now in my hand from one who has written to many other members of the House; I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania among others. This gentleman complains that it was said in the debate on this subject that Congress had been extremely liberal in its legislation in regard to the soldiers of 1812, and he wants us to point out to him in what this liberality consists. He says he cannot see it. He asks us to take his own case. He says he enlisted in 1814, just before the close of the war, and served six months faithfully, and all the Government has ever given him since that time is two land-warrants, of eighty acres each, which he sold for only $150. That is all he has received during the fifty-two years since the close of the war of 1812, and he says it is only three dollars per year for that period of time. He does not complain that the Government did not pay him all it agreed to, nor that he was injured at all by the service of six months. He probably was never in a battle, never smelt gunpowder; still he is among the first to complain and is the severest in his censure.

Now, I only wish to say that my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] in his very earnest remarks, made a mistake in one regard which I wish to correct, so that it may not have a false impression. He remarked that we pensioned the soldiers of the Revolution indiscriminately thirty-five years after the close of the war. That is not correct. Fifty-two years had elapsed before they were pensioned. The same time has now elapsed since the war of 1812. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House. The committee have many private bills which they wish to call up, and I will move the previous question, unless some gentleman desires to speak on the subject.

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to say a word.

Mr. PERHAM. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to say that there must be some mistake in the statement that it will require anything like $10,000,000 to pension the soldiers of 1812, even if we adopt the same plan that was adopted in regard to the revolutionary soldiers. Two years ago I had occasion to inquire of the Commissioner of Pensions in regard to the probable expense. The number of soldiers of 1812 has certainly not increased since that time, but must in the ordinary course of events have diminished. At that time I was informed by the Commissioner that the expense would be from three to five millions. And now the estimate is made at $10,000,000.

Sir, I am in favor of doing something for these men who are now living. They are few in number, and the number is daily growing less. If we put it off for another year, how many shall we have left? There can hardly be a man of them less than seventy years of age. I was a boy in 1814, and I now lack two years of being seventy. The bulk of the soldiers of the war of 1812 must be over seventy years of age. If the Committee on Pensions do not deem it expedient to give to these old men as much of a pittance as was afforded to the soldiers who fought in the war which has just closed we will not complain; but they surely ought not to turn their backs upon them and refuse to do anything. If it be necessary that economy be carried to that extent, so far as regards our national Treasury, I would propose that the committee take this matter into consideration and report something in the shape of a donation to these old men, say of two, three, or five hundred dollars; something that may smooth their passage to the grave.

Mr. PERHAM. I do not rest this matter entirely upon the cost and expense; but I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] on this subject. The gentleman says that he applied to the Pension department a year ago, and was informed that it would take from three to five million dollars annually to carry out this act. I have no doubt of that fact. We all know that the estimates are very much below what the expenditures amount to. I desire to move the previous question upon this bill, but I will yield for a moment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I think the honorable chairman of the committee [Mr. PERHAM] is clearly mistaken in his estimate of the surviving soldiers of the war of 1812; in fact, it is based upon a mere supposition, and from that he formed his estimate of $10,000,000 annually as the amount required to pay pensions under the provisions of the present bill. I find that by the first section of an act of Congress, approved April 10, 1812, entitled "An act to authorize a detachment from the militia of the United States" (see United States Statutes-at-Large, volume two, pages 705, 706,) it is provided:

"That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to require of the Executives of the several States and Territories to take effectual measures to organize, arm, and equip according to law and hold in readiness to march at a moment's warning their respective proportions of one hundred thousand militia, officers included, to be apportioned by the President of the United States from the latest militia returns in the Department of War, and in cases where such returns have not been made by such other data as he shall judge equitable."

Thus it will be seen that under the provisions of this act the maximum number of militia to be called out was one hundred thousand. I have no correct data as to the number of volunteers and seamen, as many of the records were destroyed by the British invasion of this city (Washington) during that war. It is clear, however, that the survivors are nothing like the number supposed by the honorable gentleman. Including seamen, they certainly cannot exceed from twenty-five to fifty thousand, and a large number between the age of seventy-five and eighty years. I find, by pamphlets furnished me by the secretary of the Pennsylvania Association of the defenders of the country in the war of 1812, that the mortality in that association between the years 1860 and 1866 was astonishing, and it is fair to presume that deaths occurred in the same proportion among the other veterans of that war throughout the United States, so that the ranks must be now very much thinned; and it must be borne in mind that the bill provides to pay only those who are in necessitous circumstances.

But it is said by the honorable gentleman [Mr. PERHAM] that many old men put their property out of their hands by giving it to their children, and therefore this bill might embrace such in its provisions. It is not, Mr. Speaker, to be supposed that these old veterans, with one foot in the grave, would attempt to commit a fraud upon the Government; but if any should have intrusted their little property to their children, with an understanding that they should receive a comfortable support the remainder of their days, and by some misfortune that property should be swept away and their support with it, would that be any reason why these old men should not be cared for by the Government they defended in their manhood against the assaults of a powerful nation? It is said that there are many widows and orphans of those who fell in the late war for putting down the rebellion, who claim and ought to have increased pensions. All this I concede, Mr. Speaker, but is that any reason for not paying the indigent soldiers of the war of 1812, who are equally meritorious? The gentleman also argues that the country is not in a proper condition to meet these demands. This, as I stated, when the case was up last week, is a mistake. The nation is able and willing, and all that is wanting is for Congress to pass the law and our constituents will cheerfully respond, "Well done good and faithful servants." We are reducing taxation, and have done so more than seventy millions, and yet "we are unable to meet this demand." I would ask this House what would be the effect of delay in this matter. The answer is plain, and that is that these old soldiers will soon be laid in their graves. I want to see them cared for so that they can have some little of the comforts of this world and a pittance to give them a decent burial.

We are told that we are not yet done paying pensions to the soldiers of the revolutionary war. Mr. Speaker, as I stated in my former remarks, there are but two of those honored sires remaining, and would to God there were more of them, so that they could see the magnificent Government for which they fought in the dark days to make free. A few days more, and these two will be gone, and so it will be with those of the war of 1812. They will not trouble Congress long. As I said on a former occasion, a bill passed this House in 1858 allowing them a pension, which was not acted on in the Senate. Now, sir, is this House less patriotic at present than it was in 1858? I am sure the vote about to be taken will show the veneration this Congress has for those who in the hour of peril risked their lives for this country, and it will show to the rising generation that this is a nation that is true to its defenders; and if ever we should be imbrued in another war it would be a stimulant for our young men to rally around the flag of our country, and woe beto the nation that would attempt to tarnish the emblem of this Republic or impugn the Monroe doctrine.

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that it will require considerable to pay pensions to the widows of such as are dead, that are in necessitous circumstances. There certainly cannot be a very large number of them remaining, and those that are must be far advanced in life, for it cannot be supposed that a man eighty years old would leave a very young widow. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to discharge my duty to these old defenders of our country, and if my feeble effort is instrumental in inducing this Congress to pass a law giving a pittance to soothe them in their declining years, I feel grateful. I am satisfied this Republic will be none the poorer; that the same omnipotent Hand that led us through the late terrible war triumphantly will bless our nation with abundance. And I am sure the honorable committee will most cheerfully and promptly respond to the action of this House.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand now that the motion is to recommit the bill with instructions to bring in a bill. I move to amend the instructions as follows: to report an amendment increasing the lowest rate of pensions for total disability, which now rates at eight dollars, to ten dollars per month.

Mr. MILLER. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the amendment is not germane to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is germane, as it relates to the subject of pensions.

Mr. FARQUHAR. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] whether the amendment he proposes applies to pensions generally, and will reach the cases of soldiers of the war of 1812 if adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. It instructs the committee to report a bill increasing the lowest rate of pension for total disability from eight dollars to ten dollars. It applies to all pensions that now rate at eight dollars a month, and raises them all to ten dollars a month. I proposed twelve dollars a month the other day; but I found that the Committee on Pensions were reluctant to agree to that; I suppose they wanted to save all the money they could. For that reason I have modified it so as to make it ten dollars a month.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I most heartily concur in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] I regret very much to have to differ with the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. PERHAM] and with that committee on this subject. I am free to say that the labors of that committee thus far during this session have been most successful. And so far as they in their judgment have seen proper to go in the extension of pensions, I think their course has been highly commendable, and that the country will fully sustain them. And I think that the increase of two dollars per month, as called for by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is demanded by the country, and will be met by the people with hearty commendation. I know that the committee have had to contend with great difficulties in the investigation of this question. They have had to contend against a heavy expenditure, while at the same time they have had to endeavor to meet the wants of those claiming pensions and the demands of the people. And yet I am satisfied the public sentiment of this country will sustain the committee and will sustain Congress in the adoption of the increased rate of pension proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] Now one word in regard to the main proposition before the House, that is, the extension of pensions to the soldiers of 1812; not indiscriminately, not to all the soldiers of 1812, but only to the indigent soldiers, and the indigent widows of the soldiers of 1812. Now, I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. PERHAM] to say whether that proposition does not reach his sympathies, and also his judgment. And I appeal to him to say whether there is not some mistake in regard to the conclusion at which he arrives, when he tells us that the number of these soldiers and widows will amount to one hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. PERHAM. I suppose I might as well answer the gentleman here as at any other time, and also resume the floor, if the gentleman is through with what he desires to say.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Not quite.

Mr. PERHAM. I cannot yield for much further debate, as I desire to have this subject disposed of soon. In regard to the estimate to which the gentleman refers, I will say that if any bill of this kind should be passed, the gentleman will find that the estimate is under rather than above what it should be. I have not the least doubt about it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Now to the point. I will refer, by way of illustration, to the city of Baltimore, where I undertake to say there are now more indigent soldiers and indigent widows of soldiers of 1812 than in any other like population in this country. It was there that the old flag of the Republic had to be sustained and was sustained in the war of 1812. It was there that the British lion attempted with all his force and power to trail that flag in the dust. A short time since the city of Baltimore adopted a provision giving pensions to the indigent soldiers and the indigent widows of soldiers of the war of 1812; and there were found only five hundred persons who were able to take advantage of that provision. Now, apply that to all the United States, assuming that there are twenty million people, among whom can be found some of these soldiers of 1812, and at the rate of proportion shown by the city of Baltimore, there would not be fifty thousand in the whole country. And if the deduction is made of those who are not indigent, from two to five million dollars would exceed the amount required for pensions to them. And yet gentlemen will tell us, as one did a week ago when this subject was before up for consideration, that the number of indigent soldiers of 1812 would largely increase if such a bill as this should be passed. Now, I repel the charge that the men who bore aloft the old flag in 1812, and who fought to sustain the Government at that time, are such a class of men that they would, not now being indigent, violate honor and integrity and their oath for the purpose of obtaining these pensions while they are not entitled to them. I know in regard to my own district that—

Mr. PERHAM. What charge is the gentleman repelling?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The charge that if this law should be passed, it will be found that honorable men have put their property in the hands of their children, in order that they may obtain these pensions as indigent persons. I ask whether that statement was not made by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. PERHAM] when this subject was up before.

Mr. PERHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that this discussion has gone about as far as the gentleman can reasonably expect me to allow it to continue under the circumstances. I think that my language with regard to these soldiers of 1812 has been of the most respectful character—

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope that the gentleman will give me a moment longer.

Mr. PERHAM. I do not think I ought to yield longer. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER,] who presents this proposition for pensioning the soldiers of the war of 1812, desires that it should be acted on in the House as a distinct proposition. I desire, too, that a distinct vote shall be had upon the proposition. I did not intend to yield the floor for any other proposition to come in. I think that any proposition in regard to the increase of other pensions should be acted on as a separate proposition. This is the desire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER,] as well as of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] was entertained, no objection being made at the time. It is too late now for objection to be made.

Mr. COFFROTH. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PERHAM] yield to me for three minutes?

Mr. PERHAM. I will yield to the gentleman for that time.

Mr. COFFROTH. I do not desire to discuss this proposition. I merely wish to state that by a resolution adopted by this House on the 2d of May last, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was instructed to report a bill in favor of the soldiers and sailors of 1812. The committee this morning instructed me to present that bill at the proper time. When this question is disposed of I will report that bill from the committee. Although a majority of the committee are opposed to the bill, it will be presented in accordance with the resolution of the House. When that bill is reported this whole question will come up, and can then be discussed.

Mr. PERHAM. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon the motion of Mr. STEVENS to amend the instructions proposed by Mr. MILLER.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order at this time to move to lay this bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. It would be. The bill is now pending before the House on a motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. LE BLOND. I believe I will make that motion, for the reason just stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that, under a resolution already adopted by the House, the committee will bring in a bill providing pensions for the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812. The House ought really not to consider this proposition until it is presented by the bill to be reported from the committee.

Mr. STEVENS. I will suggest to the gentleman that if the bill be recommitted with instructions we need not act upon it when reported if meanwhile another covering the same subject has been reported and acted upon. I think that we had better recommit this.

Mr. LE BLOND. Exactly. Then, if we desire a bill of this sort, our proper course is to recommit with the instructions we desire.

Mr. FINCK. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. If the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] should be adopted, what will become of the proposition to grant pensions to the soldiers of 1812?

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is to strike out the instructions proposed by his colleague [Mr. MILLER] and insert instructions of a different nature.

Mr. FINCK. I hope, then, that the amendment will not be agreed to. I wish to vote in favor of the soldiers of 1812. I trust that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will withdraw his amendment. I understand a bill has already been prepared by the committee carrying out the object which the gentleman desires. Let us have a direct vote on the instructions in favor of the soldiers of 1812.

Mr. STEVENS. I must decline to withdraw my amendment.

On agreeing to the amendment,

Mr. STEVENS called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire that the House shall vote understandingly. As I understand, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] if it prevails, will cut off the soldiers of 1812 altogether. Am I correct in this?

Mr. STEVENS. We simply instruct them to report a bill granting ten dollars as the lowest pension.

Mr. LE BLOND. What soldiers? The soldiers of 1812?

Mr. STEVENS. All of them.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I request the honorable gentleman to withdraw this motion, for the reason that I want to vote for the soldiers of the war of 1812 as well as for those of 1861.

Mr. HALE. I object to debate.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS and FINCK were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas five, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STEVENS's amendment was then disagreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. MILLER's motion to recommit with instructions to report favorably on the subject.

Mr. FINCK demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 11, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Cobb, Coffroth, Cook, Culom, Dawson, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McKee, McRuer, Mercut, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stillwell, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Bart Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—102.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Baldwin, Broomall, Davis, Dawes, Hale, Perham, Ritter, Trowbridge, and William B. Washburn—11.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Blaine, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Donnelly, Eliot, Farnworth, Garfield, Grider, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Ketcham, Laffin, Lynch, Marston, McIndoe, Morrill, Moulton, Noel, Paine, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Rogers, Schenck, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, John L. Thomas, Upson, Van Aernam, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright—69.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. PERHAM stated, as it seemed to be the sense of the House, he would vote in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

L. RADER.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of L. Rader; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides for the payment to L. Rader, widow of John Rader, late private company K, seventeenth Ohio infantry, a pension during her widowhood of eight dollars per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported adversely on sundry petitions, resolutions, &c.; which were laid upon the table.

On motion of Mr. PERHAM, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of various petitions, &c., in cases already provided for under general law; and the same were laid upon the table.

MRS. MARGARET A. FARRAN.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 368, granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret A. Farran.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Margaret A. Farran, widow of Abram Farran, late private twenty-fourth battery Indiana light artillery, and that she be paid a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 16th of February, 1864, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely on the following cases, the same having been provided for by a general law, and they were laid on the table: petition of Joseph J. Murphy; petition of J. W. Moody, asking a pension for Martha Stevens; petition of Mrs. Caroline Lang; bill for the relief of Mrs. Anna Burnett.

MATILDA J. MONROE.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Mrs. Matilda J. Monroe; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It grants a pension of eight dollars per month to Mrs. Monroe, widow of David B. Monroe, late sergeant in the sixty-second Ohio volunteers, and in the event of her death extends the pension to her minor children subject to the limitations of the pension law.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move an amendment by inserting after the word "widowhood" the words "commencing on the 16th day of March, 1863." There was a question raised in the committee whether the pension should commence from the date of the death of her husband or from the passage of this act, and it was finally agreed to submit the question to the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JONATHAN W. BEACH.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Jonathan W. Beach; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It grants a pension of twenty-five dollars per month during the petitioner's blindness, to commence from the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHILDREN OF SALVADOR ACCADI.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of the minor children of Salvador Accadi; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It grants a pension of eight dollars per month to Adrian and Lavinia, children of the late Salvador Accadi, musician in the United States Navy, commencing from the 1st of January, 1864, and to continue until the youngest child shall be sixteen years of age.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JANE E. MILES.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 299, granting a pension to Jane E. Miles, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It grants a pension of eight dollars per month to Mrs. Miles, widow of William D. Miles, late landsman in the Navy, commencing from the 22d of March, 1865.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMERANCE GOULER.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the same committee, reported a bill amendatory of an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Emerance Gouler;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It continues the pension heretofore granted to Mrs. Gouler, in the event of her death, to her minor children under sixteen years of age, had by her late husband, Charles Gouler, private in the ninth New Hampshire volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

EDGAR T. HARRIS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Edgar T. Harris, of West Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY C. HAMILTON.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, bill of the Senate No. 556, granting a pension to Mrs. Mary C. Hamilton.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH J. PURCELL.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, bill of the Senate No. 314, for the relief of Sarah J. Purcell.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, also from the same committee, made adverse reports in the following cases: Mary B. Farr, of Pennsylvania, Mary C. Hamilton, John Fowler, Elizabeth H. Prummer, and John Garner; which were severally laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF THE WAR OF 1812.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, bill of the House No. 665, granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and those engaged in Indian wars during that period.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour having expired, the bill goes over until Friday next.

TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Mr. SMITH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill requiring the officers of the Territories of the United States to hold their offices and file their papers at the capitals of the Territories; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Territories.

LAND DISTRICT IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to establish an additional land district in the Territory of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks indefinite leave of absence for the gentleman from New York, Mr. BERGEN.

No objection was made, and the leave was granted.

PAYMENT FOR HORSES, ETC.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to report an amendment to the act of March 3, 1819, providing payment for horses and equipments of officers lost by accident beyond the control of the owners, resulting from the management of railroad transportation while in the service of the United States.

Mr. ROLLINS. I must object to that resolution, unless the gentleman will so modify it as to make it one of inquiry, directing the committee to inquire into the expediency, &c.

Mr. LATHAM. I will modify it in that way. No objection being made, the resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill by paragraphs for amendment, commencing as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned, and on such as may now be exempt from duty, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise herein enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say: on woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool, of every description, made wholly or in part of wool, not herein otherwise provided for, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On flannels, blankets, endless belts or felts for paper or printing machines, hats of wool, knit goods, Balmorals, woolen and worsted yarns, and all manufactures of every description, composed wholly or in part of worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, except such as are composed in part of wool, not otherwise provided for, valued at not exceeding forty cents per pound, twenty cents per pound; valued at above forty cents per pound and not exceeding sixty cents per pound, thirty cents per pound; valued at above sixty cents per pound and not exceeding eighty cents per pound, forty cents per pound; valued at above eighty cents per pound, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, upon all the above-named articles, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out the words "endless belts or felts for paper or printing machines." That will leave this article subject to the duty which it now bears, of thirty-five per cent. This article is manufactured to only a very limited extent in this country. I think there is but one establishment that manufactures it; and I am not certain that that establishment manufactures endless belts. I think it will meet the public exigencies quite as much to strike this out as to leave it in.

And there is another consideration which should lead to the adoption of my amendment. There will be endless trouble in collecting the duties under this paragraph if it is allowed to pass as it now stands. These articles in great variety are imported in the same bale. And if this section is passed as it now stands, it will necessitate the opening and examination of each bale at the custom-house, in order to determine the duty to be paid upon each variety of this article contained in the same bale.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes forty-seven, noes not counted. So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On bunting twenty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to strike out this paragraph. Gentlemen will remember that this article is not manufactured in this country; I believe it is all imported.

Mr. MARSTON. It is manufactured in this country now.

Mr. LE BLOND. I am aware there is one establishment in this country, of which General Butler is the foundation. That is the only bunting establishment in the United States of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] is in error. I do not know about the establishment in which he says General Butler is interested. But there are other bunting establishments in which General Butler is not interested.

Mr. LE BLOND. I have no knowledge of them. I know there is one which has been started since the late war commenced, in which General Butler is the foundation. And if it be the case that we have but one establishment in which bunting is manufactured, I think this article should not have any duty placed upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. The manufacture of bunting is a very difficult manufacture, and one which has never yet been successfully carried on in this country. During the late war we passed, in an appropriation bill, I believe, a provision directing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to purchase American bunting, provided it could be purchased at a price not exceeding the market value of imported bunting. Under these circumstances some establishments have attempted its manufacture. It is found, however, that these establishments will be compelled to abandon its manufacture on a simple ad valorem duty.

We propose to place a specific duty on all other woolen goods. If there is any article upon which we ought to place such a duty as will enable the American people to manufacture it, it is that kind of cloth that bears the stars and stripes. I trust that we will at least be no longer disgraced and degraded in the eyes of the world by flying at our mast-heads bunting made by foreigners. And if General Butler is at the bottom of this manufacture, it is a recommendation of it.

The amendment of Mr. LE BLOND was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On women's and children's dress goods and real or imitation Italian cloths, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, valued at not exceeding twenty-five cents the square yard, six cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at above twenty-five cents the square yard, eight cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem; Provided, That on all goods weighing four ounces and over per square yard, the duty shall be fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out the words "twenty-five" where they occur, in two places, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty." I will say in explanation of that amendment that the Committee of Ways and Means examined the rates reported by the wool manufacturers and the wool-growers of the country, and revised with some severity the bill reported by those parties, cutting down the duties in several instances. Upon a reinvestigation of the subject we find that we have done injustice in relation to the goods embraced in this paragraph. They are dress goods and are made at very inconsiderable prices abroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On clothing ready made, and wearing apparel of every description, and Balmoral skirts and skirting, and goods of similar description, or used for like purposes, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, except knit goods, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph just read the following:

On webbing, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, gimps, cords, cords and tassels, dress trimmings, head nets, buttons, or barrel buttons, or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, wrought by hand or braided by machinery, made of wool, worsted, or mohair, or of which wool, worsted, or mohair is the component material, unmixed with silk, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

The articles named in this amendment are small articles made for dress trimmings. They are of difficult manufacture. There are in different parts of the country several establishments which manufacture these articles, especially one in Cincinnati, which ought to be sustained. The duties proposed in the amendment are no higher than those recommended on silks and goods of a similar class.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether it would not be better to insert this in the paragraph beginning at line eighty-two, on page 12.

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; I prefer to have it inserted here.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend by striking out, in line forty-six, the word "forty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty." The clause which I propose to amend provides that on clothing "manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, except knit goods," the duty shall be "fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem." I propose to make the duty fifty per cent. ad valorem. Upon cloths and other materials for wearing apparel the duties are the same as provided in this paragraph. Therefore, where the article is more manufactured, involving more labor, and that the hand-labor of men and women, but more largely of women, this really has the effect of diminishing the duty. On a suit of clothes, the cloth of which would cost fifty dollars, the whole increase of duty by this is 91 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents—not one dollar. Yet this question involves the employment of the widows and many of the orphans of our soldiers. It involves the labor of the poorest of our people—the needy women of the country. A large amount of the clothing worn in the northern States comes to us now from Canada and the Provinces. It is made of cheap English cloth; and it really reaches our markets at a lower rate of duty with this increase of labor upon it than it does in the condition of cloth in bulk. I hope the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will consent to the amendment which I offer; or, at any rate, I trust it will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I must oppose the amendment. The gentleman has not read the bill correctly. By referring to page 6, line twenty-five, he will find that cloth pays in addition to the specific an ad valorem duty of only thirty-five per cent. We do propose that these articles of ready-made clothing shall have more protection than the mere cloth; and five per cent. additional is what the committee have agreed upon. I trust that it will not be changed.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. In pursuance of the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, I move to amend by inserting at the end of line twenty-six, on page 6, the words "on endless belts or felts for paper or printing machines twenty cents per pound, and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem."

The CHAIRMAN. It will require unanimous consent to go back to that paragraph, which has been passed.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On Aubusson and Axminster carpets and carpets woven whole for rooms, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, wrought by the Jacquard machine, seventy cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on Brussels carpets wrought by the Jacquard machine, forty-four cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on patent velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, forty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on tapestry Brussels carpets printed on the warp or otherwise, twenty-eight cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on treble ingrain, three-ply, and worsted chain Venetian carpets, seventeen cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on yarn Venetian and two-ply ingrain carpets, twelve cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on druggets and bookings, printed, colored, or otherwise, twenty-five cents per square yard; on hemp or jute carpeting, eight cents per square yard; on carpets and carpetings of wool, flax, or cotton, or parts of either, or other material not otherwise herein specified, forty per cent. ad valorem; Provided, That mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsteads, and other portions of carpets or carpeting shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and that the duty on all other mats, (not exclusively of vegetable material), screens, hassocks, and rugs, shall be forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert, page 8, line sixty-seven, after the word "yard," the words "and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On oil-cloths for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, valued at fifty cents or less per square yard, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over fifty cents per square yard, and on all other oil-cloth, (except silk oil-cloth,) and on water-proof cloth, not otherwise provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem; on oil silk cloth, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say, on cotton, raw or unmanufactured, — cents per pound,

Mr. MORRILL. Of course it will be understood by the committee that the rate to be imposed must be the same as the rate imposed in the internal tax bill, and I move that the filling of the blank be reserved for the present.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all manufactures of cotton, (except jeans, denims, drillings, bed tickings, gingham, plaids, cottonades, pantaloons, stuffs, corset jeans, cantils, Marcellies, satteens, and goods of like description and for similar use,) not bleached, colored, stained, painted, or printed, five cents per square yard; if bleached, five and a half cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, five and a half cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all cottons above described exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, or weighing less than five ounces to the square yard, shall pay ten per cent. ad valorem in addition to the foregoing rates.

Mr. HALE. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to what seems to be an ambiguity in this paragraph. Is it the intention that the ten per cent. ad valorem in the fourteenth line shall apply to all of the items specified, or only to the last one? There is an ambiguity which I think should be corrected.

Mr. MORRILL. It is intended to apply only to the last one. It is the law as it now is, and there has been no trouble in regard to the construction.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all cotton jeans, denims, drillings, bed tickings, gingham, plaids, cottonades, pantaloons, stuffs, corset jeans, cantils, Marcellies, satteens, and goods of like description or for similar use, if unbleached, six cents per square yard; if bleached, six and a half cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, six and a half cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, fifteen per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all cottons above described exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, shall pay one cent per square yard in addition to the foregoing rates: And provided further, That no cotton yarn or piece goods shall be admitted at rates of duty less than forty per cent. ad valorem, if bleached, or at less than forty-five per cent. ad valorem, if colored, stained, painted, or printed.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On spool thread, of cotton, six cents per dozen spools, containing on each spool not exceeding one hundred yards of thread, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem; exceeding one hundred yards, for every additional one hundred yards of thread on each spool or fractional part thereof in excess of one hundred yards, six cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On cotton thread or yarn when advanced beyond single yarn by twisting two or more strands together, if not wound upon spools, forty cents per pound, and in addition thereto thirty-five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That loose floss, cotton thread, embroidery cotton, or mending cotton, shall be subject to a duty of twenty cents per pound, and in addition thereto thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on cotton yarns not advanced beyond singles, and not finer than number fifty, twenty cents per pound, and in addition thereto thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; when finer than number fifty, and not finer than number one hundred, forty cents per pound, and in addition thereto thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; when finer than number one hundred, fifty cents per pound, and in addition thereto thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the word "yarn" page 10, line forty-nine, the words "warp or wet."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On webbing, tapes, galloons, and bindings, plain or otherwise, and on braids, made of cotton or linen, or of cotton and linen, thirty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out "thirty cents per pound" and insert "one inch wide and under, sixty cents per pound, and on all that is over one inch wide twenty-five cents per pound;" so that it will read, "on webbing, tapes, galloons, and bindings, plain or otherwise, and on braids, made of cotton or linen, or of cotton and linen, one inch wide and under, sixty cents per pound, and on all that is over one inch wide, twenty-five cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem."

I simply wish to call the committee's attention to this amendment. All these narrow tapes are manufactured from yarn upon which there is a duty of forty cents per pound by this bill. Now, it is proposed to put a duty of only thirty cents per pound on this tape manufactured from the same article. By the amendment which I offer these narrow tapes, on which the labor is about five times as much as on the wide tapes, will have a greater protection. On the wider tapes I propose to reduce the duty to twenty-five cents, because they are made from coarser yarn and the labor is very much less. That is all the protection that is necessary for the coarse tapes. But when you come to these narrow tapes, which require the finest material and five or six times the amount of labor that the others do, clearly there should be a discrimination.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the gentleman is right, and I shall therefore offer no objection. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by adding after the word "thereto" the words "in each case."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On hosiery shirts and drawers, and on knit goods made wholly of cotton, not otherwise provided for, thirty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On cotton laces, insertings, gimps, and trimmings of every description, if exclusively of cotton or of cotton with linen, if not dyed or colored, forty per cent. ad valorem; if dyed or colored, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On cotton velvet, velveteen, corduroy, or other like manufactures, and on all manufactures of cotton, and of cotton with other materials, not otherwise provided for in this act, forty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That a distinct statement of the quantity, by yards, of all cotton velvets, velveteens, and like goods shall be made.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On ready-made clothing or wearing apparel of silk, or of which silk shall be a component material of chief value, made up wholly or in part, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On manufactures of cotton, linen, silk, wool, worsted or other material, if embroidered or tumbled in the loom or otherwise by machinery, or with the needle or other process, and of which the embroidering or tumbled is the chief value, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On all ribbons, beltings, galloons, hat bands, bindings, braids, fringes, gimps, cloak and dress trimmings, fancy buttons, cords, dress cords, tassels, cords and tassels, head-nets, head-dresses, neck-ties and scarfs, made of silk, or of which silk is a component material, seventy-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether it would be incompatible with other provisions of the bill to insert the words "cotton and woolen" after the word "silk," so that it will read, "made of silk, cotton, and woolen."

Mr. MORRILL. I think it would. We have already made a provision for these articles so far as worsted is concerned. If they are part cotton and part wool, they are provided for.

Mr. KELLEY. If they are of cotton; is there any provision for them? It is a growing branch of manufacture.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe there is.

The Clerk read as follows:

On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactures of cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for use in the manufacture of shoes, boots, and booties exclusively, not combined with India rubber, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the word "rubber," the words "and lastings in the piece."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactures of cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for use in the manufacture of buttons exclusively, not combined with India rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say: on flax, unmanufactured, twenty dollars per ton; on flax, hackled, known as dressed line, forty-five dollars per ton; on flax, of tow, five dollars per ton; on jute, unmanufactured, twenty dollars per ton; on burlaps, canvas paddings, cot bottoms, duck, and all manufactures of jute or of which jute is a component material of chief value, not herein otherwise provided for, three cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the words "manufacture of" the words "piece goods made of;" so that it will read, "manufactured of piece goods made of jute."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to strike out the words "three cents" and insert "two cents." This will reduce the cost of bagging required for wheat, oats, and other grain by the farmers in removing their crops. As we cannot supply this article ourselves, I think the duty ought to be lowered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all other manufactures of jute, or of which jute is a component material of chief value, not herein otherwise provided for, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. McRUER. I move to add the words "on Manila cordage untarred, three cents per pound." The present duty is two and a half cents, which, with the internal revenue tax, I contend is not a sufficient protection to enable us to compete with the cheap labor of Manila. I think the amendment will meet the approbation of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I suggest that the gentleman vary the language of his amendment so that it shall be "on cordage of Manila hemp untarred, three cents per pound."

Mr. McRUER. I accept the modification.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On gunny-cloth, gunny-bags, cotton bagging, or other manufactures not otherwise herein provided for, suitable for the uses to which cotton bagging is applied, composed wholly or in part of hemp, jute, flax, or other material valued at ten cents or less per square yard, three cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem; valued at over ten cents per square yard, four cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "thirty per cent." and insert "fifteen per cent.," and also to strike out "thirty-five per cent." and insert "twenty per cent."

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I rise to suggest to the chairman of the committee the expediency of striking out the ad valorem duty altogether. The article of gunny-bags and gunny-cloth is a very important one in American commerce, and the importation of it is confined almost entirely to American merchants. I understand the quantity now imported is hardly equal to the present increasing demands of the country for this class of merchandise, and many of the reasons assigned by the gentleman from Iowa for a reduction of duty in the section immediately preceding apply also to this. The present duty on gunny-cloth and gunny-bags is three cents a pound, amounting, as I understand, to six and three eighths cents per yard. Now, if this duty of thirty and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem be added it will be seen how enormous will be the duty on an article the value of which is but ten cents per yard. As there seems to me to be no good reason why this excessive burden should be put on this article, and as the public convenience will be promoted by striking it out, I hope the chairman of the committee will consent to modify his amendment by striking out the ad valorem duty altogether. If not, I will make the motion myself to strike out the words "and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem," and also the words "and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that that is not in order, because it proposes to strike out more than the original amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Then I ask the chairman of the committee to accept it.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order after the other amendment is disposed of.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Then I give notice that I shall offer it.

The amendment offered by Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I now move to amend this paragraph by striking out the words "and, in addition thereto, fifteen per cent. ad valorem," and also by striking out the words "and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Will my colleague [Mr. RICE] allow me to make a suggestion to him? That is, that if he will move to strike out the whole paragraph the duty will be left as it is under the existing tariff.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will accept the suggestion of my colleague, [Mr. HOOPER,] and move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The paragraph, as amended, was as follows:

On gunny-cloth, gunny-bags, and cotton bagging, or other manufactures not otherwise herein provided for, suitable for the uses to which cotton bagging is applied, composed wholly or in part of hemp, jute, flax, or other material valued at ten cents or less per square yard, three cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, fifteen per cent. ad valorem; valued at over ten cents per square yard, four cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HOGAN. If the House will indulge me a few moments, I will say that I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] and I hope it will be adopted. We neither make this article of gunny-cloth nor manufacture it into bags in this country. This gunny-cloth is absolutely necessary for bags in which to transport the grain of this country. I hope the old tariff, the one under existing laws, will be allowed to stand. There will be nothing gained by increasing the duty on this article except to put money in the pockets of some men who now have a large amount of this stuff on hand; and it will be a direct tax upon the people of the West.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HOGAN,] and also to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] that their purpose will not be accomplished by striking out this entire paragraph, for the reason that manufactures of jute are provided for in a different part of this bill. If they desire to accomplish their purpose they will have to move to reinstate the tariff as it is under the existing law.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Then I will withdraw the motion to strike out this paragraph, and I renew the amendment I first offered. That amendment is to strike out the words "and, in addition thereto, fifteen per cent. ad valorem;" and the words "and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On jute and coir, or cocoa-nut matting or carpeting, five cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On brown and bleached linen, damask table linen, brown Hollands, blay, coatings, crash, duck, drills, diapers and huckabucks, valued at thirty cents or less per square yard, six cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem; valued at over thirty cents and not over sixty cents per square yard, ten cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over sixty cents and not over one dollar per square yard, fifteen cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over one dollar per square yard, twenty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on all other manufactures of flax or linen, or of which flax or linen shall be a component material of chief value, not herein otherwise provided for, forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DODGE. I move to strike out the word "crash" in the second line of this paragraph. That is an article imported from Russia, and is consumed in large quantities in this country. It is imported to the extent of from four to five thousand bales a year. It is a very cheap article, and is much used by the poorer classes for toweling. It is made by the peasantry of Russia, and is an important article of commerce with that country. It measures about a half a yard in width, and now pays a duty of thirty-five per cent. This paragraph contemplates throughout articles of the width of a full yard, and under its operations this article of crash would pay about one hundred and forty per cent. per square yard. I move to strike out the word "crash," so that the duty may remain as at present, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not rise so much for the purpose of opposing the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DODGE,] as of making an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. I have endeavored to ascertain from an examination of the table that has been printed and laid upon our desks, what the duties upon these various articles are under the existing tariff. But I find that it is almost impossible to determine that question by an examination of that table. Now, I desire to know from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] how much this bill increases the duties upon the articles enumerated in this paragraph over the duties upon them under the existing tariff. I had supposed that we could ascertain the amount of present duty from this table. But this bill is, I find, drafted in many respects so differently from the act now in force, that it is almost impossible, without a great deal of care and study upon each provision, to ascertain what changes have been made. And therefore I ask for this information.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I will say, in response to the gentleman, that under the existing law the duty on these goods when valued at thirty cents or less per yard is thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; when valued at more than thirty cents per pound, the duty is forty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then the increase is six cents per pound.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last letter of the word "crash." I make this motion merely for the sake of saying a word in reference to the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DODGE,] I agree with him that the word "crash" ought to be stricken out, and the duty upon that article left as it is now. In fact, I am in favor of more moderate duties than those reported by the committee upon nearly all the articles imported from Russia. During the rebellion Russia was our only friend among the great Powers of Europe. Yet by this proposed tariff we have stricken at her manufactures in greater proportion than those of any other country. Gentlemen will find it to be a fact that, under the operation of the present tariff law, the duties are so high upon Russian products that our trade with Russia has greatly decreased. The importations from that country into this are at the present time less than half what they were formerly. If this bill be adopted in the form reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, it will operate almost as a total prohibition of our trade with that country. If this is to be the policy of the Government toward the productive industry of Russia, then extend it to other countries to whom we owe less than to that country.

As the gentleman from New York has stated, the duty upon crash under this bill will be nearly one hundred and forty per cent. It must be obvious that this would amount to a positive prohibition of the importation of this article. Certainly this cannot be intended. This article, as has been observed, is used to a large extent by all classes, including the poorest people in the community. And this is another reason why an excessively high duty should not be imposed. I trust, therefore, that the motion of the gentleman from New York will prevail. I dislike to go against the views of the committee, and I do not know what may have been their views or the information upon which they acted in reporting in favor of the rate of duty proposed in the bill. Whatever may have been their reasons, I should like to hear them. All my information is against the proposition, and I cannot but think they are misled. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew the amendment to the amendment for the purpose of saying a word or two in relation to this subject. I have no objection to the motion of the gentleman from New York, provided this article be inserted in some other part of the bill, so that it will be subjected to the duty which he designs shall be imposed upon it.

I will say, in relation to this subject, that previous to 1861 all linens imported into this country bore a duty of only fifteen per cent., while cotton goods, used by the laboring classes of the North, were subjected to a duty of thirty per cent. The tariff of 1861, and the laws which have since been enacted as amendments, have been framed with the view of raising up, if possible, the manufacture of linens in this country and creating here a demand for the hemp and flax that are raised in this country. I know that in some portions of the West flax is raised purely for the seed; whereas, if those who raise it would cultivate it for the fiber, they would realize more than double the profit per acre on their land than they obtain by devoting it merely to the raising of seed.

Under the laws to which I have referred and other laws allowing machinery for the manufacture of flax to come into the country free of duty various experiments have been made, some of which have been successful and some not. But it is a branch of manufacture eminently deserving of the fostering care of the Government. The duties proposed in this bill will upon some articles increase the amount of protection, while upon others there will be actually a reduction. The present rate of duty, as I have already stated, is thirty-five per cent. ad valorem upon goods valued at thirty cents or less per yard, and forty per cent. upon articles valued at more than thirty cents per yard. Gentlemen will readily perceive that the ad valorem reduction of ten per cent. on those articles costing more than thirty cents per yard will make the rate of duty on goods costing less than seventy-five cents lower than that fixed by the present law. On goods valued at fifty cents the duty will be one cent per yard more than the present duty. On articles of a still lower price the increase of duty and of protection will be greater. I think the proposition introduced by the Committee of Ways and Means is nothing more than reasonable. It is nothing like what is demanded by the manufacturers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise for the purpose of stating an amendment I intend to offer when the pending amendment is disposed of. I design on all low-priced linen to strike out six per cent. per square yard and increase the ad valorem duty to thirty-five per cent. It is thirty-five under the existing law. This is a most exorbitant increase of the rate of duty on these goods. They are goods generally used by the middle and poorer classes of the people of the country. A small proportion of these goods consumed, an exceedingly small one, are manufactured in this country. They are almost exclusively brought from abroad. I do not think in relation to goods of that kind it is designed to protect our manufacturers, and we should not put these enormous duties on the importation of these goods.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say the manufacturers of the country are making a great mistake in pressing upon this House a bill which proposes this enormous increase of duties. I am satisfied the manufacturers of this country need not so much this increase of duty as they do stability in the law levying duties on imports. Let the manufacturers of this country know what they are to depend on so they can make investments and conduct business in pursuance of the interests they have, and they will be a great deal safer under the present laws of the United States than when we are constantly changing our import duties.

There are a great many features in this bill to which this objection of mine will apply; and I am apprehensive they will operate as much, if not more, to the benefit of those who are holding the enormous stock of goods now in this country as to the manufacturers themselves. The result will be, as I apprehend, at the next session of Congress, after the benefit has been derived by those holding the enormous stock of goods at the present time, an effort will be made to reduce the duty, and we will probably swing to the other extreme. It is better to support the present system of duty and to notify the manufacturers of the country there is to be some stability in the law, than that there is to be a change at every recurring session of Congress. I not only hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New York will prevail, but that he will follow it up so as to bring this bill as near to the present law as possible.

I desire to submit another consideration to the House, and it is this: by pressing the duties to the high standard proposed in this bill very many sections of the country, now disposed to protect properly and equitably our manufacturing interests, will be driven to the other extreme, and the manufacturers will find the great body of the population of those sections, instead of as now favoring protection, driven into free-trade ideas. There is more danger from reaction to the manufacturing interests than from letting them rest upon the basis of the present law. I give that warning to gentlemen who are asking us to make these enormous rates; I give them the warning so that they may know when the storm comes hereafter it is the result of their own action and not the design of any portion of the people of the country to injure or cripple our manufacturing interests. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York will be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to find a gentleman of the sagacity and talents of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] still adhering to his opposition to the protection of American industry. He seems determined that the raw material of the West shall be shipped in bulk to feed the workshops of Europe, and that we shall take their manufactures in return for it instead of building up a home market here in the United States to consume this raw material, thus saving the heavy expense of transportation. I had hoped the time had arrived for building up in every neighborhood, in every portion of the country, a market for our home products. We have long enough been tributary to the pauper labor of Europe, and we have long enough been deluded by the idle idea that when we put protection upon articles manufactured in this country we injure the consumers here.

Sir, every man who has studied the subject must know that in every country the time comes when it is proper that manufactures should spring up all over the country and home products should be consumed there. I had hoped that the great West, with its great interests, its flourishing cities, its noble soil, had reached a time when we were to see all through the valley of the Mississippi great manufacturing cities, such as adorn all similar places in Europe, which consume not only their home products, but send them abroad, especially to young nations; and I am astonished to find that any gentleman possessing the talent of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] should still adhere to the old notion, and insist upon sending the products of the West, its sheep, bullocks, corn, beef, and everything of that kind to England for the purpose of purchasing those articles they need. Sir, I did not intend to say a word upon the subject of the tariff; but when I heard such antiquated doctrines, which are so erroneous, sent forth to the country by so able a gentleman, I thought it proper to say a word.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have often heard the same argument made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is not new. He charges me with expressing antiquated ideas. It may be that he has been uttering sentiments of the same character himself. Now, I could understand, while the war was in progress, and we were incurring debts every day, why there should be protection in customs duties; but now that the war is over; now that we are reducing the volume of our national receipts; now, when we have just passed an internal revenue act, which we were told by the Committee of Ways and Means would reduce the revenue $75,000,000, I cannot understand why we should be asked to go on and increase the duties on imports to the enormous extent provided in this bill. I am quite as anxious as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] can be to have manufactures established all over the beautiful country in which I reside; I desire to see the Mississippi and its tributaries lined from its source to its mouth with manufacturing establishments, which will make that portion of the country great, prosperous, and wealthy. But, sir, I do not desire to do that at the expense of what I believe to be sound policy on the part of our country.

I have asked the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to tell me how much the duty provided for in this section increases the duties levied under the existing tariff. I have not received an answer from him; but I have received an answer from another source; not from an outsider, not from a manufacturer, but from a member of this House, who is well informed in relation to this subject, and he tells me that the increase under this paragraph will amount to one or two hundred per cent. And yet we are told that it is necessary for us to have that increase of duty, in order that we may not send our raw material to Russia to be manufactured there and brought back to us, and that we shall have a home market. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania expect the consumers of the country, who are to pay these exorbitantly increased rates under the duty now proposed to be laid for the purpose of sustaining the theory which he has advanced here to-day of building up at some future time manufactures of these particular articles? Not at all. While we take care of the interests of the manufacturer, we must take care, also, of the people who are to buy the goods they manufacture, and who are to pay these exorbitant rates of import duty. If we do that the consumer will not quarrel with the manufacturer, and the manufacturer will have no cause to quarrel with the consumer. I protest against the imposition of import duties ranging from one to two hundred per cent.; and I stand here to-day a better friend of the manufacturing interest than some who claim to be its special champions. I ask the House to give stability to the law in reference to this matter, and not to be constantly changing it.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise in order to terminate debate upon this paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the special order shall close in three minutes after the committee resumes the consideration of the same.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] would be a very good one if it were only applied in the right place. I think it does not apply to the paragraph now in question. Now, sir, certainly these goods manufactured here are not consumed by the poorer classes. They are such articles as the gentleman comes here clothed in on hot days; they are such articles as table linen and diaper; and the effect of the gentleman's amendment would be to give no protection at all to these goods, and to strike down the infant manufacture of flax in the western country, in which the State of Iowa is largely interested. The amount of increase on these articles is extremely small, and I hope that when the gentleman comes to offer his amendment it will be voted down.

The question was taken on Mr. DODGE's amendment, to strike out the word "crash;" and on a division, there were—ayes fifty, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE. I now move to amend, on page 14, line forty-four, by inserting the words "crash, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. KASSON. I would ask the gentleman if that is not already included in line thirty-one of that section, which reads, "on brown and bleached linen, damask table linen, brown Hollands, blay, coatings, crash, duck, drills," &c.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now move to amend the paragraph by striking out, in lines thirty-two and thirty-three, the words "six cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto," and to insert after the word "thirty" in the thirty-third line the word "five;" so that it will read, "on brown and bleached linen, damask table linen, brown Hollands, blay, coatings, crash, duck, drills, diapers, and huckabucks, valued at thirty cents per square yard, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem." That will leave the duty as it now is.

The amendment was disagreed to—ayes 40, noes 53.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now move to amend the section by striking out, in the thirty-second line, the word "six" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three," so as to make the duty upon these goods three cents per square yard.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On seines or nets made of flax or hemp thread, yarn, or twine, completed or in parts, valued at not over seventy-five cents per pound, fifteen cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over seventy-five cents per pound, twenty-five cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On fish lines of linen, or twines of linen suitable for fish lines, valued at $2 50 or less per pound, forty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over $2 50 per pound, sixty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On flax thread, linen thread, saddlers' thread, shoe thread, gill-net thread or gill-net twine, and pack thread and sewing-machine thread, valued at seventy-five cents or less per pound, ten cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over seventy-five cents and not over $1 50 per pound, twenty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over $1 50 per pound, thirty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment was offered.

Mr. HALE. I move to insert a new paragraph, to follow the one last read by the Clerk. It is as follows:

On yarns of flax or hemp, or on tow of flax or hemp, valued at seventy-five cents or less per pound, eight cents per pound; valued over seventy-five and not over one hundred and fifty cents per pound, seven cents per pound; valued over one hundred and fifty cents per pound, twenty-seven cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, in each case thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

In looking over this bill, it seems to me that the Committee of Ways and Means have committed an oversight in omitting to provide for the case of yarns, so as to protect the spinner in reasonable proportion to the other manufacturers of flax, hemp, &c. The amendment which I have offered covers the case of yarns, which are largely imported for the manufacture of thread, twine, seines, nettings, carpets, &c. It seems to me we should not discriminate in favor of foreign labor, so far as the production of these yarns is concerned, which I think we certainly will do without the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BANKS. I do not rise particularly to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE,] because I desire that some provision of the kind therein proposed should be adopted. I think the manufacturers of this country suffer a serious injury from the fact that yarns are imported into this country, which importation interferes with our own manufacturers. And I trust the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will be willing to accept some provision of this kind. I was engaged upon a committee of conference, when the Committee of the Whole passed upon the first article embraced in this section, being unmanufactured flax, upon which this bill proposes to impose a duty of twenty dollars per ton, or an increase of twenty-five per cent. of the present duty upon unmanufactured flax imported into this country. Manufacturers of flax thread cannot use American flax alone, though they can use it in great part; but they are obliged to use to some extent imported flax. There are but very few districts in Europe where flax is grown that is of the right quality and character to be used in the manufacture of flax thread. Now, in addition to the duty that manufacturers have to pay on this article, and which impedes the manufacture of flax thread in this country, some manufacturers in some parts of the country, as suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE,] import yarns at a low rate of duty, thus injuring the manufacture of flax thread.

Now, I trust that after the amendment of the gentleman from New York has been disposed of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will allow me to go back to the clause relating to unmanufactured flax for the purpose of reinstating the present rate of duty, which is sixteen dollars per ton, instead of twenty dollars per ton, as proposed by this bill. I ask this because I was detained from the House by service upon a committee of conference when this subject was under consideration.

Mr. MORRILL. I think I must object to going back to that clause.

Mr. HALE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that he permit the question to be reserved upon the amendment I have offered, together with the subject to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] has referred, with the privilege of going back hereafter.

Mr. MORRILL. As there might be some injustice done by adopting such a proposition as this without fully understanding it, I will not object to the vote upon it being reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. LE BLOND. I object to reserving anything.

Mr. BANKS. Then I request to be allowed to propose an amendment to the clause in relation to unmanufactured flax. I was engaged upon a committee of conference at the moment it was passed, and returning a few moments afterward, I was unable to make the proposition in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question must be first taken upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.] The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I now ask leave to offer the amendment I have suggested, and that action upon it be reserved for the present.

Mr. MORRILL. I am satisfied that if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] fully understood the subject to which he refers, he would not go back.

Mr. BANKS. That is what I want; I want to be instructed, and that is why I ask that action be reserved for the present. I was away from my place in performance of a duty assigned me by the House; and therefore I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MORRILL. I must object.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman not consent to have action on it reserved for the present?

Mr. MORRILL. I must object to that also.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereinafter enumerated, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say: on iron in pigs, nine dollars per ton.

Mr. BUNDY. I move to strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "ten," so as to make the duty on pig iron ten dollars per ton. I make this motion for the reason that I am satisfied the duty of nine dollars per ton is not a sufficient duty on pig iron. I have come to that conclusion from a very intimate knowledge of the iron business during the past few years. Under the operation of the present tariff, according to data furnished by the British Trade Circular, during the month of November last, there was enough pig iron imported into this country last year to equal the production of one half of all the blast furnaces in the country for nearly, if not quite, a year. To my certain knowledge the manufacturers of pig iron have been losing money for ten or twelve years, with the exception of one or two years. Besides that, the duty on pig iron is not in proportion to the duty on any other description of iron. Neither is it in proportion to the duty on anything else for which this bill provides a duty. I hope, therefore, that the Committee of Ways and Means will consent that this addition of one dollar shall be made. I make this motion with the view of carrying out in future the idea of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] that is, that we shall have stability in regard to the duty on iron.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman inform us how much we have reduced the internal duty on pig iron?

Mr. BUNDY. About two dollars and forty cents per ton. With that duty, forty-five furnaces in my district made no money at all last year, but in the majority of cases they lost money to the extent of the internal duty which they paid. Now, so far as I am concerned, I do not speak for the manufacturers. I do not care anything about the matter, although I am a manufacturer. The manufacturer and the capitalist can get along with or without the duty; but the effects of this fall directly upon the man who digs the iron, the man who chops the wood, and the man who burns the coal. I have seen, during the last ten or twelve years, enough suffering in the districts where pig iron is manufactured to induce me, by every consideration, to try and have that manufacture protected to an extent sufficient to furnish employment to our own people, and not only employment, but a fair day's wages for a fair day's work. It is a very great mistake to suppose that because we ask protection for the manufacture of any article the expense of the article to the consumer is thereby increased. Take, if you please, the report which I hold in my hand for the month of November last as the criterion by which to judge of the whole year's importation of iron from Europe. During the last twelve months there was enough pig iron imported into this country to keep ninety blast furnaces fully employed. These ninety furnaces can furnish employment for at least fifty-four thousand persons, and these fifty-four thousand persons will consume forty-five thousand barrels of flour and nine thousand barrels of pork every year, to say nothing about beef and everything else. Therefore, I say, the stopping of these ninety furnaces, kept idle by the importation of pig iron last year, has prevented the employment of this large number of persons and the consumption of this vast amount of our own produce.

We do not ask, Mr. Chairman, that protection shall be furnished for the mere protection of our manufacturers, but we do ask it for the men who are employed at these manufactories; and until we come up to that point we will suffer under the same rule which we have been following for the last few years.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to say I am in favor of the amendment of my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. One speech already has been made in favor of the amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. Well, then, I will say I am opposed to the amendment because I wish a higher rate; and when I get through with the few remarks I have to make I will suggest an improvement in the motion of my colleague.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say I am in favor now and at all times in this House of the highest rate of protection to American industry in every shape in which you may bring it forward. I do not limit it to coal or iron or oil; but I go in the most extensive manner for the highest rate of protection to American industry. We are now considering the article of pig iron. I think we should raise the duty on iron imported in every shape; and while I advocate this increased rate of tariff I beg to have read as a part of my argument an extract from a recent number of the London Times; and I ask the attention of the committee to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

"WOLVERHAMPTON, Saturday.

"The demand for iron keeps very steady, orders coming in day by day, and they are pressed for completion. The improvement in the trade with the United States is more decided, and iron-masters having agencies there are sanguine of a heavy spring trade with that country. Stocks are low at New York, and requirements for the restoration of railways and all commercial plant very large. The only drawback is that the American iron-works are far from being well employed, and they are striving earnestly to get the heavy import duties further raised, but it is hoped that southern votes will on that question counteract New England in Congress. Railway orders are large, and the Lancashire and Yorkshire are in the market for five thousand tons. The demand for hardwares is improving steadily."

Mr. SPALDING. I do not think I can add to the force of the argument contained in that extract. It shows us that the iron-works of the United States are not well employed, and that in reference to the increase of duties necessary for the protection and safety of our own interests the British iron interest hopes to defeat it by the votes of those who have been in rebellion against this Government in opposition to the votes of the loyal States who have upheld and preserved it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to amend by striking out "nine" and inserting "two;" and I do this, Mr. Chairman, in good faith. I do it because I believe the great interests of the American people demand it. And I confess I cannot understand the argument of my colleague who offered the first amendment. He contends these foundry men have been suffering; that they have been losing money for the last ten years. Now, I think that class of manufacturers throughout the country like to be ruined in the manner the gentleman has stated. They have been declaring large dividends, and why it is, when this particular interest has been losing money for the last ten years, these men should continue in the business is, I confess, a mystery to me. But I do not believe that they have been losing money. The gentleman closed by saying he does not care for a high tariff on pig iron, because it does not inure to the benefit of these men. But he says that the injury falls upon the wood-chopper and the worker in iron. Well, if that is true, and I think it is altogether probable in part, this tariff is not going to help them; for if you make it four times as large they will still grind the faces of those who toil in the coal-bed, and put the additional bounty in the pockets of the manufacturer. I never knew the manufacturing interest become liberal toward those they employ, but the more margin you give them the more money it puts into their pockets, while they keep the laboring class just where they always were.

Now, I wish this House to take some decided action upon this question. You are trying to inaugurate a protective system. Years ago the people of the United States settled this question, and they settled it in favor of a tariff for revenue alone. But now when gentlemen rise for the purpose of advocating a proposition in regard to tariff duty it is with a view of protecting something in which they are particularly interested. Sir, the people have fought this battle and settled it, as I said before, in favor of a revenue tariff. The Congress of 1862, under the then disturbed condition of the country, adopted a plan of raising revenue for protection alone, and not for the purpose of raising revenue, and this bill provides a further increase; and the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] even denounces this bill as a free-trade bill. Great God! If he calls this a free-trade bill I would like to know what he would call a protective bill. Sir, this question of iron is one that interests every single man in the whole country. They are all interested in having it cheap, and as cheap as it can possibly be produced. I am satisfied that the duty that is laid in this bill on everything in the shape of iron, and I might say, the same of almost every provision in this bill, is only for the purpose of prohibiting the importation of these articles, and inflicting that much penalty upon the consuming class.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McKEE. Mr. Chairman, upon this question of a duty on iron, and upon all other questions pertaining to the general subject of a tariff, I am willing and anxious to go for the very highest duties that are necessary to protect every branch of our industry. I do it not alone with a view of building up our manufacturing interests, but, as has been well said by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUNDY], of giving employment to the men who are engaged by these various manufacturing establishments, in order that they may be well clothed and fed. We need protective duties not for revenue alone but in order that we may build up on our own soil manufacturing establishments by which we may manufacture everything that is necessary for our use, so that our own people may not be dependent upon foreign countries for their supplies. This policy I consider of prime necessity.

In regard to the article of iron, I wish to make this statement, that in my own district, which has a considerable interest in the question, fifteen years ago the manufacture of iron was quite an active business. Before the war nine tenths of the capital invested in the manufacture of iron—and we manufactured pig-metal iron alone—had been taken out of the business. It was completely broken down. The war itself only reestablished the business in part. During the last year and a half pig metal has been imported from Europe and sold upon the Ohio river, within sight of the very smoke of our furnaces, at four dollars per ton less than they could manufacture it, thereby crushing them out and preventing them from engaging in the business at all. And it is so in reference to all other branches of our industry, and will be so unless the duty is made sufficient to enable the manufacturers to renew their work. Unless you put upon this single item of pig metal alone a sufficient tariff to enable the manufacturers to go on with their work, all the capital invested in the valley of the Ohio must be withdrawn and go into something else, and thus thousands of people heretofore engaged in the business will be thrown out of employment.

Now, sir, I think the duty is too low. I should like to see it increased three dollars per ton over what it is; but as the gentleman from Ohio has moved to increase it only one dollar, if the House will agree to that I shall be content. For myself, however, let me say that I will go for the highest possible duty, and I hope the House will increase it as proposed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate upon the pending paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOTFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the subject of pig iron shall be terminated in three minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the same.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SCOTFIELD in the chair) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire merely to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] in relation to the wages paid by our manufacturers for labor. He is certainly very much mistaken in supposing that the manufacturers of this country do not pay their employés liberally. Why, sir, women employed in manufactories in this country get more wages than men do abroad. And in connection with this iron interest, there is no branch of the business where the laborers of this country do not receive at least double what is paid to laborers for similar work in England. With the exception of skilled labor, the laborers in the iron foundries of this country receive three times as much as foreign laborers do; and in regard to those engaged in the manufacture of silk goods our workmen receive four or five times as much as similar laborers do abroad.

Mr. BUNDY. As I stated before, my reason for proposing a tax of ten dollars was that I believed that the committee might agree to that. I do not wish to make any further remarks upon this subject, but I wish to have read a brief extract, which I send to the Clerk's desk, from Ryland's British Iron Trade Circular, received by the last steamer.

The Clerk read as follows:

"There is no prospect of the demand from the United States subsiding, at any rate until the orders for the spring trade are in and have been placed. The increase that has been going on assumes an extraordinary character, as evidenced by the returns of the Board of Trade, the figures of which were given in full, according to the usual custom, in our last circular. Of pig and puddled iron, in November, 1863, we supplied 3,402 tons; in 1864, 380 tons; and in the same month of 1865, 12,120. Of railroad iron at the same dates, 8,734,097, and 7,141 tons; but the month of December will show singularly larger returns in this direction, as our Cardiff and Liverpool reports have testified in each number. Our present Liverpool report, for instance, shows an export of 1,857 tons of pig iron, 1,154 tons of bars, 100 tons of hoops, 62 bags, 37 casks of nails, 52 tons rod, 64 tons of sheets, 4 tons of wire, 341 packages of hardware, £4,700 value of machinery, and 12,850 boxes of tin-plates to the United States in six days, from the 22d to the 28th of December."

The question was taken on Mr. LE BLOND's amendment, to strike out "nine" and insert "two" in lieu thereof, and it was disagreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUNDY, there were—ayes 55, noes 42.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. INGERSOLL and BUNDY were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 46.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. A number of articles made of cast iron have been, by an oversight, omitted from the bill. To supply the omission I move the following amendment:

Insert after line five of section five the following: On vessels of cast iron not herein otherwise provided for, and on andirons, sad-irons, tailors' and hatters' irons, stoves and stove-plates of cast iron, two and a quarter cents per pound; on glazed, tinned, or enameled cast-iron hollow-ware, four and a half cents per pound; on tinned and enameled wrought-iron hollow-ware, six and a half cents per pound; on cast-iron steam, gas, water pipe, two cents per pound; on cast-iron butts and hinges, three cents per pound; on all other castings of iron not herein otherwise provided for, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means how these rates compare with those of the present tariff.

Mr. MORRILL. On stove-plates, sad-irons, hollow-ware, made of cast iron, the present rate of duty is one cent and a half per pound. On wrought-iron hollow-ware, tin, glazed or enameled, the present duty is three and a half cents per pound.

Mr. KASSON. I am in favor of continuing the rates established by the present tariff. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On bars rolled or hammered, comprising flat bars not less than one and a half inch wide, nor more than four inches wide, nor less than half an inch thick, nor more than two inches thick, one cent and a quarter per pound.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by striking out in the last line of the paragraph just read the word "quarter" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "half," so that the duty shall be "one cent and a half per pound."

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee of the Whole, in sustaining the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUNDY] in regard to pig iron, adopted what is understood to have been the recommendation of the revenue commission. A schedule of duties upon iron was agreed upon by the iron manufacturers of this country as the very lowest rates under which they could possibly run their mills. This schedule, as I understand, (though I have not the right to speak positively on the question,) received the approval of the revenue commission. The rates named in this schedule have been reviewed, and almost uniformly reduced, by the Committee of Ways and Means. The votes already taken indicate, I believe, the sense of the House that in making this reduction the Committee of Ways and Means has erred, and that we ought to adopt the very moderately increased rates approved by the revenue commission. If this amendment shall be adopted, I shall propose a change in a portion at least of the other provisions, so as to make the rates of duty on the various articles correspond with the rates recommended by the revenue commission.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of opposing this amendment. I may remark that I do not expect to offer another word during the consideration of this tariff bill. I am satisfied from the votes which have already been taken that no change for the better can be effected in this bill. I am convinced that no change can be made that will result to the benefit of the consumers throughout the country. There is an evident determination in this House to frame and enact a tariff that is calculated to exclude importations in order to benefit the manufacturing interests alone.

Now, sir, I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to an important consideration intimately connected with this bill. In the first place you inaugurate a protective system. The Government must be carried on; and in order to keep the wheels of the Government in motion you must have revenue. How do you raise it? After you have adopted a high protective tariff, which to a great extent excludes importations and thus largely diminishes the revenue from imports, you turn round, and in your internal revenue law, tax the very last dollar of the people, drawing from them every cent that you can from every possible source. The consumers of the country are already very heavily taxed in a direct form; yet you adopt a bill which operates to exclude importations and increase the price of almost every article which the laboring classes necessarily and largely consume. This will doubtless operate very nicely for the manufacturing interests of the East; but as a western man, representing western interests, I feel it my duty, as I conceive it to be the duty of every western man, to oppose this bill in every possible way.

Sir, look at the free list which has been adopted in our internal revenue bill. Does it inure to the benefit of the West? Does it benefit any western man, except with regard to two or three articles? Why, sir, that long list inures almost exclusively to the benefit of the State of New York and the New England States. I know that, with regard to the subject of iron, my Democratic friends from Pennsylvania do not stand with me upon this question, but, in taking the attitude which they do, they, in my opinion, stand in opposition to the great interests of the American people. The sentiment of the masses in this country is averse to the principle of laying high duties for the purpose of protecting the manufacturing interests alone. Gentlemen here, in their action on this bill, put out of view entirely the question of raising revenue from imports. All their arguments are based upon the idea of protecting the manufacturing interests. How many, I would ask, do they benefit by this system, in comparison with the number that they embarrass and cripple?

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman wish an answer?

Mr. LE BLOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Answering for my own district, I would say at least ninety-nine out of every hundred, and I think nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand.

Mr. LE BLOND. Does the gentleman mean to say that that is the proportion of those benefited by a high protective tariff?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LE BLOND. Well, I presume that the gentleman lives in an iron district, where almost all the people are miners or workers of ore. If that is the case, I am not surprised at his statement. There are, I doubt not, many other gentlemen interested in the same way and who vote in the same manner. But if gentlemen will go among the masses of the American people and ask them whether they are in favor of a high protective tariff, or of a tariff for revenue alone, I think that gentlemen will not be able to misunderstand the response which the people will give to such an inquiry.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] is usually facetious in his remarks in this House; but I think he has been more successful in his last effort than I have known him to be on any previous occasion. He would seem to intimate that the free list in the internal revenue bill was made specially for the benefit of New England. Why, sir, no gentleman in the House can be unaware of the fact that that list was carried entirely by gentlemen from the West. They had it all their own way. In fact, if a New England man would have any chance at all under that bill, it would be necessary for him to remove into Ohio or west of the Mississippi.

Mr. LE BLOND. If the gentleman from Vermont would come to the West, we would convert him in a very short time to liberal principles.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, sir, in relation to this very article, iron, New England would be very glad to have no duties at all upon it. It is for the protection of the Ohio, Kentucky, and Missouri interests that the duties are to be increased.

But, Mr. Chairman, in all soberness on this subject, we ought to consider it fairly. In the internal revenue bill we did take off the duty on pig iron; we also removed it upon coal; we also removed it upon freights. The rate proposed by the committee, therefore, was thought to be reasonable, and I hope it will be retained.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a single question. I understand him to say, by his remarks, that he is in favor of a revenue tariff, but not of a protective tariff.

Mr. LE BLOND. That is it.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman says I understand him correctly. I take it, a revenue tariff must be levied on the manufactured article or on the raw material. I would ask the gentleman upon which he prefers it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I should have an ad valorem tariff on everything imported, and let that operate as a protection, as it would incidentally.

Mr. DAWES. He prefers an ad valorem duty. I understand the experience of everybody has proved an ad valorem duty is the very best possible method in which the tariff can be defrauded; but I do not understand the gentleman is in favor of it for that reason.

Mr. LE BLOND. We will have honest men in those days.

Mr. DAWES. The duty must be levied on the raw material or on the manufactured article. If you levy it on the raw material you discriminate against American labor, and if you levy it on the manufactured article you discriminate in favor of American labor. You must have either a protective tariff or a tariff which discriminates against American labor. I understand the gentleman from Ohio to be in favor of that which discriminates against American labor, and there I leave him.

Mr. LE BLOND. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order on the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall move that the committee rise unless it be agreed that debate shall terminate on this subject of bar iron.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment. The question recurred on Mr. HALE's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 54.

Mr. HALE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HALE and ORTH were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 59.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On bars rolled or hammered, comprising flat bars less than one and a half inches and more than four inches wide, and less than one half of an inch thick, and not thinner than one fourth of an inch, one and three quarters cents per pound; on bars rolled or hammered, comprising all sizes thinner than one fourth of an inch and not thinner than number eight wire gauge, two cents per pound; on all sizes hoop, band, or other descriptions of iron, thinner than number eight wire gauge, two and one half cents per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On bars or rods, round or square, not less than seven eighths of an inch diameter or square, nor more than two inches diameter or square, one and one quarter cent per pound.

Mr. HALE moved in line twenty-two to strike out "one quarter" and insert "one half."

The CHAIRMAN stated that debate was not in order.

Mr. MOORHEAD hoped the amendment would be adopted and demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MOORHEAD and COOK were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-one, noes not counted.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On bars or rods, round or square, less than seven eighths of an inch diameter or square, and more than two inches diameter or square, and not less than nine sixteenths of an inch round or square, one and three-fourths cents per pound; on bars or rods, round or square, less than nine sixteenths of an inch diameter or square, and not less than five sixteenths of an inch diameter or square, two cents per pound; on rods less than five sixteenths of an inch diameter or square, and less than number nine wire gauge, two and a half cents per pound; on rods less than number nine wire gauge, three cents per pound; on all sizes of nail rods, slit or rolled, two and a half cents per pound; on all sizes, oval, half oval, and half round iron, two and a half cents per pound; on all sizes of plate iron, not thinner than number ten wire gauge, two cents per pound; on sheet or plate iron thinner than number ten wire gauge, and not thinner than number eighteen wire gauge, two and one fourth cents per pound; on sheet or plate iron thinner than number eighteen wire gauge, and not thinner than number twenty-two wire gauge, two and one half cents per pound; on sheet or plate iron thinner than number twenty-two wire gauge, two and three fourths cents per pound; on polished sheet iron, of all descriptions, four cents per pound; on iron hoops, cut to uniform length or lengths, fit for use, all sizes and descriptions, two and three fourths cents per pound.

On iron of any description less finished than bars, and more advanced than pig, blooms, slabs, or muck bar, one cent per pound: Provided, That all iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms, less finished than bars and more advanced than pig iron, except castings, shall pay one and a quarter cent per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] has suggested an ambiguity about the last paragraph, and I therefore move to strike out all after the word "on" in the first line down to and including the word "that," and also to strike out the words "shall pay;" so that it will read, "on all iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms, less finished than bars and more advanced than pig iron, except castings, one and a quarter cent per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE. I move to amend on page seventeen, line fifty, the paragraph in regard to polished sheet iron.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have passed that, and it will require unanimous consent to go back.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

On iron of any size or description, not included, embraced, or enumerated in this act, one and three fourths of a cent per pound; on chains or cables or parts of cables or chain, made of iron rods more than five eighths of an inch in diameter, three cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert before the word "chains" where it first occurs the words "anchors or;" so that it will read, "on anchors, or on chains or cables, or parts of cables."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to strike out the words "three cents" and insert "two cents;" so that it will read, "on anchors, or on chains or cables or parts of cables or chains, made of iron-rods more than five eighths of an inch in diameter, two cents per pound." The present duty on anchors is two and a quarter cents, and on chains two and a half cents. I suppose this will be ordinarily about one hundred per cent. ad valorem. I am not aware what the present price is, but in ordinary times they make chains in England for three or four cents a pound, and frequently less. Therefore two and a half cents a pound duty is nearly one hundred per cent. I do not know why this increased rate of three cents per pound is proposed. These chains are used for ships that have no protection in this tariff bill or any other. You oblige ships to pay enormously for a protection in which they do not share. Your ship goes into the port of New York or Liverpool upon the precise terms in every particular upon which an English ship goes there. Your own ship gets no advantage whatever. And now the proposition is that the ship-owner shall pay to the Pennsylvania iron manufacturer one hundred per cent. ad valorem for the purpose of fitting out his vessel with anchors and cables. I protest that this is wrong. Canada, which is as protective in its way as we are, remits all duties on articles that go into a ship. At the proper time I shall propose the same thing. But it does seem to me that while we protect one interest we should not, for the purpose of exaggerating that protection, sacrifice another and equally important one. And now, while in our internal revenue law we are lessening the burden on iron, when we can produce it cheaper under the present internal revenue bill, why should we enlarge the foreign duties? I hope the Committee of Ways and Means will make no opposition to this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I always like to see a gentleman vigilant in relation to the interest of his constituents, and my friend from Maine is never lacking in that particular.

Mr. PIKE. Neither is my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. MORRILL. In relation to this matter the gentleman is very slightly mistaken. In the first place ships are protected because we do not allow foreign ships to come here and get American registers at all. In the next place they are protected because foreign ships are not permitted to engage in our coasting trade. And I will say in regard to this very article that the last time I knew anything about its manufacture the tariff was raised specially to favor an establishment in the State of Maine struggling for life. We were glad to see that there was one single establishment in the whole country that needed protection in the manufacture of the article, and that that establishment was in the State of Maine.

Another thing connected with this matter. It is well that these articles should be protected even for the benefit of the commerce of the country. Most of these miserable chains that are imported at the prices named by the gentleman will not hold a vessel. They refuse to use them in England but send them to us. A large part of the shipwrecks which occur are caused by the parting of weak cables such as will not stand the admiralty test used in England. Let us encourage something better.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move, pro formâ, to strike out "three," in line one hundred and sixty-five, and insert in lieu thereof "four." I do it more particularly for the purpose of informing the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] that if he were at all familiar with the struggle which there has been heretofore to establish this branch of manufacturing in this country he would not make the proposition which he has made. I wish to say that for the last twenty years every effort that has been made to establish manufactories of chains that will compete with the English chains has failed; and the few establishments of that kind in the country, unless they have this protection, will certainly come to grief. I trust the gentleman will not press an amendment which is not in conformity with the policy that has been adopted here with regard to manufactures generally.

Mr. PIKE. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] says that our shipping is protected by receiving American registers. Will he tell me what difference it makes to a ship-owner, when he pays the same insurance and receives the same freight, whether he has an American or an English register? Undereither he is protected by the Government under which he sails. It is a new idea that our ships want to engage in the coasting trade. There are but two trades in this country of the slightest consequence. The one is the California trade and the other is the trade with New Orleans, and neither of them is a "drop in the bucket" as compared with the general trade of the world. The gentleman says that the object is to secure good chains. I suppose I cannot instruct him upon this subject; but allow me to say that American ships do not use American chains; that seven eighths of the chains they use are foreign, and, therefore, the only effect of this provision is to tax the shipping interest.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I withdraw my amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. PIKE's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On chains made of iron rods not more than five eighths of an inch in diameter, and not less than three eighths of an inch in diameter, three and one half cents per pound; on chains made of iron rods less than three eighths of an inch in diameter, and not less than one fourth of an inch in diameter, four cents per pound; on chains made of iron rods less than one fourth of an inch in diameter, and not less than number nine wire gauge, five cents per pound; on chains made of iron rods less than number nine wire gauge, five cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem; on blacksmith's hammers, stone hammers, sledges of all descriptions, wholly or partially finished, four cents per pound.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. CHANDLER, MORRILL, and CONNESS the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bill No. 163, entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph Parkins."

The message further announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 456, entitled "An act to extend the benefits of section four of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866, approved March 3, 1865," with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 361) to authorize W. J. Sibbey, and others, trustees, to sell and convey lot number nine, in square number seventy-six, in the city of Washington;

An act (S. No. 227) to incorporate the Washington Glass Company; and Joint resolution (S. No. 39) to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, to the Court of Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 219) granting certain lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a ship-canal to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the lake known as Lac La Belle, in said State;

An act (S. No. 30) to create an additional land district in the State of Oregon;

An act (S. No. 193) granting lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, in said State; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) for the relief of Joseph Parkins.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The SPEAKER announced that he had appointed Messrs. ELIOT, BINGHAM, and McCULLOUGH to constitute the committee of conference on the part of the House upon the bill (H. R. No. 613) entitled "An act to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes."

NORTHERN KANSAS RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also announced that he had appointed Messrs. LOAN, CLARKE of Kansas, and ELDRIDGE, to constitute the committee of conference on the part of the House upon the bill (S. No. 145) entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph."

COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE APPOINTED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the Senate requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling.

No objection being made, the conference was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HIGBY. I believe that the Committee on Public Lands is entitled to the morning hour to-morrow, and I suggest that it be permitted to yield that hour, and that the House proceed with the consideration of the tariff bill, with the understanding that the committee have two hours after the tariff bill is concluded.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. COOK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary reported back, with amendments, a bill to establish judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789, and moved that the same be recommitted and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the register of, and certain papers in relation to, the bark Marget.

And then, on motion of Mr. CONKLING, (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BANKS: The memorial of A. W. Allen, and W. Kirby, of Washington, praying for the assignment to them of a just proportion of the reward offered by the authorities for the apprehension of Booth, the assassin.

Also, the memorial of General Joseph G. Ramsay, Hon. Francis E. Spinner, and many others, for the appropriation of land for a public park in the city of Washington.

By Mr. BROOMALL: The petition of citizens of Chester county, in the State of Pennsylvania, asking such a change in the tariff and tax laws as will protect domestic industry.

By Mr. BUNDY: The petition of General W. H. Powell, J. H. Allison, and 118 others, citizens of Lawrence county, Ohio, for an increase of the tariff to prevent the labor of this country from being subjected to the ruinous competition with the pauper labor of Europe.

By Mr. EGGLESTON: The petition of Amos More and others, leather manufacturers of Ohio, praying for a reduction of the revenue tax.

By Mr. GRIDER: The memorial of the Southern Pacific railroad, asking right of way and grant of lands to aid in the construction of a railway from El Paso to the Pacific coast.

By Mr. HARDING, of Illinois: The petition of more than 2,000 people of Illinois, for railway bridge over Mississippi river at Quincy, Illinois.

Also, one from Brown county, Illinois, on the same subject.

By Mr. KASSON: The petition of Hon. Joseph Segar, for compensation for his property, near Fort-tress Monroe, taken for the use of the United States.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: The petition of 64 citizens of Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, for protection of home labor to the extent of the difference between the value of capital and wages abroad and at home, with the addition of the internal duties levied on American industrial products.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 30, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the Legislature of Connecticut in favor of a donation of lands by Congress to endow female colleges in the several States; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of Sabina Himpelman, widow of the late Julius Himpelman, a private in company H, forty-sixth regiment New York volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of J. T. Clouse, and others, citizens of the United States, praying for an increase of the duties on imported goods; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PARK AND PRESIDENTIAL MANSION.

Mr. HOWE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to inquire what tracts of land containing not less than one hundred acres, adjoining or very near this city, can be obtained, and for what prices, for a park and site for a presidential mansion, and which shall combine convenience of access, healthfulness, good water, and capability of adornment.

ALFRED ELMORE.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following resolution:

Whereas Alfred Elmore, who has recently been nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate as collector of customs at Mobile, in the State of Alabama, is alleged to have held office under the late confederate government, and also to have otherwise given aid and support to the same, and therefore could not honestly and truthfully take the oath prescribed by law: To the end that proceedings may be instituted for the due investigation thereof.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to the Senate a duly certified copy of the official oath taken by said Elmore as such collector.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POLAND. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider it at this time. No objection being interposed, the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. POLAND. I desire merely to say that I have offered this resolution at the request of prominent Union men in the State of Alabama, who assure me that this Mr. Elmore who has been appointed collector at Mobile rendered service in a military way to the rebel government, and also held office under it; and they say that if it be true that he has taken the oath which the law provides for all officers, he has committed the crime of perjury; and they desire to obtain official, certain information as to whether he has taken the oath, and if he has they desire to prosecute him. That is the object in offering the resolution.

Mr. HOWE. I have no sort of objection to the adoption of the resolution. I think it proper to say, however, inasmuch as that nomination was confirmed on a recommendation of the Committee on Commerce, and inasmuch as it was considered very fully not only once but two or three times by the committee, that this is the first time I have heard that Mr. Elmore ever rendered any service to the so-called confederate government in a military capacity. I never heard of his having occupied but one office, and that was the office of clerk of the House of Representatives of Alabama.

It was upon a supposition that he could not take the oath because he had held that office that the committee were at first inclined to withhold their recommendation to his confirmation, and did withhold it. We were subsequently led to believe, we saw in fact that the constitution of the State of Alabama did not seem to require any oath on the part of the officers of the House of Representatives to support the constitution of the confederate States, or any other oath in the world except simply to support the constitution of the State of Alabama, and we supposed he had never acted in any sort of alliance with the rebellion.

The resolution was agreed to.

THOMAS W. STEVENS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 385.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 385) for the relief of Thomas W. Stevens was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Thomas W. Stevens of $1,025 50 on account of services as inspector of customs at the port of Albany from the 1st day of March, 1862, to the 1st day of April, 1863.

Mr. GRIMES. What committee reports that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the Freedmen's Bureau bill that has come back from the House of Representatives, with a view to the appointment of a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. No. 613) to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move that the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. NESMITH the committee on the part of the Senate.

RAILROAD FROM FORT RILEY TO FORT SMITH.

Mr. HENDRICKS. A week or two since the Senate passed a bill in relation to a railroad in Kansas. I did not support that measure; but there is a branch road connecting with that, and forming part of the same system, which ought to go to the House in connection with that bill. I speak of the road from Fort Riley to connect with the road which was provided for a week since. The two measures ought to go together to the House, to be considered there as they were considered by the Senate committee, as at the southern boundary line of Kansas they form one road thence south in the direction of Fort Smith. I move, therefore, to take up Senate bill No. 224, with a view of passing it.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not think there can be any objection to the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 224) to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and telegraph, and to secure the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes.

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom the bill was referred, had reported it back with an amendment, which was to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause and in lieu of it to insert the following:

That for the purpose of aiding the Union Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, the same being a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kansas to construct and operate a railroad from Fort Riley, Kansas, or near said military reservation, thence down the valley of the Neosho river to the southern line of the State of Kansas, with a view to an extension of the same through a portion of the Indian Territory to Fort Smith, Arkansas, there is hereby granted to the State of Kansas, for the use and benefit of said railroad company every alternate section of land or parts thereof designated by odd numbers, to the extent of ten sections per mile on each side of said road; but in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line of said road is definitely located, sold any section, or any part thereof, granted as aforesaid, or that the right of preemption or homestead settlement has attached to the same, or that the same has been reserved by the United States for any purpose whatever, then it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be selected for the purposes aforesaid, from the public lands of the United States nearest to the sections above specified, so much land as shall be equal to the amount of such lands as the United States have sold, reserved, or otherwise appropriated, or to which the right of homestead settlement or preemption has attached as aforesaid, which lands, thus indicated by the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be reserved and held for the State of Kansas for the use of said company by the said Secretary for the purpose of the construction and operation of said railroad, as provided by this act: Provided, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement or other purpose whatever, be, and the same are hereby, reserved and excepted from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the route of said road through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way, two hundred feet in width, is hereby granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States: And provided further, That said lands hereby granted shall not be selected beyond twenty miles from the line of said road.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sections and parts of sections of land which by the aforesaid grant shall remain in the United States, within ten miles on each side of said road, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of public lands when sold, nor shall any of said lands become subject to sale at private entry until the same shall have been first offered at public sale to the highest bidder, at or above the minimum price aforesaid: Provided, That actual bona fide settlers under the preemption laws of the United States may, after due proof of settlement, improvement, and occupation, as now provided by law, purchase the same at the price fixed for said lands at the date of such settlement, improvement, and occupation: And provided also, That settlers under the provisions of the homestead act, who make their settlement after the passage of this act and comply with the terms and requirements of said act, shall be entitled, within the said limits of ten miles, to patents for an amount not exceeding eighty acres each.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the grant of lands hereby made is upon condition that said company, after the construction of its road, shall keep it in repair and use, and shall at all times be in readiness to transport troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon its road for the Government, when required to do so by any Department thereof, the Government at all times having the preference in the use of the road for all the purposes aforesaid, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not exceeding that paid by private individuals, or the average paid for like services on other roads. And the lands hereby granted, held, and reserved as aforesaid shall inure to the benefit of said company, as follows: when the Governor of the State of Kansas shall certify that any section of ten consecutive miles of said road is completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner as a first-class railroad, then the said Secretary of the Interior shall issue to the said company patents for so many sections of the land within the limits above named, and continuous with said completed section hereinbefore granted; and when certificates of the Governor aforesaid shall be presented to said Secretary of the Interior of each successive section of ten consecutive miles of said road, the said Secretary shall in like manner issue to said company patents for the land for each of said sections of road as in the first instance, until said road shall be completed: Provided, That if said road is not completed within ten years from the date of the acceptance of the grant hereinbefore made, the lands remaining unpatented shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That as soon as said company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior maps of its line, designating the route thereof, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary to withdraw from the market the lands granted by this act, in such manner as may be best calculated to effect the purposes of this act and subserve the public interest.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the United States mail shall be transported on said road, and under the direction of the Post Office Department, at such price as Congress may by law provide: Provided, That until such price is fixed by law the Postmaster General shall have power to fix the compensation.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad as proposed; and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain; also all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act by the said Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of the said company, duly executed pursuant to the direction of its board of directors first had and obtained, which acceptance shall be made within one year after the passage of this act, and not afterward, and shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That said Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to extend and construct its railroad from the southern boundary of Kansas, south through the Indian Territory along the valley of Grand and Arkansas rivers, to Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas; and the right of way through said Indian Territory is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns, to the extent of one hundred feet on each side of said road or roads, and all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act, whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise, not to exceed the ratio per mile granted in the first section of this act: Provided, That said lands become a part of the public lands of the United States.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That said Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to negotiate with and acquire from any Indian nation or tribe, authorized by the United States to dispose of lands for railroad purposes, and from any other nation or tribe of Indians through whose lands said railroad may pass, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, or from any company or parties incorporated or authorized for such purposes, by such nation or tribe, or which such parties may have acquired under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That any railroad company chartered under any law of the United States, or of any State which may have been heretofore or shall hereafter be organized and subsidized by any act of the Congress of United States, may connect, unite, and consolidate with this railroad company after the same shall be located to the valley of the Neosho or Grand river, upon just, fair, and equitable terms, to be agreed upon between the parties as shall not be against the public interest, or the interest of the United States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee in section eight, line five, by inserting after the word "Territory" the words "with the consent of the Indians, and not otherwise;" so as to make it conform to the bill that was passed the other day.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I thought as I listened to the reading of the bill that there was a restriction in it of the homestead settlements lying within this grant to eighty acres. I should like to inquire of those who have charge of the bill whether that is correct.

Mr. POMEROY. That applies to the homestead settlers on the even sections. That provision is inserted in all these bills. When homestead settlers go, after the passage of a railroad grant, upon the even sections which are held at $2 50 per acre, they get only eighty acres.

Mr. CONNESS. Is it confined to the even sections?

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands at what point this contemplated railroad is to commence, where it is to terminate, and what is its probable length. I have not been able to ascertain very accurately what the facts are in regard to these matters. Where it goes I really do not know.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will explain to the Senator that three years ago, March 3, 1863, there was a grant of land made to a railroad from Fort Leavenworth by Lawrence to the southern boundary line of Kansas, in the direction of Galveston bay. In connection with that grant there was a grant from Fort Riley, running in a southeastern direction to intersect that road near the southern boundary of Kansas. Now, this bill repeats that grant simply, and brings it into one law, and also extends it from the road running from Lawrence in a southern direction toward Galveston bay. This bill extends the Fort Riley road across that road to Fort Smith, in Arkansas, so as to make a continuous railway from the Mississippi river, by Little Rock, to Fort Riley, thence in a southwestern direction to Fort Smith, connecting with the Pacific road.

Mr. HOWARD. So that really this road will terminate on the Mississippi?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will eventually have that connection, when all the roads are finished to which the grants of land have been already made.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish merely to say that I thought this bill might contemplate the construction of a railroad from Fort Riley down southwardly to Galveston bay, a distance of about six or seven hundred miles, I believe.

Mr. POMEROY. This runs to the southeast. It is no new grant.

Mr. HOWARD. I believe not.

Mr. POMEROY. Every acre has been granted in a previous bill, and this bill only consolidates the two grants.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will state to the Senator from Michigan that I thought two weeks ago we ought to confine the grant to Galveston bay, or, rather, to the northern boundary of Texas, to the road to which we made the grant three years ago, but the Senate did not concur in that view, and this is a part of the policy agreed upon two weeks ago by the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. There is one question I should like the Senator from Indiana to answer.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am not going to answer many questions.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know whether the Senator has investigated the subject sufficiently so as to satisfy himself that if we pass this bill it will not mar the beauty and symmetry of that zebra-marked map which he exhibited to the Senate the other day, showing these additional railroad lines.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. If so, I am satisfied with the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will state to the Senator that from a point about seventy miles south of the southern boundary of Kansas it will start a new system of marks, in a southeastern direction to Fort Smith; and with that addition it will leave the maps as they are already marked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed. The title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and telegraph, from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 404) to regulate the selection of grand and petit jurors in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRAGUE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 117) for the relief of Charles M. Blake; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

PILOT KNOB AND HELENA RAILROAD.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senate to take up a Senate bill that comes from the House of Representatives with some amendments, for the purpose of agreeing in the amendments of the House. They are simply conforming the bill more accurately to the land-law system as we have agreed upon it. It is a bill to grant lands to the Iron Mountain Railroad Company. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. No. 37) making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were as follows:

In section one, line five, strike out "a corporation of the State of Missouri;" in the same section, line seventeen, after "sections," where it occurs the second time, insert "to be selected as aforesaid;" in the same section, line twenty-three, after the word "established," insert "and not more than twenty miles from the line of said road."

In section two, line seventeen, after the word "sections," insert "designated as aforesaid."

In section three, line three, after the word "road," insert "and the even sections and parts of sections corresponding to the odd ones selected within twenty miles of the same."

In section four, line six, after "United States," insert "and at the cost in all respects of said railroad companies;" and in the same section and line strike out the words "road or."

The amendments were concurred in.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies for the use of the State Department of the message of the President relative to the departure of troops from Austria for Mexico, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution. It is as follows:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies of the message from the President, with accompanying documents, answering a resolution of the Senate of the 13th instant, in regard to the departure of troops from Austria for Mexico be printed for the use of the State Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know why ten thousand copies of such a report as that are needed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will explain. A general law fixes the number of documents from the different Departments that shall be printed, and the purposes to which they shall be applied—so many for the use of the Senate, so many for the use of the House of Representatives, so many for the use of the Departments. The number of documents of the State Department printed for the use of the Department is fixed by law in the discretion of the President of the United States, and for several years the number has been fixed at ten thousand. That number has been ordered to be printed of the Diplomatic Correspondence of the current year. This is a small paper that was sent in in reply to a resolution calling for information with regard to the stoppage of the sending of troops from Austria to Mexico. The cost of printing it is $500, and I presume the object of the State Department, at whose request this resolution has been introduced, is to add this to the last volume of the Diplomatic Correspondence, and have the same number printed as is printed of the other. I have here a letter from the Secretary of State asking for the publication.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it is time that law was changed. There certainly can be no necessity for publishing ten thousand copies for the use of the State Department of all this voluminous correspondence. I am opposed utterly to such an expenditure of the public money as that. Congress publishes for distribution among the people a less number, I think, than that. How many?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the whole number printed by both Houses is seven thousand.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Both Houses of Congress for distribution to the whole American people publish but seven thousand copies, and here there is published for the use of the State Department alone, to be distributed in foreign nations, ten thousand copies. I am utterly surprised to learn that it has been the practice to print so many copies, and I trust we shall begin now and stop this publication. Although this is a small matter, costing but $500, it is a proper place to begin. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "ten thousand" and inserting "one thousand;" and I wish to say further that unless some one else moves in it, I will introduce a resolution directing the Committee on Printing to inquire into the propriety of limiting the number of these documents that are published by the State Department. There should be some limitation.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to say for myself, as a member of the Committee on Printing which reports this resolution, that I dissented from the report and could see no propriety in publishing any such number as is specified, notwithstanding I am assured that it is customary. I desire that the amendment of the Senator from Illinois reducing the number to one thousand copies be concurred in by the Senate, and that we will make this a precedent which shall govern our action in similar cases hereafter.

Mr. ANTHONY. I differ from my friend from Illinois in thinking that this is the proper time to begin. If it is the sense of the Senate that the law should be repealed which places in the discretion of the President the number of copies to be printed for the use of the State Department, that will be for the Senate to decide; but I think, since we have ordered to be printed ten thousand copies of the four large volumes of Diplomatic Correspondence, it would be rather bad economy to destroy the completeness of the work by omitting a dozen or fifteen pages that will only cost us $500.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Rhode Island inform me what is done with the ten thousand copies?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know; a great many of them are distributed in this country, and some abroad. Of course I do not know what is done with them; they are at the disposal of the State Department.

Mr. SUMNER. When the Senator from Illinois said that it was the "practice" to publish ten thousand copies for the use of the State Department, perhaps he used too strong a word, unless he meant to limit the application of the word to what has occurred since the war. I believe the first case was on the motion of a gentleman in the other House, when the House of Representatives ordered ten thousand copies of Diplomatic Papers to be published for the use of the State Department. I do not know whether that was four or three years ago; but as I understood it at the time, the object was to enable the Secretary of State to send these Diplomatic Papers to Europe. I believe the habit has been to send a very large number, I do not know how many hundred, to each one of our diplomatic and consular representatives, through whom they have been distributed in the localities where they have been. It was supposed by the Department of State that the circulation of these papers would serve a patriotic purpose. On that I give no opinion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to inquire whether he thinks there is now any occasion to continue that?

Mr. SUMNER. I am not aware that there is any occasion. Indeed, I should say in all frankness that I was not sure that there was any occasion for it in the beginning; but it was done first by an order of the other House, not through the Senate, not by a concurrent resolution—

Mr. CONNESS. Nor under a law.

Mr. SUMNER. But by a vote of the other House. That is my recollection; but I may be mistaken. I think a vote of the other House placed ten thousand copies of the Diplomatic Papers at the disposition of the Secretary of State, and I understand that that number has been printed ever since, and they have been boxed in large boxes and sent to our different agents in Europe, sometimes perhaps four or five hundred copies to one.

Mr. GRIMES. And sold for old paper.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know whether they have been sold for old paper or not; but they have been distributed in that way, and it was supposed that in doing it a patriotic purpose was subserved. But as the Senator from Illinois asked me the question whether this should be continued now, I will say that I regarded it at the time as a war measure [laughter] of very doubtful propriety; but now, "in these piping times of peace," I know not that a war measure of such a doubtful character as that is necessary.

Mr. ANTHONY. The way this number came to be fixed is this: when the law was passed some three or four years ago very much diminishing the number of the executive documents that were printed, some discussion arose in the Senate as to the number that should be printed for the State Department; a very great variety of opinion was expressed; and it was finally compromised on the motion of some Senator, I do not know who—it was not on the report of the committee—by providing that the number of documents from the State Department accompanying the President's message, to be printed for the use of that Department, should be fixed by the President of the United States. During the war, for the reasons stated by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the number was fixed at ten thousand. My judgment is that it has effected a good purpose, that it has had an influence upon public opinion in Europe, and that these documents have had an influence upon emigration from Europe to this country. I do not suppose that now, after the war is over and this correspondence has lost much of its interest, the President would be likely to fix so large a number again; but I think that when we have already this year printed ten thousand copies of all the documents of this character except this little one, it would be much better policy for us to complete the work at an expense of $500.

Mr. SUMNER. I should agree with the Senator from Rhode Island on that point. I think we ought to complete the series, and then it will be time to consider whether we shall adopt a different policy.

Mr. ANTHONY. Senators are aware that if we are to diminish the number we must repeal the law which gives a discretion to the Executive to fix the number. It is not the Senate that fixes the number of these documents that shall be printed for the Department; but the House of Representatives has always given the State Department as many of the documents as it wanted. I have always thought that since the Government had a printing office of its own, there was a singular impropriety in the heads of Departments being required to send to one House of Congress or the other for documents to be printed and to be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House. I think the printing of these documents should be paid for out of the contingent fund of the Departments, and the expense should be estimated for like any other item of contingent expenses. The Committee on Printing, and the Senate themselves, are not to be presumed to be the best judges of what documents the Departments want.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to inquire whether that is not the case now; whether some documents are not ordered to be printed by the Departments and paid for out of their contingent funds.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a good deal of printing done for the Departments, under what law I do not know.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that some of the printing for the Secretary of State is done at the Treasury Department. I suppose, as a matter of course, as that is not done by order of Congress, it must be paid for out of the contingent fund of the State Department.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not aware what that printing is.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not aware that it is done, but I understand it to be done. I understand that some of the lubrications of the Secretary of State are printed there, I suppose at the public expense, but I presume it is paid for out of the contingent fund of the State Department.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think this distribution of documents during the war has been beneficial. I think that the Diplomatic Correspondence now to be distributed, which will be made complete by this, will be of benefit to the country; and I think we ought to complete the work, now that it has begun. For the future I am ready to submit to what the Senate may judge proper.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire if this will not go out by itself and have to be boxed up and sent abroad. Some, if not all, of the volumes of Diplomatic Correspondence for this year have been printed and laid on our tables.

Mr. ANTHONY. Not all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will not this go out by itself?

Mr. ANTHONY. No, sir. I understand that the last volume has not been completed; at least I have not seen it; and I presume that the object of the Department is to bind this up with the last volume. I do not know that fact, however. I only have a letter from the Secretary of State saying that it is deemed desirable by the Department to print the same number of this document that was printed of the others; and when the Secretary of State or any other head of a Department asks for an expenditure of $500 for such a matter as this, I am not in the habit of going behind his recommendation. I think he should be trusted at least for so much.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we shall strike down the number to one thousand. I think it is time to begin, and this is a very good place to begin.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope we shall not commence a reduction on this document. I hope we shall complete this one, and then if the Senate choose to vote that the next publication shall be one thousand copies, we will all agree to that if that is the proper number.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am willing to vote to pay for these books; but I hope we shall stop the printing of this inordinate number of documents for the State Department by repealing the existing provision of law on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, to strike out "ten" and insert "one."

Mr. GRIMES called for the yeas and nays and they were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to remind the Senate again that this expenditure of $500 is in order to complete the Diplomatic Correspondence which has already been ordered, and to print the same number as was printed of the preceding correspondence. The others have not yet been distributed.

Mr. GRIMES. All the others are distributed?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; we have not distributed them. The publication is not yet complete.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I suppose, from what I learn, that this is to be printed in the edition of the other correspondence that has thus far been printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I presume so.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If that be the case, I think we had better print it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is a distinct thing by itself. It has no connection whatever with the others.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It is to be bound in the same volume, I understand.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The other volumes are all printed. Whether this is to be bound in the same volume or not I do not know, and the chairman of the committee does not know. He says he thinks all the volumes are not made up: but whether they are or not the volumes will be complete without it, and there can be no necessity and no propriety, in my judgment, in publishing ten thousand copies of the Diplomatic Correspondence to be sent abroad by the Secretary of State. I think we had better begin when the question is first presented. I hope the Senate will now strike it down to one thousand.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Doolittle, Foster, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Willey, and Yates—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Van Winkle, and Wright—18.

So the amendment was rejected.

The resolution was adopted.

COMSTOCK LODGE TUNNEL.

Mr. STEWART. I move to take up Senate bill No. 352.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 352) granting to A. Sutro the right of way, and granting other privileges, to aid in the construction of a draining and exploring tunnel to the Comstock lode, in the State of Nevada, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Mines and Mining report an amendment as a substitute for the original bill, and the substitute only will be read unless some Senator asks for the reading of the original bill.

The Secretary read the substitute, as follows:

That for the purpose of the construction of a deep draining and exploring tunnel to and beyond the Comstock lode, so called, in the State of Nevada, the right of way is hereby granted to A. Sutro, his heirs and assigns, to run, construct, and excavate a mining, draining, and exploring tunnel; also to sink mining, working, or air shafts along the line of course of said tunnel, and connecting with the same at any points which may hereafter be selected by the grantee herein, his heirs or assigns. The said tunnel shall be at least eight feet high and eight feet wide, and shall commence at some point to be selected by the grantee herein, his heirs or assigns, at the hills near Carson river, and within the boundaries of Lyon county, and extending from said initial point in a westerly direction seven miles, more or less, to and beyond said Comstock lode; and the said right of way shall extend northerly and southerly on the course of said lode, either within the same, or east or west of the same; and also on or along any other lode which may be discovered or developed by the said tunnel.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the right is hereby granted to the said A. Sutro, his heirs and assigns, to purchase, at $1 25 per acre, a sufficient amount of public land near the mouth of said tunnel for the use of the same, not exceeding two sections, and such land shall not be mineral land or in the bona fide possession of other persons who claim under any law of Congress at the time of the passage of this act, and all minerals existing or which shall be discovered thereon are excepted from this grant; that upon filing a plat of said land the Secretary of the Interior shall withdraw the same from sale, and upon payment for the same a patent shall issue. And the said A. Sutro, his heirs and assigns, are hereby granted the right to purchase, at five dollars per acre, such mineral veins and lodes within two thousand feet on each side of said tunnel as shall be cut, discovered, or developed by running and constructing the same, through its entire extent, with all the dips, spurs, and angles of such lodes, subject, however, to the provisions of this act and to such legislation as Congress may hereafter provide: Provided, That the Comstock lode, with its dips, spurs, and angles, is excepted from this grant, and all other lodes, with their dips, spurs, and angles, located within the said two thousand feet, and which are or may be at the passage of this act, in the actual bona fide possession of other persons, are hereby excepted from such grant. And the lodes herein excepted, other than the Comstock lode, shall be withheld from sale by the United States; and if such lodes shall be abandoned or not worked, possessed and held in conformity to existing mining rules, or such regulations as have been or may be prescribed by the Legislature of Nevada, they shall become subject to such right of purchase by the grantee herein, his heirs or assigns.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all persons, companies, or corporations, owning claims or mines on said Comstock lode, or any other lode, drained, benefited, or developed by said tunnel, shall hold their claims subject to the condition (which shall be expressed in any grant they may hereafter obtain from the United States) that they shall contribute and pay to the owners of said tunnel the same rate of charges for drainage, or other benefits derived from said tunnel or its branches, as have been or may hereafter be named in agreements between such owners and the companies representing a majority of the estimated value of said Comstock lode at the time of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No. 387.

Mr. CONNESS. If that bill is to be gone on with I have nothing to say, but I desire to occupy the floor for a moment to consider a small bill, local to my State. What bill is House bill No. 387?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator agree that that bill shall lie over informally for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather go on with it.

Mr. CONNESS. I apprehend that the bill I desire to call up will not occupy more than two or three minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are several bills in that predicament, and I hope the Senator will let this go on. If I yield to him, it will only give rise to applications from others.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1867.

The bill was read at length.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was in lines eleven and twelve to increase the appropriation "for the pay of superintendents of Indian affairs and Indian agents" from $87,450 to $110,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line eleven hundred and fifty-six the following:

Minneconjon band of Dakota or Sioux:

For first of twenty installments, to be paid in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per fourth article of treaty of October 10, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

Lower Brule band of Dakota or Sioux:

For first of twenty installments, to be paid in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per fourth article of treaty of October 14, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the previous amendment the following:

Blackfeet band of Dakota or Sioux:

For first of twenty installments, to be paid in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per fourth article of treaty of October 19, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

Two Kettleband of Dakota or Sioux:

For first of twenty installments, to be paid in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per fourth article of treaty of October 19, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $6,000.

For this sum, to be paid the widow and children of Ish-tah-chan-ne-ah, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as per sixth article of treaty of October 19, 1865, $500.

For this sum, being for indemnity, to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as per sixth article of the treaty of October 19, 1865, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

Onk-pah-pah band of Dakota or Sioux:

For first of twenty installments, being thirty dollars for each lodge or family, (three hundred lodges,) to be paid in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per fourth article of treaty of October 20, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the previous amendment the following:

Sans Arcs band of Dakota or Sioux:

For first of twenty installments, being thirty dollars to each lodge or family, (two hundred and eighty lodges,) to be paid in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per fourth article of treaty of October 20, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $8,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

Yanktonai band of Dakota or Sioux:

For first of twenty installments, being thirty dollars for each lodge or family, (three hundred and fifty lodges,) to be paid in such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per fourth article of treaty of October 20, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $10,500.

The next amendment was to insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians of the upper Arkansas river:

For reimbursing members of the bands of Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians who suffered at Sand Creek, November 23, 1864, to be paid in United States securities, animals, goods, provisions, or such other useful articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per sixth article treaty of October 14, 1865, $39,050.

For first of forty installments, to be expended in such manner and for such purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, being an amount equal to twenty dollars per capita for two thousand eight hundred persons, the number agreed upon for the present year, as per seventh article treaty of October 14, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $56,000.

For transportation of goods, provisions, &c., purchased for the Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians of the upper Arkansas river, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

Omaha tribe of Indians:

For this sum, to be expended by their agent, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for goods, provisions, cattle, horses, construction of buildings, farming implements, breaking of lands, and other improvements on their reservation, as per second article of treaty of March 6, 1865, $50,000.

For this sum, to be paid as damages, in consequence of the occupation of a portion of the Omaha reservation, and use and destruction of timber by the Winnebago tribe of Indians, as per third article of treaty of March 6, 1865, $7,000.

For keeping in repair a grist and saw mill, as per eighth article of treaty of March 16, 1854, and third article of treaty of March 6, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $300.

For pay of one engineer and assistant, as per eighth article of treaty of March 16, 1854, and third article of treaty of March 6, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $1,800.

For pay of one miller and assistant, as per eighth article of treaty of March 16, 1854, and third article of treaty of March 6, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $1,200.

For pay of farmer, as per eighth article of treaty of March 16, 1854, and third article of treaty of March 6, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $900.

For pay of blacksmith and assistants, as per eighth article of treaty of March 16, 1854, and third article of treaty of March 6, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $1,200.

For support of blacksmith shop and supplying tools for the same, as per eighth article of treaty of March 16, 1854, and third article of treaty of March 6, 1865, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the amendment just read the following:

Yakama nation:

For second installment for keeping in repair blacksmith's, tinsmith's, gunsmith's, carpenter's, and wagon and plowmaker's shops, and for providing necessary tools therefor, per fifth article of treaty June 9, 1855, $500.

For third installment for keeping in repair blacksmith's, tinsmith's, gunsmith's, carpenter's, and wagon and plowmaker's shops, and for providing necessary tools therefor, per fifth article treaty June 9, 1855, $500.

For fourth installment for keeping in repair blacksmith's, tinsmith's, gunsmith's, carpenter's, and wagon and plowmaker's shops, and for providing necessary tools therefor, per fifth article treaty June 9, 1855, $500.

For fifth installment for keeping in repair blacksmith's, tinsmith's, gunsmith's, carpenter's, and wagon and plowmaker's shops, and for providing necessary tools therefor, per fifth article treaty June 9, 1855, $500.

For sixth installment for keeping in repair blacksmith's, tinsmith's, gunsmith's, carpenter's, and wagon and plowmaker's shops, and for providing necessary tools therefor, per fifth article of treaty June 9, 1855, $500.

For seventh installment for keeping in repair blacksmith's, tinsmith's, gunsmith's, carpenter's, and wagon and plowmaker's shops, and for providing necessary tools therefor, per fifth article treaty June 9, 1855, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That no funds belonging to any Indian tribe with which treaty relations exist shall be applied in any manner not authorized by such treaty, or by express provisions of law, nor shall money appropriated to execute a treaty be transferred or applied to any other purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In relation to the other amendments which are proposed by the Committee on Finance, that is to say, sections three, four, five, and six, which concern the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, I will ask the honorable Senator from Ohio to let that matter go over until the bill comes to be considered hereafter, as I desire to move an executive session to-day to consider an Indian treaty.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better proceed to consider this proposition.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We shall not be able to proceed with the consideration of this question to-day. It will occupy some considerable time in its discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better proceed with the discussion now, because I know it will occupy some time; but I will not press a vote upon it to-day if the Senator does not desire it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think it had better go over until the estimates come in for the treaties which have been confirmed, and which did not go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather go on regularly with the amendment. This is the only topic that will be likely to create any division of opinion, and I prefer to proceed with it to-day as far as we can. As a matter of course, if the Senator, after the discussion, does not want a final vote to-day I will not press it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This is Saturday afternoon, and I desire an executive session, and I think we had better go into executive session. If we should adjourn a little earlier to-day than usual it would be no loss of time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the reading of the section. I desire to say a few words in regard to the pending proposition.

The Secretary read the next amendment, which was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 31st day of December, 1865, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of money out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates or accounts by the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senate while I make a brief statement in regard to the very important proposition ingrafted on this bill by the Committee on Finance. It is contained in the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth sections. The effect of this proposition is to transfer the Indian Bureau to the Department of War, the place where it was before the organization of the Interior Department. The language of the third section is precisely the same as that which was used in organizing the Interior Department in 1848. This amendment—for the whole four sections are really but one amendment—was prepared in the House of Representatives by the Committee on Appropriations, but was excluded as an amendment in that House on account of the rules of the House. It has been examined and considered by the Committee on Finance, and is now proposed as an amendment to this bill here.

I will state that in offering this amendment there was no intention to reflect upon any officer of the Government, either the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and indeed one reason for offering the amendment now was that the time was favorable. The transfer will not take effect until the 1st of January, and we know that the present incumbent of the Interior Department will shortly after that time become a member of the Senate. He is going out of his present office, and we do not know who will come in his place; if, then, this transfer is made, it cannot be considered to reflect upon him or any officer of the Government. I am sure that I would not vote for this proposition or any other if it called in question either the integrity, the character, or the capacity of the present head of the Interior Department. There is no man in public life for whom I have a higher respect and regard than I have for him. But he will be, shortly after this change takes effect, a member of this body. We do not know who the incoming officer may be, and therefore we cannot reflect upon him.

The general reasons for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department I will state. We are of the opinion that it is better to substitute military officers, who hold their commissions for life, in place of the Indian superintendents and Indian agents. We believe that by this substitution we shall get the security of a commission for life, and get the services of an officer of the Army for this duty without any increased pay. At present we have no security from a superintendent of Indian affairs or from any Indian agent that amounts to anything, while if an officer of the Army was there performing the same duties, there would be a chain of accountability from the soldier up to the general that would always give a sense of security. There is a burden of responsibility as against an officer of the Army that does not exist against any other person. This security would be worth more than all the bonds that can be executed by any civil officer.

Another thing is to be considered; an Indian always has more respect for a uniform and a musket than he has for any civil authority; one soldier, or one officer, can do more in an Indian territory than any number of agents or superintendents. The present system is conducted by civilians entirely, who are under salaries, but with no responsibility whatever, and who cannot be punished for any offense committed within the Indian territory. The courts do not extend over the remote Indian territory. It is impossible to have any chain of responsibility. The consequence is, that complaints without number, and charges of the most grave and serious character, are constantly made against Indian agents and superintendents, without any means or facilities to examine into the truth of those charges, without any mode of ascertaining the accuracy of them, without any means of taking testimony, and without any tribunal before whom they can be tried. The United States courts are ineffective, because they do not extend so far as to be practically useful. The truth is, therefore, that we place the Indians and the disbursement of all the millions of money appropriated for their support in the hands of Indian agents and superintendents, who are under no substantial accountability to any one. It is true, they may be removed from office; but their offenses are committed at a remote region, beyond the eye of the officers of the law, who are here in Washington; there is no chain of responsibility, and I have no doubt that this has caused many of the complaints that have been made from time to time against Indian superintendents and agents, and many of the gross abuses that have grown up out of this system.

On the question of economy, it may be said that we shall have for some time a pretty large Army; that the only use for this Army in time of peace will be to take care of the Indians, and probably to place small detachments throughout the southern States. They may as well be employed in this service. They are generally men of experience and capacity. Two thirds of the officers of the Army now are persons taken from civil life, who are under the restraints of a military commission. They are generally men of character and experience, who have familiarity with Indian affairs, and therefore can better discharge the duty of Indian superintendents and agents. They are held by a chain of responsibility; and beside that they are subject to the Rules and Articles of War; so that if any of them acting as an Indian agent, or as an officer transacting the duties of an Indian agent, should either violate his duty to the Indians or to the Government, he may be tried under the Rules and Articles of War.

Without entering at greater length into the reasons why we propose this important amendment, I can say that after the consideration we gave it, the Committee on Finance were unanimously of the opinion that this transfer ought to be made, and that without casting any reflection on any officer of the Government, but simply as a question of official duty, responsibility, and economy. Every argument that could be urged, after full consideration, was in favor of this transfer. If this bureau is transferred to the War Department the same machinery that is now in existence will be continued, subject, however, to such changes and removals as may be made by the President. Then from time to time military officers will be substituted for the present superintendents and agents. Where it is impracticable to do that the agents and superintendents will be kept in office; but as far and as soon as practicable the Secretary of War will be required to supersede the agents and superintendents by military officers of proper rank, and they will be required to transact the duties of these offices without any increase of pay.

It must be remembered, too, that the Army will necessarily be stationed, in a great measure, in the Indian country, and that the present complex system by which the Indian agents and superintendents are to do certain duties, and the Army officers certain other duties, makes often a conflict of jurisdiction. Out of that conflict of jurisdiction has arisen several Indian wars. If there is but one source of authority in the Indian Territory, and that is the War Department, there will then be proper responsibility. We can then hold the military officers responsible; but, as it is now, the Indian agents often blame the military authorities—they have done so to me—and the military authorities blame the agents and the traders, and the result is that there is a conflict of jurisdiction, which itself creates war, expense, and confusion.

There is another difficulty. One of the points brought before the committee is in regard to the frauds that have been inflicted on the Government by the traders and contractors in the Indian country. They are charged with stealing, with all sorts of fraud, both upon the Government and upon the Indians. The amendments now proposed provide for a new system. It is provided that contracts for all Indian supplies shall be made in the mode and manner now provided by law for supplies for the Army. Bids must be invited, opened, and supervised by the proper officers of the Government. There will be in this a degree of responsibility that does not now attach to Indian contracts. Besides, the Indian traders, who are a fruitful cause of controversy, are superseded by the sixth section, and the Secretary of War is authorized to name times and places where any one may trade with the Indians, under proper regulations. This, no doubt, will be in the presence of the military authorities and in the presence of an armed force, when there will be power which will be respected both by traders and Indians.

These are, briefly, the reasons which have been urged upon us, and to which we have yielded so far as to propose the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. I do not wish to consume any further time in arguing a question of this kind upon which every Senator has heard a great deal in the course of the last three or four years.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not desire to go into the argument of this question at length to-day; I will say but a few things. The Senator from Ohio and the Committee on Finance cannot certainly have had an opportunity to consider this question as those gentlemen have whose special business and duty it has been to look into our Indian affairs. I admit in the outset that there are some considerations which would incline the judgment to place the superintendency of Indian affairs under the control of the War Department. At the same time there are other, and in my judgment stronger, considerations why it should be kept distinct from the War Department.

I know, sir, that it is sometimes urged that there is a jealousy between the employes of the Indian Bureau and the officers of the Army. I admit it. I admit that there is sometimes a conflict of opinion and apparently a conflict of jurisdiction, that they are exceedingly jealous of each other. But, sir, so far from that jealousy working to the disadvantage of the Government it works rather to its advantage. The fact that there are two sets of officers in the Indian country jealous of and watching each other, is both for the good of the Indians and for the good of the Government.

As to the manner in which these Indian wars arise, of course I cannot now go at length into a detail of their history to show how they have arisen. It is enough to say that they sometimes arise from a sudden conflict between the whites and the Indians. An Indian may commit some depredation upon the whites in the stealing of their cattle, which provokes at once retaliation, and a war begins; or, on other occasions, it arises from depredations committed by whites upon the Indians. And, sir, I venture to say, upon the best information which I have been enabled to obtain, that the Indian wars have, in nine cases in ten, arisen from the depredations or the wrongs committed by the whites upon the Indians, and not by the Indians upon the whites.

My friend on my right [Mr. Brown] observes it is not by the Army. Now, let me call some facts to my friend's recollection. I do not charge upon the Army greater mistakes than I would charge upon any other men in the same circumstances; but I do charge that the greatest Indian wars that have occurred within the last twenty years may be traced directly to the Army and to the blunders of officers in command. I refer to the great Sioux war which began in 1852, and continued until General Harney was called to the field and punished the nation very severely. How did that war commence? It commenced in this way: the plains had been perfectly peaceful until then; some Mormons were driving their cattle toward Salt Lake, and near Fort Laramie, the Indians being gathered together waiting in the neighborhood of the military post, one of the tribe killed one of the animals belonging to those Mormon emigrants; the lieutenant in command of the fort at once sent out a man in command of twenty men, and in the presence of the Indian camp demanded that this Indian must be surrendered or he would fire upon them. The Indians said, "We are willing to pay for this animal; we will pay you in buffalo robes or buffalo skins." But no, he demanded the instant surrender of the man who had committed the offense. The Indians refused to deliver him up, and he ordered his men to fire. They fired upon the Sioux warriors and Sioux Indians there assembled, and in twenty minutes he and his whole party were killed and scalped. That began the Sioux war of 1852.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to inquire of the Senator from whence he derives his information.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I derive my information from the testimony taken.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator has already said that this officer and his whole party were killed on the spot; and I should like to know, therefore, what source the Senator derives his information from. There must have been nobody left except the conquering Indians.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. One of the interpreters of the tribe testified before our committee as to the facts. Why, Mr. President, there is no doubt about the facts. It was that lieutenant going out and demanding the surrender of that Indian, and their refusing to surrender him, that began that war. He fired on the Indians, and was killed within thirty minutes with his whole party, and that commenced that Sioux war which lasted three or four years, and cost the Government from fifteen to twenty million dollars.

How did the great Navajoe war begin? As long as Major Kendrick, who was a man of great good sense, was in charge of the fort in the Navajoe country, there was no war between the Navajoes and the United States after we acquired the country; but the war began just in this way: an Indian happened to be within the fort, and there was a negro boy that belonged to one of our officers that, I suppose, insulted the Indian in some way, made him angry; he let slip an arrow and killed the boy on the spot; the Indian fled to his tribe; the officer sent a demand for the surrender of the Indian; the Indians did not deliver him up, refused to deliver him up, and at once war was commenced by our troops against the Navajoe tribe of Indians, and we made three campaigns against them and were beaten every time. In consequence of the war begun in that way, the Government had to spend nearly twenty million dollars.

So in reference to the Arapahoe and Cheyenne war which has desolated the plains so long. How did that arise? Because some cattle had been stolen, as it was supposed, a lieutenant, taking no interpreter with him, was sent out with orders to follow the Indians and to disarm them—not to demand the cattle, or reparation, but to follow the Indians and disarm them. He went out with a little squad of men and undertook to disarm these great big Indians of the plains of their bows and arrows, with no interpreter to explain anything. What was the result? A fight, of course. Then began your Arapahoe and Cheyenne war.

Sir, it is the blundering of these officers of the Army in command of little squads of men that in an hour can make an Indian war. It is from that more than anything else that these wars have arisen. And yet I stand not here to condemn the Army. The men who control it are as honorable men as we can find. But I say to Senators my judgment is, from all my attention to this subject, that it is not in the law, it is not in the system, it is in the administration of Indian affairs, whether it is committed to civilians or to military officers, that the essential difficulty lies. The system which we have adopted is good enough; the laws we pass are beneficent enough; but the difficulty is in the administration. If you put a young lieutenant who knows but little about human nature, and not much about Indians, in the command of a fort in an Indian country, he may involve you in a war that will cost you $20,000,000 before you come to the end of it; or if you have a dishonest agent, he may cheat the Indians, it is true; he may, perhaps, embroil a difficulty between the Indians and the whites. I admit there is a difficulty in the case. It is to know how to manage this business economically. But when the Senator from Ohio says that he expects if you remit it entirely to the War Department, that we shall be free from Indian wars and Indian difficulties, in my judgment he makes a great mistake.

Now, Mr. President, I will state another fact that has come under my observation personally. Hon. Mr. FOSTER, was with me upon the plains last summer. When we arrived at Fort Larned, we found a military officer in the command of about fifteen hundred troops, that was anxious, earnest, and had received his orders permitting him to march those fifteen hundred men across the Arkansas into the Comanche country. We ascertained the facts, prevailed upon him to revoke that order until we could telegraph to the President and get directions from headquarters here in Washington that not a man should be marched south of the Arkansas until we could see if peace could not be made with the Indians upon the plains. Had those fifteen hundred men crossed the Arkansas to chase the Comanches they could have chased them perhaps two hundred, three hundred, or five hundred miles; their animals would have given out, and they would have been compelled to retire without effecting any more than some of our other Indian expeditions have effected when they have been chasing the Indians of the plains; but it would have been the beginning of a war with the Comanches, the most powerful tribe of Indians south of the Arkansas, involving us in another $20,000,000 before we had seen the end of it. But, fortunately, peace has been made with those tribes upon the plains, and now they are at peace with the Government under the treaties which have been made. Kit Carson, General Harney, and those men who were best known among the Indians, were employed in behalf of the Government to negotiate peace with the Indians, and they have succeeded in doing it.

Mr. President, I grant that it is impossible to devise any system which will be, so far as the administration of Indian affairs is concerned, free from all objection, whether it is to be done in the War Department or whether it is to be done under the Interior Department; but I do not believe that the fact that there are two sets of officers somewhat jealous of each other, watching each other, perhaps complaining of each other, injures the public service. I believe to a certain extent they are checks on each other. The officers of the War Department and the officers of the Army are watching the traders and watching the agents in the Indian country. They can make their reports upon them and state the facts, and those facts then come to our knowledge. The Indian agents under another bureau or another Department being in that country can also see how the War Department is administered in its dealings with the Indians. They are checks and guards upon each other. Withdraw all checks and guards whatever, and leave this whole thing to be determined by the officers of the Army, leave them to deal with the Indians as it is the profession of the soldier to deal with them, and my word for it, they will deal with them with the sword. It is their profession to do so; and there is no man in any profession of life who is not disposed from the very nature of the human heart to magnify his own profession.

Mr. President, in relation to the contractors who contract to furnish Indian supplies in the Indian country I believe that the law and the practice under the Department have all the provisions and guards which are thrown around Army contracts, and if I am correctly informed the Interior Department has contracted for its transportation at two or three cents a pound less than the War Department; and as an instance of the economical administration of Indian affairs by the War Department or by the Interior Department I would cite to my honorable friend what perhaps would escape his attention, the fact that the Navajoe Indians are taken care of by the War Department. The War Department took those Indians and placed them upon a reservation and they are supporting them at an expense of more than a million dollars, from a million to a million and a half—

Mr. GRIMES. How much did the refugee Cherokees cost the Indian department?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I can give the Senator the figures upon that matter.

Mr. GRIMES. Is it more or less than the cost of the Navajoes?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think the expense of all the refugees has been at least a million dollars a year, but there are about twenty thousand of them. But there are only about seven or eight thousand of the Navajoes.

Mr. GRIMES. But the one is in the midst of civilization, and the other is far removed in New Mexico whither you have got to transport all your supplies.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not complain of the War Department in making the expenditure, although it may be that the prices at which the provisions were purchased to feed those Indians were higher than they ought to be. I suppose the contracts were let to the lowest bidder just as the contracts in all the Departments are let; but when we speak of the expense of dealing with the Indians, and suppose we are going to make it a matter of economy to deal with them through the War Department instead of the Interior Department, I must say that I do not believe that the hope of my friend from Ohio, in that respect, will be realized. At all events, so far as this question is concerned, I desire that it may go over until we come to the consideration of the other amendments upon the bill which will be prepared by the Committee on Indian Affairs at farthest by Thursday next; and I desire to move an executive session today for the purpose of disposing of an Indian treaty.

Mr. STEWART. I am very much pleased with the decision of the Finance Committee. It is the first light I have seen upon the Indian question during a residence among the Indians of sixteen years. It is the first change which I have seen proposed that has promised anything for the better. It is well known in the history of our country that up to 1848 the Indians were taken charge of by the War Department, and we had such men as General Harrison and General Jackson, and men of that character, to look after the Indians, and there was much less trouble and much less expense in the system than now, although there were a great many more Indians to be taken care of; and the management of Indian affairs was much more satisfactory to the country. The present new system seems always to have been a job, and a badly performed job.

I do not mean by what I say to reflect upon any particular individual. I disclaim any such purpose. I have the highest respect for the Secretary of the Interior. I do not desire this change on his account or on account of any particular individual. But I think it must be obvious to every one that the soldiers of the Army, with men of character at their head, generals who have the confidence of the country, particularly after our Army has been tested as it has been in the late struggle, have more at stake than obscure Indian agents who are collected together for political purposes, whom nobody knows, who are responsible to no one. The Army is much better organized, much better provided with all needful facilities for carrying on this business. Besides, you are compelled to incur about the same expense for the Army now that you would be under the proposed system. You must keep armed forces in all these Territories and throughout the entire region of the Indian country. You must keep an army there to whip the Indians as soon as the traders shall have cheated them. That is the situation.

The proposed change will not increase the expenses of the War Department. It is the opinion of many eminent military men that they can carry on the whole business, manage all the Indian wars, and not increase the expenses of the War Department; so that we shall thus avoid the entire expense which the Indian department now subject us to. Several generals with whom I have conversed say that if they had the whole charge of the matter, and the parties dealing with the Indians were responsible to them, such would be the result. Certainly, in so important a matter as this, that has created so much trouble and so much vexation, I am extremely anxious that the system shall be under the control of men in whom the country has confidence. The country has confidence in our military men; the Indians have confidence in them; but the country has no confidence in obscure Indian agents and Indian agents who are getting rich out of the Indian business.

The proposed change cannot make things worse. We have tried the system of army supervision and found it to work better than the present one. While that system prevailed we never had as much trouble with Indian affairs nor so much complaint of corruption and fraud as we have now. It is the testimony of every one who lived in those times and who is old enough to be familiar with them, with whom I have conversed, that while the business was in the hands of the War Department, although there were abuses then, there were fewer abuses than now; and then we had been a long time on a peace establishment, whereas now we have been recently in a war in which our officers and soldiers have been tried. If there is any employment growing out of this matter; if a larger number of soldiers are to be retained in the service; if there is any patronage or any advantage in increasing the Army, give this service to the soldiers; do not take from them the legitimate business of the Army and give it to mere adventurers. If you go among the people who live near the Indians, and converse with them, you will find their testimony to be that these adventurers are not benefiting either the Indians or the community.

Sir, this is the first time I ever heard it intimated that Indian wars had been got up by the War Department. I thought it was a well-established fact that it was the Indian traders, who speculated with the Indians and got into disputes about their contracts, that brought on most of our Indian difficulties. The Senator from Wisconsin has spoken of one or two Indian wars, and has attributed them to some rash action of officers of the War Department. Such things may have occurred; but I would not place much reliance on the testimony of Indians when they came to make a treaty at a subsequent time and the soldiers could not be heard. I do not think that the evidence is that the War Department has been instrumental in getting up these wars; I believe the testimony is the other way.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the gentleman does not understand me to say that the War Department got up the wars.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator said they had been caused by indiscreet officers.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not say that they intended to get up wars, but they blundered into and produced those wars.

Mr. STEWART. I undertake to say that the men living in the Indian country, when they are talking about these things and relating them, must be the worst set of liars in the world, if the Indian agents and Indian traders are not the principal parties in getting up the Indian wars. I never before heard them attributed to the indiscretion of men connected with the Army. There may have been indiscretions of that kind; but where you will find one such instance among the trained officers of the Army, you will find five hundred among the vagabonds that go into the Indian business, either as traders or as agents, to make money out of the Indians. Officers of the Army have something at stake; they are responsible to authority, and they can be tried for their offenses if they misbehave. A man who deals with Indians ought to be subject to military law. His conduct should be liable to be inquired into by a summary tribunal. Then, if you trust this matter to the Army, you will always have ample witnesses to everything that is done; but if you trust it to the Indian trader and Indian agent, who are in partnership, as is very often the case, you will have no interested witnesses.

Where there is a fort and one or two hundred men there, the chances of a combination between those one or two hundred men and the officers stationed at that fort are nothing like as great as where they are partners in trade with the Indians. I believe it is charged that the Indian trader and the Indian agent are usually in partnership. At all events they are charged with being so; it is a part of the system; but there could not be partners in an Army of three or four hundred men; you would have some witnesses who would tell you how these transactions did actually occur. I am decidedly in favor of the amendment reported by the Finance Committee.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. President—

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. POMEROY. If it is the wish of the Senate to go into executive session, I have no desire to continue this discussion now; but I want to say that before we take a vote on this question it ought to be at least very well understood in the Senate. It is a new system. It is an experiment that has not been tried, at least for a good many years. The reasons that induced the taking of this bureau from the War Department originally, may still exist. I do not care to discuss the proposition to-day. I think we had better deliberate very maturely upon it before we take the vote. It may be best to concur with the committee; but the point as to whether we should make this change in the middle of the fiscal year instead of at the end of the year I think ought to be considered. If the Senate wish to go into executive session I do not care to say anything further on the subject at present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment until I call up a small California bill of consequence to us, which I have been trying for three or four days to call up during the morning hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you want to pass it to-day?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir. It will not occupy a moment of time. It is a House bill, recommended by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. CONNESS. It is to confirm the titles to certain lands in the city of Benicia—a bill to which there can be no objection, and which will not occupy a moment of time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the bill will not excite any discussion I will not object to it.

Mr. CONNESS. It certainly cannot, for it is recommended by the Committee on Public Lands, and is a House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw my motion for the present to enable the Senator to call up his bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I move, then, to take up House bill No. 557, to quiet the title to certain lands within the corporate limits of the city of Benicia.

Mr. GRIMES. Is that the town opposite Mare Island navy-yard?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; that is Vallejo.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to postpone the Indian appropriation bill until Tuesday next, and make it the special order for that day at one o'clock, with the purpose to dispose of it on that day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion now before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that will be withdrawn to enable me to submit this motion.

Mr. CONNESS. Of course I withdraw it for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill be postponed to and made the special order for Tuesday next at one o'clock.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not say Monday?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin will not be ready with some amendments that he desires to offer, before Tuesday. The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment a bill (S. No. 168) to provide for the disposal of certain lands therein named.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills of the Senate with amendments to each:

A bill (S. No. 58) granting lands to the State of Oregon, to aid in the construction of a military road from Corvallis to the Aquina bay; and

A bill (S. No. 99) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Albany, Oregon, to the eastern boundary of said State.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate, and had appointed Mr. THOMAS D. ELIOT of Massachusetts, Mr. JOHN L. THOMAS of Maryland, and Mr. JAMES M. HUMPHREY of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 187) erecting the Territory of Montana into a separate surveying district, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 255) to authorize a departure from the established mode of surveying in certain cases;

A bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 180) extending the time for the completion of the Agricultural College of the State of Iowa; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 181) to enable discharged soldiers to change the location of their homestead selection in certain cases.

LAND TITLES IN BENICIA.

Mr. CONNESS. I now renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 557) to quiet the title to certain lands within the corporate limits of the city of Benicia. It proposes to relinquish and grant all the right and title of the United States to the land situated within the corporate limits of the city of Benicia, in the county of Solano, State of California, as defined in the act incorporating the city, passed by the Legislature of the State of California April 24, 1851, to that city and its successors, upon trust, however, that so much of the lands as is in the bona fide occupancy of parties upon the passage of this act, by themselves or tenants, shall be conveyed by the city to such parties; but the relinquishment and grant by this act is not to extend to any lands within the corporate limits occupied as a military depot of the United States, or heretofore reserved by the United States for public purposes; nor shall they interfere with or prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, the land or any part of it, or preclude a judicial examination and adjustment thereof.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following as an additional section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all the right and title of the United States to the land within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Cruz, in the State of California, as defined in the act of the Legislature of that State incorporating said town, be, and the same are hereby, relinquished and granted to the corporate authorities of said town and their successors, in trust for and with authority to convey to the bona fide occupants of said land: Provided, That this grant shall not extend to any reservation of the United States, nor prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, to said land or any part thereof, nor preclude a judicial examination and adjustment thereof.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire what is the effect of that amendment. I understand it releases to the corporation of the city the right that the United States has for the benefit of the persons who are in occupation at the time of the passage of this act. Is that so?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. Those entitled to the occupation.

Mr. POMEROY. Not to those who happen to be in occupation.

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; by themselves or tenants.

Mr. STEWART. Those in title.

Mr. GRIMES. Let the last clause be read again.

The Secretary read as follows:

That all the right and title of the United States to the land within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Cruz, in the State of California, as defined in the act of the Legislature of that State incorporating said town, be, and the same are hereby, relinquished and granted to the corporate authorities of said town and their successors, in trust for and with authority to convey to the bona fide occupants of said land.

Mr. GRIMES. Not to those who are entitled to the occupation, but to those who are in occupation.

Mr. STEWART. Let the whole sentence be read, and you will see what is the meaning.

The Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

Provided, That this grant shall not extend to any reservation of the United States, nor prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, to said land or any part thereof, nor preclude a judicial examination and adjustment thereof.

Mr. GRIMES. A valid adverse claim to an inchoate title!

Mr. SHERMAN. That will give to a tenant under a lease the legal title, and turn over the real owner to the courts.

Mr. CONNESS. I will ask that this bill lie over for the present. I see on examining the amendment reported by the committee that the conditions in it are not the same as those contained in the first section, and I will make them the same, if the Senate will allow me.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to put a House resolution, which is a very brief one, on its passage.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will there be any debate upon it?

Mr. WILSON. I think not.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. What is it about?

Mr. WILSON. It is House joint resolution No. 149.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to move an executive session.

Mr. WILSON. This resolution will take but a moment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That will only lead to some other little bill being called up, and it is now three o'clock, and I want an executive session.

Mr. WILSON. Let this pass first.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We can open the doors after we get through the executive session and pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to hear the title of the resolution that the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to call up read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending motion is to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I presume we can have the title of that resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. "A joint resolution declaratory of the law of bounty."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That will lead to discussion, of course.

Mr. WILSON. None whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are several confirmations that ought to be confirmed and which have been pending for several days, and I do not see any reason why we cannot have an executive session.

Mr. WILSON. This is a resolution simply to allow bounty to the persons who have been detailed from the Army to act in some other place, the same as if they had not been detailed. I think it ought to pass, and pass to-day; but if the Senator insists upon his motion I will not press this resolution.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think we ought to have an executive session.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes sixteen, noes not counted; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 30, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. DORNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

IOWA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I find, on further examination, that I was right in supposing that there is no existing provision of law covering the object of the joint resolution I offered yesterday morning. I therefore again ask unanimous consent to offer it, in compliance with the request of the board of trustees of the Iowa Agricultural College. The building, a very creditable one to the State, large, commodious, and imposing, is now in process of erection, and they desire assurance that there will be no failure in the grant if the building should not be quite completed in the time now required by law.

No objection was made.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It provides that the time for completing the Agricultural College of the State of Iowa, in accordance with the provisions of the act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, approved July 2, 1862, be extended for the period of one year.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. GOOD-YEAR.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour of to-day be dispensed with, and that the Committee on Public Lands be allowed an hour for their business after the tariff bill shall have been concluded.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I ask that they may be allowed an additional hour.

The SPEAKER. Giving that committee two morning hours?

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKEE. I object to giving the committee two hours.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I ask that they be allowed a morning hour when the tariff bill shall have been concluded, and that the morning hour of to-day be dispensed with.

Mr. McRUER. I object to that.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. McRUER] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HIGBY. I hope my colleague will withdraw his objection.

Mr. McRUER. Very well; I will withdraw it.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I renew the objection.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order, during the morning hour, is the call of committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Public Lands, where the call rested at the close of the morning hour on Thursday last.

FORT HOWARD MILITARY RESERVE.

The SPEAKER. The pending business is the consideration of Senate bill No. 168, to provide for the purchase of certain lands therein named, reported from the Committee on Public Lands by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DONNELLY.] The question is upon ordering the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The first section provides that the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be authorized to cause to be offered at public auction all the unsold lots of that portion of the public domain known as the Fort Howard military reserve, which is situated in the county of Brown, and State of Wisconsin, giving not less than two months' notice of the time and place of such sale, by advertising the same in such newspapers and for such period of time as he may deem best. Every such lot shall be sold separately to the highest bidder for cash, and when not paid for within twenty-four hours from the time of purchase, it shall be liable to be resold under the order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, at such reasonable minimum as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and no sale shall be binding until approved by that officer.

The second section provides that it shall be the duty of the President to cause patents to be issued in due form of law for every such lot, as soon as may be after purchase and payment.

Mr. DONNELLY. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. DONNELLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELOCATION OF SOLDIERS' HOMESTEADS.

Mr. DONNELLY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) to enable discharged soldiers to change the location of their homestead selections in certain cases.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that whenever it shall be made to appear to the register and receiver of any land office of the United States that any soldier of the Army of the United States, who has been honorably discharged from service, did, during such service, through any agent or agents, without personal examination, select public lands in accordance with the provisions of the homestead act, which selection, upon personal examination by such soldier, shall prove not to be satisfactory to him, then the register and receiver shall permit the selection by such soldier of another like amount of the public lands for a homestead, the first selection to be canceled, and the fees and ten dollars paid thereon to be applied to the new selection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DONNELLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND GRANTS FOR AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. DONNELLY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report adversely upon the bill (H. R. No. 498) to amend section two of an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts." I ask that a letter on this subject from the Commissioner of the General Land Office be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 21, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a bill to amend section two of an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, approved July 2, 1862, with your oral request that the opinion of the Office be expressed upon its provisions.

The bill provides that the act above recited be so amended as to make the script issued to the older States, under the provisions of the aforesaid act, receivable from bona fide settlers in any State or Territory for the purchase of any public lands in such State or Territory, although such lands may not be "subject to private entry," a restriction now required by law. It will readily be seen that this provision exposes at once the whole surveyed portion of the public domain to this scrip, and that holders of this class of paper have only to locate in the name of some actual resident to enable them, in any Territory, to acquire the surveyed lands to an indefinite extent, probably in many instances monopolizing all of the most desirable lands, and thus defeat to a large extent the beneficial provisions of the homestead and pre-emption laws, or drive that class of settlers upon the less valuable and less desirable lands. And in any State the same would be true to the extent of one million acres.

To the holders of the scrip such a law would be advantageous, as it would promptly and largely enhance the value of the scrip by more than doubling the active present basis for its redemption and enabling it to go in advance of the pre-emption and homestead settler, gathering the choice lands. But in the new States and Territories, and the new districts in the older land States, it would be a great hindrance to settlement and cultivation, and would have the effect, in the end, of not only retarding the advance settlements, but would compel the pioneers to pay an increased price for these selected lands greatly larger than the scrip-holding States would receive in the enhanced price of the scrip, the difference passing into the hands of the intermediate agent who by the law must stand between the State and the location, the States being wisely forbidden to make such location.

Being made receivable for both offered and unoffered lands, until substantially exhausted, it would cut off almost entirely cash receipts for public lands.

The scrip issued and to be issued under the law as it now stands will require seven million and twenty thousand acres for its satisfaction, and it is submitted whether such a barrier can with advantage be placed around our pioneer settlements, and whether both the nation and the new States and Territories would not respectively lose more than the older States would gain by the proposed modification of the law. I may add that in this view the judgment of the General Land Office is unqualifiedly adverse to the measure as inconsistent with the public interest.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

J. M. EDMUNDS,
Commissioner.

Hon. I. DONNELLY, House of Representatives.

The bill was laid on the table.

TERRITORIAL LAND DISTRICTS.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, provides that Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana be each created land districts, to bear the names of the respective Territories; the district land office for each to be established at such place within the district as the President of the United States may from time to time direct.

The second section provides that for the purpose of carrying the act into effect the President be authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess as in similar cases, a register and receiver for each of the several land districts created, who shall be required to reside at the site of the district land office, and whose powers, duties, obligations, responsibilities, compensation, and emoluments shall be the same as now allowed by law for like officers in New Mexico. It is provided that the act shall not take effect until after six months from its passage, and that the compensation shall not begin until the incumbents shall have actually entered on duty within the land districts to which they may be appointed.

The third section proposes to enact that the preemption, homestead, and general laws for the disposal of the public lands shall be extended to the several land districts named, but not to embrace mineral lands.

The fourth section provides that a surveying district comprising the Territories of Arizona and Utah be created, and that the President be authorized, in the manner before specified, to appoint a surveyor general for the district whose compensation shall be $3,000 per annum, with such an allowance as shall be approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, not exceeding $5,000 per annum for clerk hire, and $3,000 for rent, pay of messenger, and incidental expenses.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SURVEYING DISTRICT IN MONTANA.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 187) erecting the Territory of Montana into a separate surveying district, and for other purposes, with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill, which was read at length, provides for erecting the Territory of Montana into a surveying district. The President of the United States is authorized to appoint a surveyor general for the district, who shall hold his office at such place as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. The location may be changed from time to time when in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior the public interest may require it. The powers, duties, obligations, responsibilities, and compensation of the surveyor general are to be the same as now prescribed by law for the surveyor general of Oregon, with a proper allowance for clerk hire, office rent, and fuel, not exceeding what is now or may hereafter be allowed by law to the surveyor general of Oregon. It is also provided that the surveyor general of Montana shall reside within the Territory.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to inquire of the gentleman who reports this bill whether the Territory of Montana is not now attached to another Territory for surveying purposes, and whether the Territory to which it is attached has not had all the available land surveyed, leaving nothing for the surveyor general there to do, except what is to be done in Montana.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. The nearest land office to Montana is that near the Yankton reservation, in the southeastern corner of Dakota, some eight hundred miles from the northwestern extremity of Montana. The Commissioner of the General Land Office favors the creation of a surveying district in Montana to facilitate and expedite the surveys of public lands. He thinks it is now too remote for the convenient transaction of business.

Mr. PRICE. From information I have on that subject, I am induced to believe the only business for a surveyor to do in that region of country now is in Montana, and the two Territories being joined together for surveying purposes, this is a work of supererogation, to say the least of it. It is to create an additional office, with the expense of clerks and all the other expenses attached to the office of a surveyor general. It will be that much more than is necessary for doing the work. If that be the case, then this bill ought not to pass. If the surveyor general in Dakota has not more work to do than he can do—which I believe to be the case—in both Territories—

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. That is a question which would arise on a proposition to discontinue the office in Dakota.

Mr. PRICE. If we have a surveyor general in Dakota to do the surveying for Montana as well as for Dakota, and this Government is paying the expense of an office, of clerks, and all the expenses incident to the office of a surveyor general, and nothing is being done, then we ought not to pass this bill. If there is no work in Dakota, then let him go to Montana where there is work to be done.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. If there be no work done or to be done in Dakota, then let the land office there be abolished; but do not therefore deprive Montana of an office, where it is imperatively required by the need of the people and the interests of the Government.

Mr. PRICE. If the gentleman will attach that to the bill, then it will remove an objectionable feature to it—abolish the office in the other Territory, or let the surveyor general do the work of both Territories, for which he has ample time and for which the Government has provided ample compensation. I think we are incurring an additional expense entirely unnecessary.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Has this bill been reported from the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. ECKLEY. Yes, sir; and it has been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Having been in the Territory myself, I am satisfied the establishment of a land office in Idaho is absolutely necessary.

Mr. PRICE. This is not for Idaho; it is for Montana.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. It is still more necessary there even than in Idaho. I will say further, from my observation I believe every Territory should have a surveyor general appointed and resident in the Territory. In the Territory of Utah there are no public lands surveyed; surveys have been returned, but there are no public lands open for sale in Utah and no land office there, although the Territory has been settled for eighteen years.

Mr. PRICE. We are not talking about Utah.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I am showing the necessity for the establishment of a land office in every Territory. In Montana there is a population of thirty thousand, and it is increasing very fast. There are cities and towns in Territories of four and five thousand people. In some there has never been a foot of public land surveyed and sold, and these cities are built upon squatter rights; and the interests of the Government as well as those of our citizens therefore demand early surveys, so that these lands may be brought into market at once. The gentleman from Iowa lives upon the frontier and ought to know it would cost more for the surveyor general of Dakota to go with his "kit" any time during the last five years from the capital of Dakota to the capital of Montana than to establish a land office in Montana.

Mr. PRICE. Is not the present surveyor general able to survey both Territories?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. No, sir; he is not.

Mr. PRICE. Is there any more surveying to be done there than there was two years ago?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Certainly. There are on the way to Montana more than twenty thousand people. Two years ago the Territory was organized with scarcely any population, and when I was there last summer there were at least twenty-five thousand people in the Territory.

Mr. PRICE. I do not doubt but what there are a great many people in Montana and a great many more to go; and there is just as much land there now as there was fifteen years ago, and I presume it is likely to remain. What I maintain is, that there is no surveying going on in Dakota at all, and the surveyor general who has Montana under his control and direction can do all the surveying in Montana. If I am right in that, then we ought not to pass this bill. If I am mistaken in that, and it can be clearly shown that the surveyor general's time is taken up in Dakota so that he cannot do what is required in Montana, that puts a different face on the matter. But that is not the fact, so far as my information goes, and I have obtained it from different sources.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VIRGINIA LAND-WARRANTS.

Mr. ECKLEY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely on House bill No. 169, allowing the further time of five years to those owning land-warrants issued by the State of Virginia to her officers and soldiers of the Virginia line on continental establishment to enter and survey the same; and it was laid on the table.

MILITARY ROADS IN OREGON.

Mr. ECKLEY, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, Senate bill No. 99, granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Albany, Oregon, to the eastern boundary of said State.

The amendments reported by the committee, which were of a verbal character, were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ECKLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ECKLEY, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, Senate bill No. 68, granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Corvallis to Aquina bay.

The amendments reported by the committee, which were of a verbal character, were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be read the third time; and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ECKLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 37) making a grant of land in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas.

Also, that the Senate had passed acts of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 385) for the relief of Thomas W. Stevens; and

An act (S. No. 357) to aid in the construction of telegraph lines, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes.

CONSOLIDATION OF LAND OFFICES.

Mr. ECKLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of the House asking for the consolidation of the land offices in several States, to report a bill consolidating land offices in the States of Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas.

The bill was read a first and second time.

The first section provides for one land office in Alabama, to be located at Montgomery; one in Florida, to be located at Tallahassee; one in Louisiana, to be located at New Orleans; one in Mississippi, to be located at Jackson; and one in Arkansas, to be located at Little Rock.

The second section provides that there shall be a register and receiver at each of the land offices provided for in the first section, whose compensation each shall be the same as now prescribed by law, provided the salaries and fees of each shall not exceed $3,000 in any one year; and that it shall be the duty of these officers, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to collect without delay all maps, plots, books, papers, records, and other property belonging to the several land offices in those States, and carry the same to their respective offices; and upon reporting that the duty has been performed the Commissioner is authorized to pay them such compensation for such extra services as in his opinion may be reasonable and just.

The third section repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ECKLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEADS IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. ECKLEY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, House bill No. 315, for the relief of the inhabitants of towns and villages in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. The first section provides that any person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, or who shall have filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and who has never borne arms against the United States Government, residing in a town or village in either of the Territories of New Mexico or Arizona, and cultivating lands of the United States in the vicinity of such town or village, and being the bona fide owner of the improvements thereon, is hereby declared to be, with respect to such land, entitled to all the benefits of the several acts of Congress now in force granting the right of preemption to settlers upon the public lands, and also of the act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, notwithstanding that such person shall not reside nor have resided upon such land.

The second section provides that in order to secure the benefits of the foregoing section the actual resident in any of the towns or villages aforesaid shall establish to the satisfaction of the register and receiver, and according to such instructions as may be given by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the fact that the party is an actual bona fide resident of at least two years in such town or village, designating the place of his abode and showing the connection with or contiguity of the improved tract to the place of residence, and that the cultivation of the improved tract is an essential means of his subsistence, and that the same has been cultivated and improved for a continuous period of not less than two years in the case of preemption, or of five years in the case of homestead, and that the tract under either preemption or homestead, taken under the provisions of this act is merely an improvement, on which there is no actual residence, shall not exceed the smallest legal subdivision, or forty acres.

The third section provides that the provisions of this act shall be considered as applying not only to those persons who shall be residents of towns or villages in said Territories of New Mexico and Arizona at the date of the passage of this act, but to those who may hereafter become so.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ECKLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FOLSOM AND PLACERVILLE RAILROAD.

Mr. ECKLEY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with sundry amendments, Senate bill No. 125, granting aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the first and second sections and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of California and designated by the Legislature thereof, to construct the road hereinafter named, and to its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in said State; and the rights hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road, material for the construction thereof. Said right of way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass over the public lands; also all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-tanks.

Strike from section three the following:

And whenever, prior to said time, any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, or covered by private land grants, or occupied by homestead settlers, or preempted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company, in lieu thereof, on the line of said road, within twenty miles of the same, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections, and designated by odd numbers not more than twenty miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections.

Amend section four so that it shall read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That whenever said Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company shall have ten consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated, the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners to examine the same, and if it shall appear that ten miles of said railroad and telegraph line have been completed in a good and substantial manner, and in all respects as required by this act, the commissioners shall so report to the President of the United States, and patents of lands, as aforesaid, shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to and continuous with said completed section of said road, unless said lands are covered by the exceptions of this act. And from time to time, whenever ten additional miles shall have been constructed, completed, and in readiness, as aforesaid, and verified by the commissioners to the President of the United States, then patents shall be issued to said company, conveying the additional sections of land, as aforesaid; and so on as fast as every ten miles of said road are completed, as aforesaid: Provided, That said commissioners named in this section shall be paid by the company ten dollars per day for the time actually employed, and ten cents per mile for the distance actually and necessarily traveled each way.

Amend section five by striking out "draws" and insert "drains;" also to amend the proviso so as to read as follows:

Provided, That said company shall not charge higher rates to the Government, its officers, or agents, than they do to individuals for telegraphic service.

Also add to the proviso of the fifth section the following:

And that the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free of all toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States, and the same shall be transported over said road at the cost, charge, and expense of the corporation or company owning or operating the same.

Amend section six by adding after line fourteen the following: "and the sections and parts of sections of lands, the title of which by the aforesaid grant shall remain in the United States, within ten miles of each side of the road, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of public lands when sold."

Amend section seven by striking out the word "two," in line six, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "one."

Amend the same section by striking out in line eight the word "seventy," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "sixty-nine."

Amend section eight by striking out all of the section after the word "case," on line seven, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the title to the public lands herein reserved for the construction of said road shall revert to the United States."

Amend section ten by striking out in line six the word "two" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "one."

Amend section twelve by striking out the word "two," in line five, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "one."

Amend section thirteen by striking out all after the word "that," in line one, to the word "Congress," in line six.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words with reference to that one of the amendments which proposes to require from this railroad company the transportation, free of all charge or toll, of all troops and munitions of war of the United States at any time when required by the Government.

Now, sir, I insist that this provision is unjust. Although we give to this company the right of way, we do so in consideration of the advantage which the construction of this road will afford the entire country along the line. The investment of the capital of this country in a railroad adds in fact to the value of every acre of public land or private land anywhere within its vicinity. In the case of the Illinois Central railroad, I undertake to say that the benefits which the State of Illinois and the United States have derived from the construction of that road are infinitely greater than the value of all the land that was ever granted to the company.

Mr. Speaker, I object to the principle of imposing such a requirement on any railroad company to which we make grants of land. When this war broke out the Illinois Central Railroad Company were required by the Government to furnish cars and other means of transportation to the Government. They had not the ability, with all their stock, to furnish all the transportation which the Government required. They were obliged to apply to other roads in the State of Illinois and out of the State. The entire equipments of several of those roads were seized by the Government and kept week after week and month after month in that service. Yet, upon the principle which it is proposed to incorporate in this bill, we deny to the company to whom we are now giving this grant the power of asking compensation for the service, however great, which they may render to the Government. In the case to which I have referred, the Illinois Central Railroad Company said to the Government, "Take our road and run it if it is necessary for the assistance of the Government in carrying on the war." The Government said, as it ought to say in every case, "We will charge you a reasonable sum for the right of way, and then we will pay that compensation which is fair and just with regard both to the Government and the corporation." I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment reported by the committee will not be agreed to; and I ask a separate vote upon it.

Mr. ECKLEY. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] objects to this railroad company, to whom we make a liberal grant of land, making a contract by which they shall agree to do certain things for the Government. I think that no other member of the House is disposed to make such an objection. I ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken in gross upon all the amendments reported by the committee, with the exception of the one on which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] has called for a separate vote.

The question being taken, the amendments, except that reserved, were agreed to.

The amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was read, as follows:

Add to section five the following:

That the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free of all toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States; and the same shall be transported over said road at the cost, charge, and expense of the corporation or company owning or operating the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ECKLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINNESOTA LAND GRANT.

Mr. ECKLEY, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 310, making an additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota in alternate sections to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State, it being already provided in the Senate bill, and moved that it be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. HOLMES, from the same committee, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table:

Petition of the National Normal School Association, praying for a grant of lands to establish State normal schools.

House bill No. 299, to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands."

Memorial of the Legislature of Washington Territory relative to common schools.

Memorial of the Governor and Legislature of the Territory of Utah praying for a donation for town sites in said Territory for school purposes.

Petition of James D. Regnurt, late receiver of public funds at the United States land office, St. Croix Falls.

House bill No. 206, to improve the navigation of the Mississippi river to St. Anthony and Minneapolis.

Petition of the citizens of Buffalo for a donation of public lands for the improvement of Eagle harbor, Lake Superior.

Mr. HOLMES. I will say in the last two cases an adverse report has been made from no hostility to those improvements, but because it is necessary first to receive reports of the surveys for which an appropriation has been made in the river and harbor appropriation bill.

CHANGE OF MODE OF SURVEYING.

Mr. HOLMES, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 355, to authorize a departure from the established mode of surveying in certain cases, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill states that, owing to the peculiar habits of settlement of a portion of the people of New Mexico and Arizona, and the irregular configuration of the surface of the country in some parts of the mountainous States and Territories, the ordinary mode of surveying the public land is not suited to all circumstances and localities; and that the adaptation of the public surveys to the peculiar wants of the people and to the face of the country in such cases would save expense to the Government and promote the public interest. And then it goes on to enact that whenever, in the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a departure from the ordinary mode of surveying the public lands in the mountain regions or in the river valleys would best promote the public interest, he may authorize such modifications therein as he shall deem necessary to adapt the surveys to such localities respectively; but no such changes shall be made except under specific regulations and instructions; provided that it shall not be construed to authorize the surveying of any public land into tracts containing less than forty acres nor more than one hundred and sixty acres each.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill which has just been read appears to me to be of more importance than the House seems to think. It is proposed to change the entire system of land survey which has existed so long in the United States in reference to a portion of the western country. I would be glad if the gentleman would allow the bill to go over and be printed, so that it may be examined by the House before such a change is made in a system so long established as our present system.

Mr. HOLMES. The bill has been printed, and was passed by this House at the last session of Congress, after consideration and recommendation by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It was reported favorably by the committee, and passed the House, as I am informed, almost unanimously.

Mr. KASSON. I will only say, then, that without any limitation as to the form in which the survey is to be made, such a bill deserves more examination than it could have under the pressure of business of that committee.

Mr. HOLMES. I have no objection, if the bill can be taken up at any time. It simply authorizes surveys to conform to the circumstances of the country. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HOLMES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND TITLES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. JULIAN. My friend from New York [Mr. HOLMES] has yielded to me to enable me to make a report which I promised to make recently. I report back from the Committee on Public Lands Senate bill No. 343, to quiet land titles in California, with sundry amendments.

Mr. BIDWELL. I wish to say that I have a few amendments which I desire to offer to this bill, and for the purpose of saving time I would like to have them read with the bill.

The SPEAKER. The usual course is first to have the bill read, and then the amendments reported by the committee. After that the gentleman can offer his amendments.

The bill was read; and at the conclusion of the reading,

The SPEAKER announced that the morning hour had expired, and the bill would go over until next Tuesday morning.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill and amendments printed, including those proposed to be offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. BIDWELL.]

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

TERRITORY OF LINCOLN.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, from the Committee on Territories, reported back House bill No. 647, to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Lincoln; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted to the committee.

TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. ALLEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for the purpose of reference Senate bill No. 357, to aid in the construction of telegraph lines, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes.

The bill was accordingly taken up, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PUBLIC PARK IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the establishment and maintenance of a public park in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr.

SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill by paragraphs for amendment, commencing as follows:

On wrought-iron tubes of all descriptions, four cents per pound; on wrought-iron hinges of all descriptions, and bed-screws, four cents per pound; on galvanized iron of all descriptions, four and one half cents per pound; on anvils of all descriptions, four cents per pound; on cut nails and spikes of all descriptions, two cents per pound; on all hand-saws not over twenty-four inches in length, $1 50 per dozen and thirty per cent, ad valorem; over twenty-four inches in length, $2 50 per dozen, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent, ad valorem; on all back-saws not exceeding ten inches in length, $1 25 per dozen, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent, ad valorem; over ten inches in length, $2 25 per dozen, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent, ad valorem; on squares of steel or iron, marked for measuring, six cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent, ad valorem.

Mr. AMES. I move to amend, in the last line, by striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifty," making it "fifty per cent, ad valorem." Steel has been advanced in price three cents per pound, and thus stands at the old rate of duty.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the gentleman to make it at the rate per pound rather than ad valorem. I suggest to make it ten cents.

Mr. AMES. I will accept the modification to strike out "six cents" and insert "ten cents," leaving the ad valorem duty as it stands.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I rise to oppose the amendment. I have not been very troublesome to the House during the consideration of this bill, notwithstanding I have a constituency which I believe is about equal in number to that which is ordinarily represented by a member on this floor, and have therefore an equal right to express my views. I dissent from this special provision of this bill and to many others. I hold that this vast increase of the tariff duty will have the effect to impose an onerous and excessive burden upon the consumers of the articles which are mentioned in this bill—the toiling millions of the country.

If I understand the effects of this bill, they are these: by the provisions of this bill it is expected to affect the value of at least $1,000,000,000 worth of material which is now on hand in the warehouses of merchants, manufacturers, and importers, including all that will be manufactured, all of which, both that on hand and that to be manufactured, is to be consumed within the next year. My information from gentlemen who are cognizant of the facts is to the effect that that estimate is not too large. The effect of this bill will be to increase the cost of that $1,000,000,000 worth of material to be consumed by the people of the United States within the next year at least thirty per cent. upon the whole amount, or at least $300,000,000. Now, let me ask this committee, who will pay this increase? If it was an appropriation to pay a premium to manufacturers and to the holders of the imported articles there might not be so much objection to it, for it would be an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States. We derive the money in the Treasury of the United States in a great measure from taxes upon the wealth of the country, upon the incomes of the wealthy, upon articles of luxury; and if we should take out of the Treasury of the United States $300,000,000 and appropriate it pro rata to those who ask assistance under this bill, we could better afford to do it, for then we would have a constituency able to pay it. But we propose to take it, by this bill, not from the wealth of the country, but from the poor, who are burdened in common with the wealthy with the taxes imposed by the revenue bill; we are to extract from the consumers of the United States during the next year the sum of $300,000,000, and to pay it to whom?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. AMES, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out "six" and inserting "nine," so as to make the duty nine cents per pound. I will state that we raised the duty upon all steel and iron from which these squares are made, and it is manifestly improper that we should leave all iron and steel squares at precisely the same rates they have borne heretofore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] is not perhaps aware that in the manufacture of these articles a large amount of waste is incurred. It takes much more iron or steel to manufacture a square, than what is really found in the square after it is made, which is usually not a heavy article, but may have had much labor bestowed upon it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] if it takes more steel and iron to make a square in England than it does in this country.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is too astute himself to be deceived on this question, and he ought not to undertake to befog anybody else. He knows very well that if steel is allowed to come into this country only at so high a rate of duty that squares cannot be profitably manufactured from it, then, instead of steel coming in here unmanufactured, we will have it imported in the manufactured form.

Mr. KASSON. I would ask the gentleman if we did not essentially reduce the internal revenue tax on these articles.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman asks that question for the sake of having me argue his side of the question, which I do not propose to do.

Mr. KASSON. What I want are the facts.

Mr. MORRILL. The facts have already been stated.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I rise to oppose this amendment of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] When the line of my argument was interrupted just now I was endeavoring, on behalf of my constituents, to show that this presents a practical question to the members of this House for consideration. The manufacturers and importers of this country have now on hand in the warehouses of this country large stocks of goods, to the amount of many millions, which have been withheld from consumption by the demand of high prices. And the question is whether those high prices which have prevailed during the war shall be continued or not, and whether my constituents and the constituents of other gentlemen here shall be required hereafter to pay those extraordinary prices for these articles imported from abroad or manufactured here. Now, I hold that it is a clear proposition that the consumers of this country must pay the prices added to the materials embraced in this bill. We cannot derive the payment from any one else. It is a question between us and our constituents at home.

Now, sir, these gentlemen come here and tell us that, regardless of consequences, they must have an average of at least thirty per cent. added to all the materials which are essential to the prosperity and existence of the country. I maintain, sir, that if there is a prosperous class in this country it is not that class who for four years toiled for their Government at thirteen dollars per month. My constituents at the outbreak of this war had nothing to do that would give them even a livelihood at home. Our crops were rotting, literally rotting, and burning in our granaries and store-houses. Our people went to the war and spent four years in the service of the Government for the paltry sum of thirteen, fourteen, or fifteen dollars per month. They wore the clothes which these eastern gentlemen manufactured and sold to the Government at extravagant prices. We used the guns upon which eastern manufacturers made their fortunes, the powder and everything else with which they supplied the commissary establishment of the United States. We supplied it at prices ruinously low. Yet during the whole time we were paying the eastern manufacturers for the articles which we needed one hundred per cent. more than the articles cost them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "nine" and inserting "eight." I propose this amendment pro forma for the purpose of saying what is indisputably true, that the question of protection here to-day is more eminently a question of protection to the growers of wheat than of protection to the manufacture of any fabric.

Sir, from the year 1850 to 1860 the wheat crop of Ohio fell from thirty million bushels per annum to fifteen millions. Our average crop from virgin soil is about thirty bushels to the acre. Our crop from old soil, worked under the free-trade policy, which has prevailed throughout our history with rare and brief intervals, is from seven to ten bushels per acre. Under free trade our farmers draw but an average of twelve bushels from the acre; while England, importing breadstuffs and converting them into manures, has enabled her farmers by equal labor to draw from the acre, not twelve bushels, as they formerly did, but from thirty-five to forty-three bushels.

When those whom the gentleman from Illinois represents draw wheat from the prairies for exportation they draw from the soil a portion of the vital principle of wheat for exportation; while if the wheat they produce were consumed in the neighborhood and the straw consumed by the mules and horses of iron-works and coal mines, the vital elements thus abstracted would be restored to their land and the next year the crop would be as heavy as the last. But they gather up their crop, and if there be a foreign market for it send it over thousands of miles of railroad and across the ocean, to be transmuted into manure and increase the reward of the English farmer's labor. Free trade thus diminishes the results of the labor of the gentleman's constituents upon their acres. The farmers of the prairies need such protection as the provisions of this bill will give them.

The friends of the bill want to secure to the farmers a home market. We want to enable them to restore each autumn or spring the vital principles of the soil extracted by each year's crop of grain. Would you know how much Ohio paid for her British goods during the last decade? Take the cost price in gold, and add to it half the value of her wheat lands. For she began the decade with thirty million bushels in 1850, and in 1860 she raised but fifteen million bushels. She had sent, in addition to the money value of the imported goods she consumed, the wheat-yielding principle of her acres to England to enrich the soil of that island.

This question of protection is the farmer's question; and the gentlemen from Iowa and Illinois plead against the interest of their grain-growing constituents when they strive to compel us to consume British, French, and Belgian articles. I plead the farmer's cause; and he who will study the measured rewards of the farmer's labors in the constantly diminishing crops of our agricultural districts will find that they diminish in proportion to the amount of white and hard crops gathered here and shipped abroad for consumption and transmutation into manure.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise to oppose the amendment of my colleague, not for the purpose of replying to his argument, but to say a few words in answer to the eloquent argument of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARDING.] The item now is steel squares. It is therefore connected with the manufacture of steel, and is a good place for me to make the illustration I desire. The gentleman from Illinois has argued the question all through as if the amount of duty levied upon the foreign article would enhance the price to the extent of the duty, and that the additional price would have to be paid by the consumer.

The argument can be illustrated upon this item of steel, as indeed it can upon every other article imported from abroad. Twenty years previous to the tariff of 1861, known as the Morrill tariff—considered by many to be a high tariff—the price of foreign steel, for we had no American steel then, and have little now, was from seventeen to nineteen cents. That tariff advanced the duty. Previous to that it was only twelve per cent. ad valorem. That tariff more than doubled that rate. It has been increased since by the tariff of 1864, and we propose to advance it more. Notwithstanding this is said to be the best country to sell in, on account of our inflated prices, still the price for steel throughout the United States is much less now than then. How can the gentleman answer facts like these when he endeavors to induce the people to believe the rate of duty levied upon an article increases the price to our constituents? It is a false idea entirely, and these facts in regard to steel show that it is. I hope the gentleman will carefully consider them, and if he does, I am sure he will change the view he now takes of this subject.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I rise to move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Neither amendment nor debate is now in order.

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I renew it. I wish to say to gentlemen that all the arguments they have presented to this House are predicated on the basis that by reason of the duty imposed the subjects of this legislation will be protected from any reduction in price. They say that reduction in price will ruin them, and therefore it is necessary to keep it up. They wish to keep the price so as to prevent all foreign competition. We are told that foreign competition, by lowering the price to the consumers of this country, would ruin them. It will not be denied that this is the argument for keeping the duty up on this and all other articles. They ask this tariff that they may be protected from any reduction in price, and therefore the consumers of the country are compelled to pay the three hundred millions of revenue which this is expected to raise. If you put a heavy duty on nails for instance, I will have to pay it if I use nails.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The gentleman is unfortunate in his illustration when he refers to the duty on nails. We ask no protection on nails now, and it is not necessary to put any duty on the importation of nails. We can beat the world in making nails. The very system of protection we now propose has built that manufacture to such an extent that it is able to compete favorably with any like foreign interest.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. If that interest does not need any protection then why impose a duty of two cents per pound on nails in this bill? While I am ready and willing to maintain the industrial interests of the country against ruinous competition, I am unwilling to put up the duty thirty per cent., the effect of which will be to enrich during the next year everybody connected with manufactures. If we are now commencing to build woolen, cotton, and other manufacturing establishments, and if by this bill we are to pay thirty-three and one third per cent. additional to the present prices for all the material with which we fit up those establishments, I do not see how you call that encouraging manufactures. It is a bill for the encouragement of those who have a large stock of goods on hand. They will reap the benefit of it within the next year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I wish the gentleman would remember the history of cut nails. Under the influence of the protective principle the price of cut nails has come down so that they are purchasable in the market for one quarter what they were thirty years ago, and had it not been for protection we should have been dependent for them to-day upon England. Under the system of protection there has sprung up a competition in this country which has brought that simple article of cut nails down to one quarter what it would have been had we enjoyed free trade and allowed England the monopoly of our markets. And so with everything else. The principle is the same from beginning to end.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this tariff bill can be framed, as I said yesterday, upon one of two principles only. It must be upon the principle of laying a duty either upon the raw material or upon the manufactured article. And the effect of this tariff must be one of two things, either to bring in the manufactured article or to bring in the laborer himself. It will import either the product of the labor or the laborer himself. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] may have his choice. It is an impossibility to frame this tariff upon any other principle than that the article shall be manufactured on this side or on the other side of the Atlantic. If upon the other side, the laborer will stay there; if upon this side, he will come here and enrich this country, and enrich the gentleman's State more than any other. If the State of Illinois, to which this Government has donated public lands enough to make an empire, wants wealth she must have laborers, and she can have laborers if she will permit them to be employed on this side of the water rather than the other.

I defy any one to frame a system of tariff upon any other than one of the two principles I have named, namely, a discrimination against American labor or a discrimination for it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] seems to cling to the idea of the tariff of 1846, which was framed expressly and avowedly upon the principle of free trade and discrimination against the laborer of this country, and in favor of the laborer of the old country. We were told yesterday that these doctrines were old. So are these objections old. But they come from a new source. Heretofore they came from the mouths of another party, another side of the House; now they are taken up on this side of the House. But, sir, the fate of the tariff of 1846, its ruinous effect upon the industry of the country, would be the fate of this tariff if it were framed upon the principles suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I withdraw the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MORRILL to strike out "six" and insert "nine," and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On needles of all kinds for sewing, darning, and knitting, forty per cent. ad valorem; on needles for knitting or sewing machines, one dollar per thousand, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On table cutlery, with ivory, pearl, or metal handles, one dollar per dozen and forty-five per cent. ad valorem; on table cutlery with other than ivory, pearl, or metal handles, twenty-five cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem; on butcher knives, cook's and shoe knives, and spatulas and palettes, one dollar per gross, and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out after the word "handles" the words "twenty-five cents" and insert "twelve cents."

Mr. MORRILL. No objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cutlery of all kinds, not including pocket cutlery, not herein otherwise provided for, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on pocket knives and pocket cutlery of all kinds valued at not over five dollars per dozen, seventy-five cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem; valued at over five dollars per dozen, two dollars per dozen, and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On steel skates costing twenty cents or less per pair, ten cents per pair; costing over twenty cents per pair, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On padlocks and curry-combs of every description and of whatever material composed, twenty-five cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend by adding after the last paragraph the following:

On chest, drawer, till, cupboard and wardrobe locks of every description, and on door and shutter bolts, and wrought iron drawers, twelve cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, forty-five cents ad valorem.

This is rendered necessary by reason of the duty on the articles that enter into their manufacture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On horse-shoe nails, all kinds, seven cents per pound: on cut tacks, brads, or sprigs not exceeding sixteen ounces to the thousand, two and a half cents per thousand; exceeding sixteen ounces to the thousand, three cents per pound.

On wrought nails and spikes less in size than twenty-penny, (20d.,) four cents per pound; and on all other wrought nails or spikes, three cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the last paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On wrought-iron rivets, bolts, spikes, and nails less in size than twenty-penny, four cents per pound; on all other wrought-iron rivets, bolts, spikes, or nails not herein otherwise provided for, three cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move to insert after the last paragraph, "on horse and mule shoes, two cents."

Mr. STEVENS. It ought to be more than that.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The principal producers of the article are satisfied with two cents, but I am willing to make it higher if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. STEVENS. I think it ought to be four cents, but I will say three.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will accept that.

Mr. KASSON. I understand the gentleman to say that the parties interested were satisfied with two cents, but now the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to increase it in order to conform to the general principle of protection or prohibition. I think the gentleman from New York had better adhere to what the parties in interest are contented with.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the amendment making the duty three cents will not be adopted. These articles are made by patent machinery, and are produced very cheaply, and I think the manufacturers will be content with two cents.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will adhere to my original proposition, making it two cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On railroad splice-bars or chairs, punched or unpunched, two cents and a half per pound.

On iron bars for railroads or inclined planes, made to pattern, ready to lay down, one cent per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the last paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On all iron imported in bars for railroads or inclined planes, made to patterns and fitted to be laid down on such roads or planes without further manufacture, one cent per pound.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I propose now to strike out of the amendment the words "one cent per pound," and insert the words "seventy cents per one hundred pounds." The amendment of the chairman of the committee proposes to continue the present rate of duty on railroad iron. I do not expect with the temper that has been manifested by this committee to succeed in reducing this rate of duty. I know that these iron men are very poor and very much depressed, and I am glad to know that some of those who are taking special interest in this subject are also coming forward as the champions of the western farmer. I am almost disposed to suggest to the appointing power that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who gave us a dissertation on farming this morning, be placed at the head of the Agricultural Department, because he gave us some ideas that it will be very difficult to get our farmers in the West to comprehend unless they shall come in some official form from the head of that Department.

Now, sir, the farming interest in the West is interested in this particular item of the bill. We are engaged in the construction of railroads, and it is of the utmost importance to that section of the country that those railroads shall be completed, and that they shall not be retarded by the legislation of this Congress.

As I stated on yesterday, I repeat to-day, that I am in favor of granting to American manufacturers fair and reasonable protection against foreign competition. And, sir, I think we have already granted by the action of the present Congress some relief, for I hold in my hand a letter written by a person connected with one of the principal iron establishments in this country, the Cambria Iron-Works, in which I find a statement of the amount of reduction in the former tax upon the iron interest of that establishment. I find by the statement of this letter, written by Mr. Morell, that the amount of tax which we have taken off of every ton of railroad iron is $8 40. We have taken off of pig iron, according to his statement, $2 40. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa what he would regard as a proper protection for the iron interests of this country.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will answer the gentleman. I know that the iron interests in this country have been prosperous during the past four years. I know that they have prospered under the present tariff. I know that according to the statement of the gentleman to whom I have referred—and any person can satisfy himself as to its accuracy—we have reduced the tax to the extent I have stated.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech, and I must go on with my remarks. I desire to inform the gentleman that instead of its being the fact that prosperity has attended the manufacture of railroad iron during the last four years, not a rolling-mill in the country during the last eighteen months has made one dollar; and there is not a mill in the country that can run to-day, competing with the English manufacturer, without a ruinous sacrifice in its business.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I cannot yield any further. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's strong point is—and it is no new argument presented on this floor—the strong point made by these western gentlemen is, that they are in want of railroad iron at a low price for the purpose of cheapening the cost of constructing their railroads. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he believes that striking at a great interest of this country is the way to promote the general prosperity and secure the construction of railroads in a portion of the country. Now, sir, the cost of constructing railroads, on the average, is forty to fifty thousand dollars per mile. The difference between the present duty on rails and the proposed duty would make a difference of only $450 per mile in the cost of the construction of railroads. Yet the gentleman, for the sake of saving four hundred to four hundred and fifty dollars per mile in the cost of constructing railroads, is ready and willing to strike at this great interest.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRISWOLD. No, sir; I have not time to yield. Now, sir, I should like members of this House to decide whether they deem it incumbent on them to protect American interests, or whether they are here to act in obedience to the behests of the English manufacturer. In the Engineer, an English publication, I find, on page 295, the following:

"One of the objects of the British association [the Iron and Steel Association] is to look after foreign tariffs."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I present to the consideration of the gentleman from Iowa the question whether it is wise to respond to the desire of the English association formed for the protection of manufactures there and to look after foreign tariffs, including the tariff of this country. In perfect consistency with this purpose is the issuing of the free-trade pamphlets, which have been circulated throughout the country. Congress has been flooded with them. Every member has had placed upon his desk these specious arguments issued by the Free-

Trade League in this country. Mr. Chairman, whom do we find to be the managers and officers of this association? I stand here ready to prove that not a solitary man among the officers or counselors of this Free-Trade League is identified with the industrial interests of the United States. Almost without exception every man of them is either a mere theorist or is directly or indirectly interested in or identified with the English trade.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the amendment, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] may renew it.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. I desire to say a few words with reference to this particular clause in the bill; and I shall not seek to have the House decide it by an appeal to prejudices that may be created, as they are often created, by quotations from foreign newspapers or from the circulars of some particular foreign firm. This is a simple question of detail. My colleague [Mr. GRISWOLD] appeals for protection to the rolling interest of this country. That interest is entitled to protection. There are other interests also entitled to protection. But my complaint is, that in seeking to protect one interest gentlemen on this floor generally are too apt to lose sight of all others. Sir, what is the increase in this rate of duty and the reason assigned for it? Previous to the last session the duty on railroad iron was $13 44 per ton. It was raised last year to $15 75, expressly for the reason that the internal tax levied on it was $8 40. Now, that internal tax has been thrown off, and yet it is proposed to raise the duty to $22 40.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I ask the gentleman to let me interrupt him for a moment.

Mr. RAYMOND. I do not want to be interrupted. You can follow me. I wish to say that is a large increase in the rate of duty on railroad iron. See what is the whole amount of duty levied on iron landed here—$15 75 to be paid in gold; freight charges to be paid in gold; insurance and commission; in all $27 75 in gold, or $38 62 in currency, is to be paid on every ton of railroad iron brought here from England. That is so much protection on every ton. According to the present law it is proposed to increase it $6 75 in gold, or ten dollars in currency, so that every railroad that buys a ton of iron landed here from abroad has to pay forty-eight dollars in currency over and above the cost of production abroad. If that is not sufficient protection, what, in Heaven's name, will be? The great objection I make to this cry for protection is not that it is wrong in principle, but that there is no end to it. We were told in the beginning if we protected this infant manufacture it would soon stand alone. We have been doing that for thirty or forty years, and yet every session of Congress witnesses new demands for increased protection.

How will this fall on the railroad interest? I take two railroad companies in my own State, the New York Central and the New York and Erie, both employing more capital than all the rolling interests in the United States, disbursing ten times as much money and providing for and supporting ten times as many people. They renew one fifth of their roads every year, and will require each two hundred and twenty thousand tons to lay down new portions of their tracks, on which they will have to pay $975,000 of increase; that is, both will pay about two million dollars by way of protection. In Heaven's name, is not that enough? They pay $2,000,000 apiece as internal tax, and we are to put $2,000,000 more on them in the way of protective duty. They cannot stand such oppression. And these are only two roads out of all in the United States. They all paid something like six million dollars of internal tax, and you are proposing now to put $6,000,000 upon them in the shape of protection. I desire to see the time come when this iron interest will be able to protect itself.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to say that the duty imposed under the present tariff affords no protection at all to these rail makers. This is proved not only by theory but by experience, and I will demonstrate it to my colleague whenever he will give me an opportunity. We were told at the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, against the plea for increased duty on American rail, that there was not capacity in this country to produce all that was needed. What are the facts to-day? With a capacity in this country of producing nine hundred thousand tons annually, last year the production was only about three hundred and fifty or four hundred thousand tons; and that was because the price at which the low grade of English rails were offered in the market of this country was so low that the American producers could not compete with them. That is the simple fact. I commend it to the consideration of the gentleman, and I appeal to his sense of justice not to ignore that fact.

If gentlemen are going to single out for attack this one single branch of the iron interest, I give them notice that it will be just as disastrous and fatal as though they attacked all the branches of the iron interest together. You cannot single out any one branch which absorbs so much labor and material as this does without producing a disastrous effect upon every branch of the iron interest. The gentleman from New York city [Mr. RAYMOND] knows as well as I do that no branch of industry in England has ever contributed so much to the national wealth and prosperity of that country as has the great iron interest; and no branch of industry will ever contribute so much to the national wealth and prosperity of this country as the great iron interest if properly encouraged and protected. I appeal to him not to permit his judgment to be warped by the futile and specious arguments that are presented by gentlemen who are interested in railways or English manufactures.

Mr. RAYMOND. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying a few words. I think if the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] would deal a little more in details and not quite so much in generalities we might understand this question a little better than we do now. He says the manufacturers of railroad iron in this country have not been conducting a profitable business during the last four years. I suppose they have not been losing a great deal; they have probably succeeded in at least paying expenses.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Many have not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The better way for the gentleman to inform us would be to tell us how much they have made or how much they have lost per ton on the iron manufactured by them. If they have been able heretofore barely to pay their way, they ought to be satisfied now. As I have already shown by the testimony of gentlemen interested in the Cambria Iron-Works, we have relieved them of an internal duty of $8 40 per ton. And yet they ask us now to place an additional duty of six dollars in gold per ton upon all iron imported, in order to give them the protection they say they need. Now, sir, that is a fact that we can all understand; we have already relieved them of that amount of duty per ton. There is no answer to that; no gentleman has attempted to answer it. Let gentlemen come down to these details and tell us how much these manufacturers have made or lost per ton, and then we can judge of this question.

We have been asked to increase the duty on this article; and not only on this article, but upon every article embraced in this bill, because of the high price of everything. The gentleman from Vermont, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL] commenced his speech the other day by deprecating the amount of currency which we now have in circulation. And he desires a reduction of the currency in order that we may reduce the prices, and thereby afford protection to American manufactures. Now, are you to reduce prices by increasing the amount of protection given to manufacturers? If it is because of high prices that they are not now making as much as they desire to make, will you reduce those high prices by affording them a margin of increase of price on all their manufactures? Every one knows that so far as you increase the marginal profits to them by this protection, you hold out to the workman the prospect of getting the manufacturer to accede to a demand for an increase of his wages. And where is it to stop? The truth of the whole matter is, that this legislation is simply legislation in favor of keeping up the high prices that now prevail in this country; it will have and can have no other effect. And I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] that I am not striking at this interest merely. I desire to reduce all the duties provided for by this bill, and let them stand where they now stand under existing legislation. I am free to say that I will not vote for this bill, for I believe it to be extravagant in its demands and in its provisions. And I will remark here, as I remarked yesterday, that those who are asking for this legislation are making the greatest legislative mistake that has ever been made in connection with the interests of the manufacturers of this country. They will, by legislating so as to keep up the high prices which now prevail in this country, place such a burden upon the people as will bring about a reaction which will swing back the rates of duty far below where they are now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. There are two or three points which I wish to notice in the argument of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.] I suppose he will agree with me that what we do in reference to this clause about railroad iron should be done so as at least to make the bill distributively just. Now, I would be glad to have him and other gentlemen consider this question. If we put the tariff upon bar iron, as has already been agreed upon, at one and a quarter cent per pound, how can he regard it as just to put a tariff on railroad iron of only seven mills per pound? There is no distributive justice in such a rate as that. And if he carries the point which he desires to carry, in relation to railroad iron, then we ought to go back and change every other item in the bill in relation to iron.

It costs about the same to make a ton of railroad iron that it does to make a ton of common bar iron. And because we have given some special favor to railroad iron in the internal revenue bill, we give it less protection in this bill than we do to common bar iron. And the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] wants us to give it still less protection by reducing it almost to one half of what is now proposed. I am perfectly well aware that we have been compelled to raise the tariff more than we otherwise should have done, because of the opposition of the gentleman from Iowa and others to a more stringent loan bill, which would have reduced our inflated currency, and brought us more rapidly down to the basis of fixed values in this country. But as that large amount of circulation is still afloat, and as values are constantly changing, and liable to change even more rapidly from the uncertainty of foreign affairs, we must now give such protection to our manufactures as we would not otherwise have been compelled to give.

I am unwilling in this bill to adopt all the dogmas of any one of the extreme parties, whether free traders or tariff men. But as a practical question I demand that our own interests in this country shall not be eaten up and destroyed by the interests of foreign manufacturers. I remember perfectly well, and gentlemen here remember, what has been the policy of England for the last one hundred and twenty-five years in reference to this country. The manufacturers and Birmingham smiths, more than a century and a quarter ago, petitioned Parliament in the following words:

"That the American people may be subjected to such restrictions as shall forever secure the iron trade to this country."

And that is still the purpose and policy of Great Britain. And those gentlemen who desire to give Great Britain the opportunity to accomplish that purpose, will vote with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] on the proposition he has now made.

Why, sir, in 1750 a bill was actually introduced into the British Parliament ordering that every iron mill and slitting mill in America should be demolished; and it only lacked two votes of becoming a law. And although that bill did not carry they did carry a proposition that from that time forward no slitting mill should ever be erected in America, and that no trip-hammer, to be run by water power, should ever be erected in America; that we might produce the raw material, but that it should be exported to them to be manufactured. And whenever the Americans went to work to supply themselves with what they needed the Birmingham smiths went up to Parliament with a petition that such legislation might be had as would forever secure the iron trade to the people of Great Britain. And I wish to say that the same sort of issue is now upon this country.

While I am upon the floor, I wish to respond to a question of the distinguished gentleman from New York city, [Mr. RAYMOND.] He wants to know where this cry for protection will end; when the iron interest will be sufficiently protected to stand alone. I will answer the gentleman. It will be, if that unfortunate day ever comes, when American labor is only equal to the pauper labor of Great Britain in its wages per day. If that happy day shall ever come when the amount of our capital shall be proportionately as great, and the rate of our interest shall be as low as it is in Great Britain, then he may be able to find what he seeks.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DODGE. I renew the amendment to the amendment for the purpose of saying a few words. I am confident that there is no portion of the country so deeply interested in the increase of our iron interests, and particularly the interest of railroad iron, as is the West. The State of Iowa, twelve hundred miles from the sea-coast, is more deeply interested in the successful increase of the railroad interests of the country than almost any other State. Within the last five years there has been a vast increase of the capacity of rolling iron in this country. I differ from my colleague from New York city [Mr. RAYMOND] in regard to the prosperity of the iron interests of this country. I know that for the last eighteen months those interests have been far from prosperous. But during the early years of the war the iron interests were prosperous, and during that time the railroad iron mills of this country increased rapidly. The railroad interests of the West are now stimulating the production of railroad iron in the West. There are now rolling-mills in Chicago; there are rolling-mills in St. Louis; and I have been informed within a few days past that a large amount of capital is about to be raised to put up immense rolling-mills on the Mississippi river, near the Iron mountain in Missouri.

The people of the West are more interested than any other portion of our people in securing railroad iron made from the best quality of iron. The railroad interests of this country for the last fifteen years have suffered immeasurably from the poor quality of the railroad iron that has been imported into this country. They have had the products of the cinders of the mountains of Wales converted into rails and imported into this country. The result has been the imposition of a tremendous expense upon the railroad interests. We want to develop the manufacture of railroad iron from the very best quality of iron. It is of more consequence to railroads that they secure the first quality of rails than that they shall procure them at a low price. And grant the protection now proposed and railroad iron mills will spring up all over the West, not only providing new rails, which are wanted for the construction of new roads, but rolling the old rails and perpetuating in the cheapest possible manner all the mighty railroad interests of the West. I now withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I think this particular provision in relation to railroad iron should be changed as originally proposed by my colleague, [Mr. WILSON,] and I beg gentlemen who are insisting here upon protection not to regard those of us who oppose the full measure of protection that they ask as being in favor of free trade. I am willing for one to give to the manufacturers of this country all the protection that the necessities of the hour require. But I am not willing to give them such protection as I believe they do not require. We have a proposition here to increase the duty upon railroad iron to the extent of six dollars per ton. And yet in the internal revenue bill which we have just passed we have relieved that branch of industry entirely from internal taxes. We have taken the duty off coal; we have taken the duty off pig iron, and we have taken the duty off railroad iron, or relieved the railroad iron of burdens of internal taxation to the extent of $8 43 per ton; and yet gentlemen, not content with that, ask that we shall give an increased protection of six dollars per ton to every manufacturer of railroad iron. And upon what ground do they ask this protection? That these industries are not flourishing at this time. I undertake to say, and I care not what other gentlemen may say upon that question, that the railroad iron interests and the railroad iron manufacturers of the country have flourished during the last year.

I hold in my hand the return from the Cambria Iron-Works, of Pennsylvania, a company having a capital of $2,000,000, showing that during the last year they have paid $215,000 of internal tax, or ten per cent. upon their capital. It shows they have made a greater profit upon the capital invested than perhaps any other class of capitalists in this country. I do not suppose they have been ruined during the last year when they were able to pay ten per cent. or $215,000 of internal tax.

By reference to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I find that the iron interest has increased during the last year. The State of Pennsylvania has paid more tax for the rolling of railroad iron during the nine months preceding this than during the entire year of 1864-65. Notwithstanding all this these gentlemen ask additional protection of six dollars per ton, when we have given $8 43 on railroad iron. In addition to that, we have given this interest a special protection by our legislation in reference to the Pacific railroad. We are now building three or four roads across the continent, and have compelled them all to purchase iron of American manufacture. Is not this a protection not given to any other interest? We have never compelled any class of our people to purchase goods of American manufacture, but have uniformly allowed them to go where they pleased to purchase what they needed. So then this railroad interest has a special protection which has been afforded to no other interest. Now, Mr. Chairman, when I consented to the reduction of three dollars per ton on railroad iron in the internal tax bill, I did it on the understanding that there would be no proposition to increase the duty on imported railroad iron.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I ask the gentleman, if he had any such understanding, with whom it was he had it.

Mr. ALLISON. I may have perhaps used too strong an expression. I am not at liberty to state what occurred in committee on this subject, or I would be very happy to communicate everything for the information of the House. I do not say the gentleman from the Pittsburg district is not and has not been in favor of the largest protection to the iron interest. I am with him, and with all others, in favor of protection, but not to the same extent. I am in favor of protection when there is necessity for it, but there is no such necessity, in my opinion, for the high rate of tariff proposed in this bill for the protection of this iron interest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I renew it; and I do it for the purpose of expressing a few ideas not given by the gentleman from Iowa in connection with this duty. There is another great interest more seriously affected by this bill than either the iron or railroad interest, or indeed than both interests combined. The agricultural interests of the country will feel the result of this legislation. Gentlemen representing the iron interest seem to have taken the agricultural interest under their especial charge, thus seeming to insinuate that the Representatives of the great West are incapable of protecting their own particular interests.

They say that we must build up a home market for the agricultural products of our country. Now, our products are affected by the facility or want of facility of getting them to market, and for the purpose of affording the facility required we are straining every nerve to build railroads, so that the farmers may have ready access for their products to market. And here we have a proposition to increase the duty six dollars in gold on railroad iron. We know how that will affect the railroad interest of the West. It will interfere with it very seriously by impeding the construction of those railroads; for unless we can extend transportation facilities to the farmers of the West their products will remain on their hands. This increase of duty, therefore, is really a tax on the agricultural interest. It will enhance the price of railroad iron, and to that extent increase the difficulty of building these roads so necessary to the West. The increased duty will come out of the pockets of the agriculturists. Every farmer who raises a pound of beef or pork, or who attempts to transport a barrel of flour or bushel of corn to market, has to pay this tax. Now, I do not see why this interest should be so heavily oppressed for the protection of the iron interest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman all those free-trade doctrines that are now located along the Mississippi were some years ago further located down South. I had hoped that they were expunged from the free industrial manufacturing North, but I was mistaken. Whatever else the secessionists took with them I am very sorry they did not take all their relics of free-trade doctrine with them. But it seems they did not; a little of the seed is left.

Mr. Chairman, thirty years ago, before there were rolling-mills in Pennsylvania for iron bars of this kind, the price of that article introduced from England was more than three times what it was five years ago, before the war. It was reduced from the former price simply by protecting American manufactures, and enabling our rolling-mills to build up the trade. And yet these gentlemen cannot see it, cannot understand it. They are blind to everything but a theory which is mere theory, and never can be reduced to practice without crushing all the industry of this country. Do not gentlemen know that the reason why England can now send into this country, as she does, nearly as much iron as we make is because the price of labor is but one third what it is here? Why, sir, the price of iron is well ascertained to consist of one part capital to nineteen parts labor. Nineteen twentieths of it is labor. It is the laborer, therefore, that these gentlemen are striking at; it is the laborer whom the Free-Trade League of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] are seeking to grind by carrying out his theory. I say the Free-Trade League of the gentleman from Iowa, for I find his name connected with one of these leagues. I find his name in its circular as among its managers. But I am too much exhausted to speak, and I will say no more.

Mr. KASSON. I renew the amendment. I am glad my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] with whom on the same committee I have worked for three years, has again renewed his suggestion ranking me as a free trader. I am glad of it for two reasons: first, that it affords me the opportunity to state in a dozen words what kind of divisions exist as to the principles that control members of this House, as well as the people of the country, on this subject. There is on the one hand the absolute free trader, who wishes to abolish custom-houses and let the markets of the world be as free as those of our own country. At the antipodes from him is the man who calls himself a protectionist, but who is really a prohibitionist. One of the latter class, and a friend of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, declared to me that he would build up a Chinese wall between the United States and every other part of the world. That was his remedy for our difficulties.

Mr. STEVENS. I never said anything of that kind.

Mr. KASSON. I did not say that the gentleman said it, but a friend of his and a distinguished protectionist of Pennsylvania, to whom the gentleman defers, like most Pennsylvanians, as authority.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not defer to that doctrine.

Mr. KASSON. Between those two extremes are two classes. One of them wishes simply to foster the incipient industries of America, until they are able to take care of themselves without help in fair competition with the industries of foreign countries. To that class of free traders I belong. The other is a class of men who also call themselves protectionists, who wish to build up monopolies in this country at the expense of the consumers, and of other industries in which they are not concerned.

Now, sir, I do not pretend to say to which of these four classes any gentleman in this House belongs, except myself; but I do distinctly affirm that I stand for the fostering of the infantile interests of America; and so knows the Free-Trade League of New York, or any other Free-Trade League that regards me as committed to their interests. Until those interests can stand alone, encourage them, discriminate in their favor, strengthen them. But when they have become vigorous, strong, rich, and skillful, then we say, "Hands off," open to the people of the country the privilege of a respectable competition of markets, of buying where they can buy cheapest, and selling where they can sell dearest. If you were to pass a law to compel us at the West to buy our goods from Philadelphia by imposing a discrimination against the goods shipped from New York, every sentiment of justice would revolt at it. Cross an imaginary line between Nova Scotia and New England, and you say you will not apply the principle of free competition in trade for the benefit of the people of this country. Both countries then assert that the people shall not buy where they can buy cheapest and sell where they can sell dearest, even in competition between well-established interests.

Now, sir, if advocating measures against aggression on the industries of our own country, while they are in their infancy and need support, but allowing free competition for the benefit of consumers, who are the masses of the people, when those industries are able to take care of themselves—if that be free trade then I glory in the word.

One remark in regard to railroad iron. When you tell the western people that they are getting railroad iron cheaper with every additional duty you put upon it if imported from abroad, all I have to say is, that our people cannot see it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. Railroads running through wildernesses are not very good investments. In order to make a railroad profitable it should run from town to town and through towns. There should be cultivated farms upon its line, and the farmers should have a market, and those who work the farms should have the means to buy goods carried to them and thus patronize the railroad.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] remarked that the planting and farming interests must have facilities to get to market. I tell him they want one thing more than that. They want a market to get their products to. When they burn corn for fuel on the prairies of Illinois and Missouri, it is not for want of a broad river down which they may float them to market; it is for want of a market at the end of the river. Let them induce the construction of workshops, rolling-mills, forges, and furnaces near to their fields and they will have adequate facilities for getting their productions to market. The market will be at their door.

One other point. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] said that these changes of tariff were for increasing wages; that we were continually asking more tariff to pay more wages.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to say that I said no such thing. I said that this system of legislation was calculated to keep up high prices. In that I include everything.

Mr. KELLEY. Embracing everything, he included wages. I am for increasing wages so that every working man may be able to leave when he dies more than enough to buy his coffin; that he may educate his children and leave a home for them to live in. I am for so increasing wages that tempted by them the skilled workmen of England, France, or Belgium shall come and settle on the lands of the West that are traversed by railroads, and thereby increase the value of lands and railroad stock, and create a market for the products of the field. This is the method of securing permanent prosperity to the railroads in which the gentlemen from the West are interested. This bill will stimulate immigration, increase the value of western lands by giving the farmer a market always accessible, and will relieve the embarrassed railroad companies of the West.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The reason the gentleman urges is the very one which several large iron manufacturers have urged to me. They complained of the price they had to pay their workmen, and were in favor of reducing wages instead of increasing them.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of bill of the House No. 718, debate on the paragraph in relation to railroad iron be terminated in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I desire in the first place to correct one or two misapprehensions of fact in regard to the action proposed by this bill. It proposes a tax of one cent per pound upon railroad iron, which is an increase of five dollars per ton, and no more, upon the existing rate. I undertake to say that during the last eighteen months no manufacturer of railroad iron in the United States has been doing business at a profit. I believe that no manufacturer of iron of any grade has been doing business at a profit. For the last two years the internal direct taxes upon the manufacturer, accompanied by those indirect taxes resulting from the internal taxation of the consumption of the laborer, have been actually greater than the tariff, with the gold rates converted into currency. The protection has been in favor of the foreign producer, and not the home producer. The discrimination has been in favor of foreign labor and against home labor.

Now, by the internal revenue act of the present session, as proposed to be passed, we have struck off those direct taxes upon railroad iron, but the great mass of indirect taxation, which bears very heavily upon all these classes of manufacture in which labor is the principal ingredient, will still continue. We now propose to put a tariff of twenty dollars per ton on railroad iron. That is not all protection, for from it we must subtract the amount of indirect internal revenue tax which still bears upon it. What this is I am unable to state in detail, but we may safely estimate it as not less than one half this amount. A gentleman near me says that it will amount to eight dollars per ton. My own impression is that it will not be less than ten dollars per ton. Thus we see that the protection here proposed is no such monstrous thing as gentlemen have argued.

Let me then leave this branch of the subject and recur for a moment to the arguments which have been advanced against this proposed rate of duty. All the gentlemen who have discussed this question, including my colleague from the city of New York, [Mr. RAYMOND,] who spoke on behalf of New York railroads, and the gentlemen from the West, who speak in behalf of the agricultural interest, as connected with the railroad interest, and requiring cheap transportation, have argued that this proposed amount of duty upon foreign iron is to be added to the price of railroad iron. Why, Mr. Speaker, I had supposed that that fallacy had been exposed so often, and had been so thoroughly exploded by the practical experience of this nation, that no one would deem it necessary to repeat it here. But I call gentlemen's attention to the fact that the cheapness of iron which did exist in this country at the time when the war broke out, and which would exist to-day but for the inflation caused by the war, is the result of a protection to home industry, or a building up of American interests, discriminating in favor of our own labor, so as to give the market to home producers. Strike down the home manufacturer, and you leave us at the mercy of foreign importers. Strike out this proposed duty on iron, and not an iron mill in the nation can live. Sweep away this protection, and you leave us at the mercy of the foreign importers. No man who has read or seen anything of the commerce and manufactures of this nation is ignorant of the fact that the foreign manufacturers are always found combined and acting together.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I think that this question has been pretty thoroughly ventilated. I do not suppose it is necessary for gentlemen on either side to get into any kind of heat upon the subject. All that is necessary is to understand the facts. I believe that we ought to consider the changed circumstances of the country at the present time in relation to this manufacture, as well as all others. It is true that the large increase of our taxation upon almost all kinds of articles increases the expense of the manufacture. It is also true that our inflated currency makes the cost of living to the workman far greater than ever before. He cannot buy a barrel of flour or a barrel of meat or anything else necessary for the subsistence of his family without paying a largely increased price. So a specific duty of the same amount which would answer the purpose four years ago is not now enough. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] was mistaken in reference to the amount of increase proposed in this bill. The present duty is seventy cents per hundred pounds, or fourteen dollars a ton. This proposes twenty dollars a ton. It makes an increase, therefore, of six dollars. The reduction of the internal revenue tax it is just and proper we should consider. In that we not only relieved railroad iron by name, but we also relieved pig iron, making a deduction equal to $7 20 per ton.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the gentlemen from Iowa and the West ought to favor this tariff on iron. My friend from Missouri lives very near the great Iron mountain. It would be very great gain to the West if that mountain could be melted down into railroad and other iron. They have coal, and there is no reason why they should not produce iron cheaper than in Pennsylvania or anywhere else. I hope soon to see that result reached.

Mr. ALLISON. We do not oppose a duty on railroad iron but only the exorbitant rate which is here proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is now closed by order of the House.

Mr. MORRILL modified his amendment by striking out "or" and inserting "and."

Mr. BENJAMIN demanded tellers on the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. MYERS, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 40.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment as amended.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. COFFROTH, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 47.

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to amend by striking out "one cent per pound" and inserting "seventy cents per hundred pounds."

Mr. THAYER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ALLISON and Mr. MORRILL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON moved to amend by striking out "one cent per pound" and inserting "seventy-five cents per hundred pounds."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 58.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

On iron known as angle iron, two and three fourth cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike that out and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On iron known as angle iron, whether in shapes called T, L, and H, or any other shapes than round, square, or flat, not herein otherwise specified, two and three quarter cents per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the words "and three fourths;" so as to leave the duty on angle iron at two cents per pound.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I would like the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to tell us what kind of iron "angle iron" is.

Mr. MORRILL. It is iron used for girders in buildings and for various other purposes. It is a large, heavy iron for building purposes, made in various shapes, known as L, T, and H iron, and by various other names.

The amendment of Mr. ALLISON was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On old scrap iron, five dollars per ton: Provided, That nothing shall be deemed old iron that has not been in actual use, and is fit only to be remanufactured by reheating, rolling, and welding.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting the word "and" after the word "reheating;" also by striking out "and" and inserting "or" after the word "rolling."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUNDY. I move to amend by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "ten" before the word "dollars," so as to make the duty on old scrap iron ten dollars per ton. I wish to state as the reason for my motion, that the scrap iron mentioned in this paragraph is what is known as "raw scrap," and is nothing more or less than the odds and ends of wrought iron, bar iron, round iron, and all those kinds of iron from blacksmiths' shops. It is more valuable than any other description of wrought iron, except it be perfect bar iron, &c.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would remind the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUNDY] that the proviso of this paragraph states "that nothing shall be deemed old iron that has not been in actual use."

Mr. BUNDY. That would include any iron that is the refuse of blacksmiths' shops, or any other shops where they manufacture wrought iron. It is iron that is worth in the market to-day, from two and three quarters to three cents per pound, or fifty per cent. more than pig iron. There ought to be a duty upon it of at least ten dollars per ton.

Mr. STEVENS. And though so much more valuable, it has been always rated heretofore at the same duty as pig iron.

The question was taken on Mr. BUNDY's amendment; and on a division, there were—ayes twenty-eight, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On iron wire, bright, coppered, or tinned, drawn and finished, not more than one fourth of an inch in diameter, nor less than number sixteen wire gauge, four cents per pound; less in size than number sixteen, and not less than number twenty-five wire gauge, five and a half cents per pound; less than number twenty-five wire gauge, six cents per pound.

Mr. DODGE. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting after the word "coppered" the word "galvanized."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE. I move further to amend by adding to the paragraph the words "and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem."

My reason for offering that amendment is that the duty proposed here is not sufficient for the better class of wire used for telegraphs, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that amendment will not be adopted, for I think we have already advanced the duty on iron wire quite enough. The rate of the first class under the present law is only three and a half cents per pound, and fifteen per cent. ad valorem, and we have increased it to four cents per pound; and the other class, which is now four cents per pound, we have increased to six cents.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DODGE], as he explains it, I do not think a proper one; but in the form he has actually offered it there is no objection to it.

Mr. DODGE. My amendment has reference to all the kinds of wire enumerated in this paragraph.

The amendment of Mr. DODGE was then agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the paragraph last read the following:

On iron spiral furniture springs six and a half cents per pound.

I merely desire to say that without this paragraph these springs will be imported at less than the wire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On locomotive tire of iron, or bars rolled and cut for such uses, of whatever length, three cents and a half per pound; on locomotive tire, or bars rolled for such uses, of steel or of iron, refined by the Bessemer process, four cents per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On all puddled and blistered steel, and on all steel other than cast or shear steel, in bars, sheets, slabs, plates, coils, axles, tire, and parts of machinery forgings, a duty of three and a half cents per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On all cast and shear steel, in bars, ingots, slabs, plates, coils, axles, tire, and parts of machinery forgings, valued at seven cents per pound or less, a duty of four and a half cents per pound.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the word "ingots," in the paragraph just read, the word "sheets."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out the words "four and a half" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five," so that the duty shall be five cents per pound. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the duty which I propose is no greater than ought to be granted. The manufacture of steel in this country, although recently undertaken, is one of our most promising branches of industry, and is well deserving of the encouragement which this increase would give.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad, indeed, to accede to the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.] But it will be observed that the duty proposed in this paragraph applies only to steel "valued at seven cents per pound or less." Steel is an article that enters into all our manufactures. It is difficult even now to place a duty upon anything made of steel so that it cannot be imported from abroad.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg to suggest that, according to the argument adduced a short time since, a higher duty will diminish the price of this steel; so that a duty of five cents per pound will really have the opposite effect from what the chairman of the committee anticipates.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is speaking a little sarcastically. [Laughter.] I do not propose to argue the question; but I think it is the better policy in this case to adhere to the bill.

The amendment of Mr. HALE was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all cast and shear steel, in bars, ingots, sheets, slabs, plates, coils, axles, tire, and parts of machinery forgings, and wire, exceeding three eighths of an inch in diameter, valued at above seven cents per pound, a duty of five cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On steel wire less than one fourth of an inch diameter, and not less than number sixteen wire gauge, five cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem; less or finer than number sixteen wire gauge, six cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I am authorized by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment:

In the first line, strike out "one fourth" and insert "three eighths;" so that the clause will read, "on steel wire less than three eighths of an inch in diameter," &c.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania that it should read, "not exceeding three eighths," instead of "less than three eighths."

Mr. MOORHEAD. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, and modify my amendment accordingly.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move further to amend by inserting before the words "steel wire" in the first line, the words "all steel wire, and;" so that the clause will read, "on all steel and steel wire," &c.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the gentleman explain the object of that?

Mr. MOORHEAD. It is designed to include a great many articles made of steel, such as ramrods, &c.—articles that might perhaps be designated as rods.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the gentleman that it would be better to say "steel rods" instead of "steel."

Mr. MORRHEAD. I have no objection to that, and I modify my amendment accordingly. The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On metal, converted, cast, or made from iron by the Bessemer or pneumatic process, of whatever form or description, except railway bars, three cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "bars," in the last line of the paragraph just read, the words "whether invoiced as steel or iron."

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman whether he had not better add, as an additional security, the words "or otherwise," so that his amendment will read "whether invoiced as steel or iron or otherwise."

Mr. MORRILL. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, and modify my amendment accordingly.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all railway bars, made by the Bessemer and pneumatic process, two and a half cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the clause just read and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

On railway bars, made in whole or in part by the Bessemer or pneumatic process, and steel railway bars, made in whole or in part by any other process, two and a half cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to ask the Committee of Ways and Means whether they propose to amend by adding steel carriage springs, which are omitted.

Mr. MORRILL. There has been no action of the committee on that subject.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move, then, to amend by adding after the amendment just adopted, "steel carriage springs, ten cents per pound."

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the gentleman that those articles would come within the limits of the next paragraph, which reads thus:

On steel, in any form, and on manufactures of steel of every description not otherwise herein provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

I think that this duty is certainly sufficient.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that the duty proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] is a little too high. Eight cents per pound is fully sufficient.

Mr. GRISWOLD. There is at present a difference of sixty per cent. in favor of the English manufacture. But I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont, and modify my amendment by substituting "eight" for "ten."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the amendment just adopted the following:

On railway-frogs, frog-points, fish-bars, and finger-bars, four and a half cents per pound.

Mr. PRICE. I would suggest that fish-bars are already in the bill, under the name of "splice-bars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On steel, in any form, and on manufactures of steel of every description, not otherwise herein provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. AMES. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "forty-five" and inserting "fifty-five," so that the duty shall be "fifty-five per cent. ad valorem." Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in order to cover the advance made in steel. There is no advance in the duty imposed on the manufacture of steel; but the price of steel is increased two and a quarter to three cents per pound. This amendment is necessary, in order that the manufacturer may stand as well as before.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will modify his amendment so as to make the duty fifty per cent., I will not object.

Mr. AMES. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, and modify my amendment accordingly.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to amend by inserting the following after the paragraph last read:

On all bonds, certificates of stock, or other evidences of indebtedness of the United States or any State, brought back or returned for payment, sale, or collection before due, ten per cent. ad valorem.

[Laughter.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On crinoline steel wire, flattened and tempered, seven cents per pound.

Mr. DODGE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "tempered," in the clause just read, the words "whether covered or otherwise." The object of this amendment is to protect our home industry against the importation of the crinoline wire already covered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE. I move further to amend by striking out the word "seven" and inserting in lieu thereof "ten," and by adding after the word "pound" the words "and ten per cent. ad valorem," so that the clause will read, "on crinoline steel wire, flattened and tempered, whether covered or otherwise, ten cents per pound, and ten per cent. ad valorem."

This steel wire for skirts is a very large manufacture. It is made from the steel rods. The addition made by this tariff to the duty on steel rods is very large, equal to $124 per ton, while the increase of the former duty on wire is only twenty-two cents. The consequence will be that the large number of persons engaged in this manufacture at home will be turned out of employment. The wire will be imported already prepared, and the steel will not be drawn down in this country.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DODGE. I am sure the chairman of the committee is aware of the great importance of this interest. There is employed in the manufacture of this article in this country more than two hundred thousand people.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "seven" and insert "ten," so that it will read, "on crinoline steel wire, flattened and tempered, ten cents per pound." No doubt that increase is necessary. I am assured by those engaged in the business that it ought to be fifteen in order to give a profit to the manufacturer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move that the committee rise. It is Saturday night, and we ought to have a little time to prepare for Sunday.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the committee will sit to the usual hour of half past four.

The motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cross-cut saws, twelve cents per lineal foot; on mill, pit, and drag saws, not over nine inches wide fifteen cents per lineal foot; over nine inches wide, twenty-five cents per lineal foot.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On hardware, tools, implements, carpenters' tools, vises, braces, bits, fire-tongs, and shovels, house-building hardware not otherwise herein provided for, sheaves, scales, instruments for surgical and medical uses, and all like finished articles of steel, wholly or in part, or of iron, brass copper, or other metal, and whether washed, plated, or gilt, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask the chairman whether this clause of the bill comes up to the expectation of the hardware interest of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. That is rather a hardware question.

Mr. O'NEILL. And in behalf of the American hardware manufacturers I ask for the information. I will now move to strike out "forty-five" and insert "sixty" per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Chairman, some weeks ago a communication was sent to some of the members of the House by the Philadelphia Hardware Trade Association, in which that organization indicated a desire that the duty on hardware should be increased on an average twenty-five per cent. over the duty in the existing tariff. My amendment provides for such an addition to the recommendation of the committee as would make an average increase on imported hardware to that amount. I hope the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will not object to this reasonable request. It is only just to the American hardware manufacturers that the increase should be granted, because we have in the tax bill now about to become a law increased the taxes upon the goods made by them, and I think we should endeavor, as soon as possible, at least, to raise the duty on foreign hardware to the same extent as the higher taxation proposed in our internal revenue bill, and also consider the high rate of gold and materials.

Mr. KASSON. Is it the rule to give each interest all it asks?

Mr. O'NEILL. In some cases I presume particular interests have been given not only as much, but more, than they have asked. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means a few minutes ago said that the duty on crinoline wire should be as high as fifteen per cent. ad valorem, when, as I understand it, ten per cent. was as much as the home manufacturers desired.

Mr. MORRILL. I said the manufacturers declared they could not manufacture it for less than fifteen, but I did not say they ought to have it.

Mr. O'NEILL. My impression was that the chairman of the committee had said that he was satisfied that the duty on crinoline should be higher than was asked, but he explains that it was the manufacturers who said so. I did not, of course, desire to state him wrong.

The manufacture of American hardware is one of the most important branches of our industry. Large capital has been invested in it, and if we want to protect this branch of manufacturing we should not hesitate to increase the duty to the point which I have named. American-made hardware, under the auspices of a favorable tariff, would entirely keep out the foreign-made article, even at the enormously high premium on gold. It is conceded that we can produce a better article, especially in building-hardware, and in fact in most other kinds, than the imported. Hence, why not cherish our own manufacture of it, and while the large number of operatives and skilled workmen engaged in the numerous factories and shops are day by day improving in skill, why not give the increased protection to the capital invested? I hope my amendment will prevail.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all harness and saddlery hardware, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On muskets, rifles, fowling-pieces, pistols, and all other fire-arms, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On swords and sword-blades, twenty-five cents each blade, and, in addition thereto, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On planter's or other hoes, wholly or in part of steel or iron, two dollars per dozen.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On files, file blanks, rasps, and floats, not exceeding five inches in length, forty-cents per dozen; over five inches, and not over seven inches, sixty-five cents per dozen; over seven inches, and not over nine inches, one dollar per dozen; over nine inches, and not over eleven inches, one dollar and thirty-five cents per dozen; over eleven and not over thirteen inches, two dollars per dozen; over thirteen inches, and not over fifteen inches, two dollars and seventy cents per dozen; over fifteen inches in length, three dollars and twenty-five cents per dozen.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On copper ore, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the clause just read. If this motion prevails, the duty on foreign copper ores will remain the same that it now is; namely, at five per cent. on the value. I am strongly in favor of a protective tariff; but a proper discrimination must be made between articles that will bear a high duty and articles that will not. All agree that the tax should not fall on the "raw material," but should be as far removed from it as practicable. I do not expect, under the five-minute rule, to discuss the great principles of the American protective system. On looking over the bill presented to us by our very able Committee of Ways and Means I observe with feelings of regret that they propose to increase the rates of duty on divers articles which enter into the manufacture of brass goods, so called, in a manner unprecedented, and to a degree unequalled for by any facts in the case.

The present duty on copper ore is five per cent. ad valorem. The bill before us proposes to increase the duty to fifteen per cent.

The present duty on copper in pigs, ingots, or bars, is two and a half cents per pound. The bill offered us proposes to augment the duty to five cents per pound.

The present duty on zinc and spelter in blocks or pigs is one and one half cent per pound. we increase this duty to two and one half cents. The bill submitted to us recommends that per pound.

The duty on zinc in sheets is two and one fourth cents per pound, a heavy duty, and certainly all the article will bear; but it is proposed to increase it to four cents per pound.

I will submit one example more only to illustrate my own views of the extraordinary increase of duties proposed by the bill on what the manufacturer deems the raw material he must import from abroad or abandon his business, namely, the case of nickel, on which the present duty is fifteen per cent., and which the bill proposes to increase to forty cents per pound. This must be regarded as an extraordinary proposition when it is understood that less than one tenth part of all the nickel used in this country is made here. I know of nothing in the experience of the past to justify it.

The American manufacturer who is compelled to purchase these articles from abroad and use them as "raw material" is making no money under the present rates. The excise tax he is bound to pay, with the enormous increase of the cost of production, places his business in a most embarrassing condition.

One of the most enterprising and skillful of the manufacturers of "brass goods" assured me that his company, with the exercise of the most prudent care, were not able to realize ten per cent. He assured me that even at the present rates of duty on the foreign material it would be better to place their capital in United States bonds than incur the hazard incident to all capital embarked in manufactures. And yet it is proposed to duplicate and triplicate the duties on the material he is compelled to purchase abroad or abandon his business. I presume it is well known that our smelters must have the foreign copper ores to enable them to work the home ores to advantage. I am informed that England imposes no excise tax on the articles named. I am apprehensive, sir, that if the duties are imposed as recommended our countrymen will be driven from the market, and the business of making brass goods will pass into the hands of our enemies. I send to the Clerk the following memorial and ask that it be read, as it states the case better than I can state it. At the time the memorial was sent me the memorialists did not dream of the additional duties now recommended, but sought relief from the burdens stated in their address.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, manufacturers of sheet brass, brass and copper wire, and German silver, respectfully represent that the capital invested in this business in the United States is at least $5,000,000; that all the goods they manufacture are in turn the raw materials of other branches of industry, in which are invested at least $20,000,000 more; that the excise tax paid by your memorialists and those in the same business was last year over $250,000, besides the excise tax paid by the manufacturers who work up brass, &c.

Until recently the duties imposed by the present tariff upon brass goods have been satisfactory, but our internal revenue tax and other causes have so increased the cost of our products that a very serious embarrassment has arisen in consequence of large importations of goods manufactured wholly or in part of brass, German silver, and wire, and these embarrassments become more serious with the constant decline in gold.

We use the following articles as raw materials, and it is desirable that they should be afforded at as low a rate as possible:

Ingot copper.—The present duty is two and a half cents per pound, and on copper ores five per cent. The excise tax is three per cent. The copper smelters must have the foreign ores in order to work the home ores advantageously. There is no import or excise duty on copper or ores in England, and therefore the brass manufacturers of England have this advantage in competition with us.

Spelter.—The present duty is one and a half cent per pound, or about thirty per cent. ad valorem. The English import duty is merely nominal.

Nickel, which is largely used in the manufacture of German silver.—The present duty is fifteen per cent. ad valorem. No duty is imposed in England. Nickel is produced in this country to only a limited extent, and many years must elapse before it is largely manufactured. Indeed, it is doubtful whether it is ultimately successful, as the cost of refining is much greater here than in Europe. Plated-ware is made from German silver, and this business has become enormous, millions of dollars being invested in it. Plated-ware is largely imported at the present time, and so largely that the business in this country must be completely destroyed unless we can procure our raw materials at the same rate as the English manufacturers, or unless the present duty on the manufactured goods is largely increased.

Your memorialists therefore pray your honorable body to examine into the foregoing facts, and to grant such relief as may seem reasonable, and, as in duty bound, we will ever pray.

WATERBURY BRASS COMPANY.
BENEDICT & BURNHAM MANUF'G CO.
SCOVILL MANUFACTURING COMPANY.
HOLMES, BOOTH & HAYDEN.
BROWN & BROTHERS.
COE BRASS MANUFACTURING CO.

Mr. BEAMAN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. There are large investments made in this branch of industry in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and this interest has been languishing very much during the last two or three years. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the tax of fifteen per cent. ad valorem as proposed in the bill is very small.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will give way, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. BEAMAN. I will do so.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCOFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

NEW JERSEY SOLDIERS' CERTIFICATES.

Mr. NEWELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be requested to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the adjutant general of New Jersey to distribute through the mails free of postage certain certificates of honor awarded by the Legislature to soldiers of that State, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the conference asked for on the disagreeing votes on House bill No. 613, to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes, and had appointed Messrs. WILSON, HARRIS, and NESMITH managers of said conference on its part.

PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. BANKS, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution relating to the Paris Exposition, made the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the House of Representatives do concur in the amendments of the Senate with amendments, as follows: in section one, line fifteen, strike out the words "in coin;" in section one, line seventeen, strike out the words "in coin;" in section one, line twenty-eight, strike out the words "and return;" in section one, line thirty-six, strike out the words "going and coming;" in section one, line forty-three, strike out the words "in coin."

2. That the Senate do agree to the said amendments to the amendments of the Senate.

IRA HARRIS,
JAMES GUTHRIE,
A. H. CRAGIN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. P. BANKS,
R. P. SPALDING,
S. S. MARSHALL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BANKS. The amendments made by this report reduce the appropriations made by the Senate's amendments from about two hundred and five to one hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars. I trust that the House will consent to the amendments of the Senate as amended by this report. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ROSS. I suggest to postpone this until my colleague [Mr. WASHBURN] is present. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKS. I am sorry the gentleman is not here; but the parties employed by the Government in making arrangements for the Exhibition desire as little delay as possible.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand the yeas and nays on agreeing to the report.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to lay the report on the table; and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The adoption of that motion would carry the joint resolution with it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question recurring on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, there were—yeas 75, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. BANKS. I call for tellers. There is evidently a quorum in the Hall.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BANKS and WILLIAMS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 73, noes 21.

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. GARFIELD, (at twenty-five minutes to five o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. HOTCHKISS: A petition of citizens of Schuylers county, New York, in favor of a National Insurance Bureau.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of 69 farmers, mechanics, and laborers, of Reading, Berks county, Pennsylvania, asking for an increased tariff to protect American labor.

By Mr. THAYER: The petition of American farmers, mechanics, and laborers, for a protective tariff.

By Mr. SAWYER: The petition of Christiana Brewer, of Stockbridge, Calumet county, Wisconsin, praying for the passage of an act authorizing said Christiana Brewer to enter in her own name lot No. 126, Stockbridge reservation, Wisconsin; or an act instructing the proper officer to order a rehearing in the matter.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 2, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 10th of May, a report of the chief of Ordnance furnishing information as to the present condition of the public works at Harper's Ferry; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ALBERT ELMORE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 30, 1866.

SIR: In response to a resolution of the honorable Senate, passed this day, requesting this Department to communicate to the Senate a duly certified copy of the official oath taken by Albert Elmore, as collector of customs at Mobile, Alabama, I have the honor to inclose a copy of Mr. Elmore's official oath, which has been taken by him in the form required by law.

In reference to the recital in the preamble of the resolution that Mr. Elmore is alleged to have held office under the late confederate government, and also to have otherwise given aid and support to the same, so that he therefore could not honestly and truthfully take the oath prescribed by law, I deem it my duty to say that this Department was informed before the appointment that Mr. Elmore had never held office under the late confederate government, nor given the same aid and support; that although a resident of Alabama during the war, and at one time a sub-officer of the Alabama Legislature, yet that he never took the oath of allegiance to the confederacy, and was uniformly and always opposed to the rebellion.

All the facts in relation to Mr. Elmore within the possession of the Department were communicated to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce prior to his confirmation.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. L. F. S. FOSTER, President of the Senate.

The communication was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the petition of William McDonagh, of New York, in which he sets forth that he deposited in the post office at Williamsburg a package containing the sum of $174 04, in mutilated currency of the United States, addressed to Mr. Spinner, the Treasurer of the United States; that that package was never received, and he has therefore lost the value of it, and he asks compensation from Congress. I offer this petition with an accompanying paper, and ask its reference to the Committee on Claims.

It was so referred.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of Daniel McMahon, late a captain in the twentieth regiment New York State militia, praying that he may be allowed arrearages of pension to which he alleges he is rightfully entitled; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK, from the select committee to whom was referred the memorial of the levee commissioners of the State of Louisiana and of the Yazoo district of Mississippi, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 405) making appropriation for the reconstruction and repair of the levee of the Mississippi river, in the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas, and for the improvement of the river. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) for the benefit of certain volunteer troops of Missouri who served during the war, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 114) for the relief of John A. Coan, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 172) for the relief of John M. Broome and others, the band of twelfth Kentucky infantry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 387) to secure the speedy construction of the Northern Pacific railroad and telegraph line, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 725) to provide for the payment of the sixth, eighth, and eleventh regiments of Ohio volunteer militia, of Cincinnati, Bard's company of cavalry, and Paulsen's battery, during the time they were in the service of the United States in 1862, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. This is a very brief bill to pay for services which I think ought to have been paid for long ago, and I ask that the bill be put on its passage at once. It will take but a moment.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 406) for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 407) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," approved September 24, 1789; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NYE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 118) relating to the International Exhibition at Paris, in the empire of France, during the summer of 1867, and the representation of the mining interests of this country thereat; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 119) relating to the International Exhibition at Paris, in the empire of France, during the summer of 1867, and the representation of the mining interests of this country thereat; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

MILITARY ROADS IN OREGON.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 99) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Albany, Oregon, to the eastern boundary of said State.

The Secretary read the amendments of the House of Representatives, as follows:

On page 1, line nine, strike out the word "for."
On the same page and line, after the word "sections," strike out all down to and including the word "road," in line ten, and insert "per mile to be selected within six miles of said road."

On page 2, in line eight, after the word "that" where it occurs the second time, insert "when ten miles of said road shall be completed."

On the same page, line ten, after the word "sold," insert "conterminous to said completed portion of said road."

On the same page, line fourteen, after the word "sold," insert "conterminous to said completed portion of said road."

Mr. NESMITH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 58) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Corvallis to the Aquina bay. The amendments were on page 1, line three, after the word "lay," to insert "three;" in the same line to strike out the word "of" and insert "per mile from the;" in line four, after the word "number," to strike out all down to and including the word "road" in line five, and to insert in lieu of the words stricken out "and not more than six miles from;" on page 2, line two, after the word "say," to strike out all the words to the end of line three; in line six to strike out "another" and insert "a;" and in line seven, after the word "granted," to insert "conterminous to said completed portion of said road."

Mr. NESMITH. I move that the Senate concur in those amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. No. 187) erecting the Territory of Montana into a separate surveying district, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 255) to authorize a departure from the established mode of surveying in certain cases;

A bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 180) extending the time for the completion of the Agricultural College of the State of Iowa; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 181) to enable discharged soldiers to change the location of their homestead selection in certain cases.

LAND TITLES IN BENICIA.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to take up House bill No. 557, which was under consideration on Saturday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 557) to quiet the title to certain lands within the corporate limits of the city of Benicia, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands, to add, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all the right and title of the United States to the land within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Cruz, in the State of California, as defined in the act of the Legislature of that State incorporating said town, be, and the same are hereby, relinquished and granted to the corporate authorities of said town and their successors, in trust for and with authority to convey to the bona fide occupants of said land: Provided, That this grant shall not extend to any reservation of the United States, nor prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, to said land or any part thereof, nor preclude a judicial examination and adjustment thereof.

Mr. CONNESS. There was an error in that section as reported by the committee, and I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "that" and inserting the following:

All the right and title of the United States to the land within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Cruz, in the State of California, as defined in the act of the Legislature of that State incorporating said town, be, and the same are hereby, relinquished and granted to the corporate authorities of said town and their successors, in trust for and with authority to convey so much of said lands as are in the bona fide occupancy of parties upon the passage of this act by themselves or tenants to such parties: Provided, That this grant shall not extend to any reservation of the United States, nor prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, to said land or any part thereof, nor preclude a judicial examination and adjustment thereof.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the title of the bill by adding the words, "and the town of Santa Cruz, in the State of California."

The amendment was agreed to.

CHARLES BREWER AND COMPANY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 555.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 555) for the relief of Charles Brewer & Co. It directs the payment to Charles Brewer & Co., of Boston, of the sum of $3,530, in full for the passage, on the Hawaiian bark Kamahamaha V, of sixty-eight destitute American seamen belonging to American vessels which were burned by the Anglo-confederate pirate Shenandoah, from the island of Ascension to Honolulu.

The Committee on Commerce reported an amendment to the bill, which was after the word "Boston," in line four, to insert "in coin."

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me that amendment is a very singular one. I do not know that we have ever undertaken to pay private claims in coin before. I should like to hear something as to the necessity of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. This is for the transportation of our sailors from a desert island where they were left by the rebel pirate Shenandoah. The ship in which they were transported belonged to a subject of the Hawaiian Government, and of course coin is the only thing that is used there; our currency is not known there. We pay the same rate precisely that the Hawaiian Government paid for the bringing of their own subjects to the Sandwich Islands at the same time, and it was deemed by the committee right and just and proper that the claim should be paid in coin rather than in the currency of this country.

Mr. CLARK. But these people are of Boston.

Mr. CHANDLER. The parties named in the bill are simply agents. The owner of the ship is a subject of the Hawaiian Government. Charles Brewer & Co. are simply agents for the collection of the claim.

Mr. CLARK. I suppose the shipping is all owned in Boston; these people are the real owners; and it seems to me this is a new case. I think if the amount of the bill is not sufficient in currency, it had better be made so in currency, and not be paid in coin in this way. It is the first instance I have ever known where a private claim was proposed to be paid in coin.

Mr. CHANDLER. We pay all our consuls and diplomatic agents in coin. All money that we expend abroad out of this country is paid in coin.

Mr. CLARK. That is a matter of salaries when we provide for people abroad; but here we are proposing to pay a private claim to people of our own country, and it seems to me they ought to be satisfied with the currency in which we pay all other citizens here.

Mr. CHANDLER. The money is not to go to citizens of our own country. The citizens of our own country named here are simply agents to collect the claim for a subject of his Majesty the King of the Sandwich Islands.

Mr. CLARK. The bill says on its face that it is to pay a house in Boston.

Mr. CHANDLER. They are the agents to collect the claim.

Mr. CLARK. If they are agents and other parties are the principals, what right have they here? They should come through the State Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. This came from the State Department to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLARK. Recommended by the State Department to be paid?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK. I still think it should be paid in the currency of the country. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is for the Senate to say whether they will repudiate fifty per cent. of an honest and just debt. I think the amount is thirty dollars for the transportation of each of these men from a desert island where they were left by the rebel pirate Shenandoah. This Sandwich Island vessel was sent to that island to bring off some subjects of the Sandwich Islands who were left there, and they took our abandoned sailors and carried them to the Sandwich Islands. We are to pay precisely the same price, not a cent more nor less, as was paid by the Government of the Sandwich Islands, in coin, for the transportation of their own subjects.

Mr. SUMNER. Where is this money to be paid?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is to be paid to Charles Brewer & Co., of Boston, who are simply agents for the collection of the claim.

Mr. CLARK. The point is this, that we ought not to appropriate money in coin to pay our own people. If this bill is not large enough in currency let the Committee on Commerce take it and fix the proper sum, and not bring it in here for a given sum and afterward move an amendment providing for paying it in coin. I think we should pay all our citizens in the currency of the country and make no distinction in that regard. I wish the bill to be re-committed or lie over until the committee can make an estimate how much is, in currency, the proper sum and have the claim paid in that way.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is just one way to pay it, and that is to pay it in money.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the communication made by the State Department to the Senate on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The document alluded to, if in the possession of the Senate, will be read.

Mr. SUMNER. While the Secretary is finding that document permit me to remark—

Mr. CLARK. Let the bill lie over to be examined.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; it has been before us for four months.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there are no papers accompanying the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. If the claim is to be paid at all, it ought to be fully paid. Now, as I understand it, the payment in currency is not a full payment.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; fifty per cent. less.

Mr. SUMNER. The expenditure was in coin, and we are to make the party good.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNER. I see no way in which we can make him good except by coin. The Senator from New Hampshire says make a calculation in currency; but can we do that? Suppose you had made your calculation three weeks ago, you would have made it on the basis of thirty per cent. advance, thirty per cent. as the value of the exchange. If you make it now, you must make it on the basis of fifty or sixty per cent. What will it be next week, or what will it be a month from now, when this payment may be consummated? Nobody can tell. I say, therefore, the direct practical way is to make it payable in coin. That fixes it absolutely.

Mr. GRIMES. I think it is very certain that at any rate we ought to have something upon the record here, in the shape of a report from the committee or a communication from the State Department on this subject, before we proceed to act upon the bill, because upon the face of the transaction, as it appears before us to-day, this is a mere payment of a claim to citizens of the United States, in coin, for the transportation of persons upon the Hawaiian bark Kamahamaha V. That is the mere designation of the vessel. That Hawaiian bark was owned by citizens of the United States or was chartered by them.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; neither owned nor chartered by them. It was owned by a subject of the Hawaiian Government, and these citizens of the United States are merely agents to collect the claim.

Mr. GRIMES. Does it not strike the Senator from Michigan as being very important, then, that there should be something on the record here to show that Charles Brewer & Co. are authorized to receive and receipt for this money? Why do we make the payment to Charles Brewer & Co., as being the principals, apparently, on the face of the bill? If they are entitled to this money I want them paid. If they are citizens of Honolulu or any one of the Sandwich Islands group let them be paid in coin, but let us not establish a precedent here which will be inconvenient to us in the future. So far as the record shows, Charles Brewer & Co. are citizens of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, without being the agents of anybody; and we propose to pay them, as the principals in this transaction, in coin. I move that the bill either lie upon the table or be recommitted to the committee, to let it be accompanied with a report. If the facts be as stated by the Senator from Michigan, and we have a record that will govern us in the future, that will be printed and laid upon our tables, I am for paying the claim.

Mr. CHANDLER. I of course have no interest in this matter. The bill was before the Committee on Commerce, and was carefully considered. It is needless to refer it back to the Committee on Commerce. If it is to lie over I suggest that it be referred either to the Committee on Claims or to the Committee on Naval Affairs, or I will name the two jointly, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims and the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that they be directed to bring in a report.

Mr. GRIMES. I will only say that no such claim as that has ever passed the Committee on Naval Affairs in the last six years.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nor any other that I know of.

Mr. CLARK. I made the remark some little time ago that it would be well that this should go through the State Department, and the Senator from Michigan said it had been through the State Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. It came to the Committee on Commerce from the State Department.

Mr. CLARK. I am not contradicting what the Senator says. On a call for the information from the State Department at the table it was not to be found. Now, is it not reasonable that the bill should lie over until we can see what is the communication from the State Department? That is all I desire. I have no desire that it shall go to the Committee on Claims separately or conjointly with any other committee. Neither have I any desire to delay the passage of a proper bill. I only desire time to look into it, and see that we do not pay some of our own citizens in coin when we are paying other people in currency. Let it lie over, and we will try to see how it is. I move that the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. STEWART. There are two bills on the table, which were reported originally by the Committee on Public Lands, that have been returned from the House of Representatives with some slight amendments, and I wish to take them up for the purpose of concurring in those amendments. I move to take up the House amendments to the bill (S. No. 156) making an additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State.

The motion was agreed to. The amendments of the House of Representatives were read. They were to strike out from the beginning of the fourth line of the first section to and including the word "State," in line nine, and to insert in lieu of the words stricken out "the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Houston, through the counties of Fillmore, Mower, Freeborn, and Faribault, to the western boundary of the State; and also for a railroad from Hastings, through the counties of Dakota, Scott, Carver, and McLeod, to such point on the western boundary of the State as the Legislature of the State may determine;" in line ten of the same section to strike out "for ten sections in width" and to insert "to the amount of five alternate sections per mile;" to add to section three the words "and the same shall at all times be transported at the cost, charge, and expense in all respects, of the companies or corporations, their successors or assigns, having or receiving the benefit of the land grants herein made;" in section four, after the word "aforesaid," in line thirteen, to insert "provided, however, that the continuous principle hereby applied shall not extend to such lands as are taken by the said railroad companies to make up deficiencies; provided, that no land to make up such deficiencies shall be taken at any point within ten miles upon each side of the line of said roads;" in line twenty-five of the fourth section strike out all after the word "State" to the end of the section except the words "United States;" and also to strike out the word "road" and insert "roads" wherever it occurs in the bill; and amend the title by striking out "a railroad" and inserting "railroads."

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. STEWART. I now move to take up the House amendments to the bill (S. No. 221) relating to lands granted to the State of Minnesota to aid in constructing railroads.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendments were in lines six and seven of the first section to strike out the words "after the passage of the act granting the same and;" in line eleven, after the word "sale," to insert "being odd-numbered sections;" at the end of the first section to add, "provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to diminish the quantity of land granted by act of May 5, 1864, to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of a railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior;" after the word "same," in line eight, of section three, to insert "as modified by the provisions of this act;" in line two, of section four, after the word "granted," to insert "by any act of Congress to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of railroads in said State;" and at the end of section four to add the following proviso: "provided, however, that this provision shall not extend to any lands authorized to be taken to make up deficiencies."

The amendments were concurred in.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bill of the House of Representatives No. 613, entitled "An act to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed and do agree to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the first and second amendments as made by the Senate.

That the House agree to the third amendment made by the Senate with the following amendments:

Strike out the word "having" on page 2, line five, of said amendment, and insert the word "has."

Strike out on pages 4 and 5 in section eleven of the amendment, the words "upon completion of the transfers of the said lands in the manner specified in the preceding section, the President of the United States shall have power to return to their former owners the lands now occupied by persons under General Sherman's special field order dated at Savannah, Georgia, January 16, 1865, excepting such lands as may have been sold by the United States for taxes, but such," and insert after the word "restoration" on page 5, line six, of the amendment, the words "of lands occupied by freedmen under General Sherman's field order dated at Savannah, Georgia, January 16, 1865."

Insert on page 5 of the amendment, in line nine, after the word "them," the words "by the former owners of such lands or their legal representatives."

Strike out on page 5 of the amendment in section twelve, line four, the words "owned by or claimed as the property of the" and insert the words "held under color of title by the late."

Strike out on page 5 of the amendment, section twelve, in lines nine and ten, the words "be withdrawn States which" and insert the words "cease to exist, such of said so-called confederate States as shall."

That the House agree to the fourth amendment as made by the Senate.

That the Senate agree to the above named amendments to the third amendment as made by them.

HENRY WILSON,

IRA HARRIS,

J. W. NESMITH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS D. ELIOT,

JOHN A. BINGHAM,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is impossible to understand the modifications made in this bill by the committee of conference simply from the reading of the report, and it is due to the Senate, I think, that the Senator who represents the committee of conference should state to us what the modifications of the bill are.

Mr. WILSON. I will state that the changes are merely formal, and do not alter the sense or purpose of the bill. There is one change, perhaps, of some importance, but it affects nothing; and that is to one of the sections of the amendment in regard to the restoration of lands. The bill provides that the persons who have claims under the Sherman order shall have their cases examined—we retain the form of words moved by the Senator himself—and that they shall have lands set apart for them. We strike out the words authorizing and directing the President to give up these lands, as it was a question of doubtful power whether Congress could direct him to do anything about them. We provide for taking care of these persons, that they shall have the privilege of taking this year's crop off the land; and we provide further, that if they have made any betterments on the lands they shall receive a consideration for them; and we leave the President to restore the lands on the 1st of January next or at any other time he pleases.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator if I understood one point aright. I gathered from the report that the President is not authorized to restore to the original owners these lands until he has first secured to each one of the colored occupants under the bill lands elsewhere. Is that the effect of the report?

Mr. WILSON. The provision on that subject is the same as was contained in the original bill. This report does not alter the original provisions of the bill. We provide in the amendment of the Senate, which has been concurred in by the House with some verbal changes in the mode of expression, but without changing the idea or obligation, that the nine hundred persons who have claims under the Sherman order shall have their claims examined and determined upon by the commissioners in South Carolina and Georgia, and that they shall have certificates on the islands which the tax commissioners have set apart for them; that these claims which these persons will have on those lands shall stand good for two years, and if they do not attend to them in that time they will be invalid.

We provide further that these persons shall have the privilege of taking the present crop off the land, and that they shall have the benefit of any betterments they have made on the land, just as was provided in the original bill; but we have stricken out the words authorizing the President to restore the lands to the original owners, on the ground that it is a question whether Congress has got any power over that subject at all; that, as a military order, it is a matter for the President to deal with himself and to take the responsibility of doing it in his own time. He cannot do it, however, until these persons have had the privilege of taking off this year's crop. The President may do it on the 1st of January next, or the 1st of February, or at any time he pleases, at his own option. We do not say anything about it; we leave it to him. There is nothing in the sense of the bill changed at all. There was really no substantial difference of opinion between the two Houses on these matters, and the bill was referred to a committee of conference more for the purpose of changing some modes of expression than for any other. I think the amendments are improvements on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference?

The report was concurred in.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the House of Representatives do concur in the amendments of the Senate with amendments, as follows; in section one, line fifteen, strike out the words "in coin;" in section one, line seventeen, strike out the words "in coin;" in section one, line twenty-eight, strike out the words "and return;" in section one, line thirty-six, strike out the words "going and coming;" in section one, line forty-three, strike out the words "in coin."

2. That the Senate do agree to the said amendments to the amendments of the Senate.

IRA HARRIS,

JAMES GUTHRIE,

A. H. CRAGIN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. P. BANKS,

R. P. SPALDING,

S. S. MARSHALL,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

IOWA MILITARY CLAIMS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 93.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 93) providing for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon certain claims of the State of Iowa. It requires the President of the United States to appoint three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to examine and report, on or before the first day of December next, upon the claim of the State of Iowa for forage, transportation, subsistence, and clothing furnished by the State to certain volunteers of the State, who, under the command of Colonels Morledge and Edwards, and at the request of certain officers commanding troops of the United States in the State of Missouri, marched into the State of Missouri to cooperate with the troops of the United States in that State in suppressing the rebellion; also the claim of the State of Iowa for repayment of certain moneys paid by the State in raising, arming, equipping, paying, and subsisting certain troops of the State maintained by the State on its southern and northwestern borders during the late rebellion, for the purpose of defending the State against attacks by bushwhackers and Indians; and also the claim of the State for compensation for certain forage procured and barracks, built by the State on the northwestern border thereof and turned over by the State to and used by the United States.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia reported the joint resolution, with an amendment in line four, to strike out the words "three commissioners" and to insert "a commissioner."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order assigned for this hour, which is the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] is still unable to be in his seat, and I am unwilling to proceed with that bill during his absence if he is going to be able to be here in a short time. I therefore move its postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVENWORTH CITY RAILROAD.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up House bill No. 448. It is of some importance to act early upon it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 448) to authorize the construction of a railroad through certain land of the United States in Kansas. It authorizes the Leavenworth City Railroad Company to construct a horse railway, with one or two tracks, through the military reservation from Fort Leavenworth to the city of Leavenworth, Kansas, and take for the accommodation of the road or its business a strip of land over the reservation not exceeding twenty feet in width; but the location of the railroad through the reservation is to be on and along the west side of the wagon road leading from the city to the fort, and the company are to erect their own bridges and crossings, and not be permitted to use those of the wagon road; and whenever this strip of land shall cease to be used for the purposes of the railroad company or the accommodation of its business it is to revert to the United States.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia reported an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following:

That this privilege shall be allowed as long as the Secretary of War shall, in his discretion, determine, and no longer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

ETHAN RAY CLARK AND SAMUEL WARD CLARK.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 402.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 402) to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clark and Samuel Ward Clark to certain lands in the State of Florida, claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to confirm the title of Samuel Ward Clark and Ethan Ray Clark to a tract of land five miles square, on Black creek, south of the St. Mary's river, in the State of Florida, and bounded upon one side by the St. Mary's river, and upon the other side by vacant lands, being the same lands to which an exclusive right to take the timber was granted by the Spanish Government to John Underwood, and upon which he erected a saw-mill in 1805, and which was kept up and continued for many years; but nothing contained in this act is to operate to the prejudice of any claim which may be set up to the land by reason of any previous sale; nor is this act in any way to prejudice any claimant under John Underwood, or any person deriving title or claim thereto under him, his heirs or assigns, or of any person or persons who may be entitled to preemption rights under any existing laws of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES POOL.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 311.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of James Pool, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to James Pool the sum of $1,287 10; but $487 50 of this amount is to be paid out of any annuities or moneys payable to the Senecas and Shawnee Indians, if there be any, and if none, then the whole sum is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state that there is no report accompanying the bill at this time; but there are three reports on file made by the Committee on Claims at different times in favor of this bill. The bill has passed the Senate two or three times. I have in my hand a report made from the Committee on Claims by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] and also another report made in reference to this claim by the honorable Senator from Kansas, not now in his seat, [Mr. POMEROY.] I will read the last report made upon this claim:

"It appears that the petitioner was employed by the United States, under the provisions of sundry treaties, as blacksmith for the Delaware, Shawnee, and Seneca tribes of Indians, from August, 1823, until November, 1838. During that period the various Indian agents often employed Mr. Pool in various capacities, such as transporting the moneys to be paid to the Indians, procuring supplies, &c., and oftentimes he advanced his own money in such purposes, which was in every instance refunded except one. He alleges that on the 29th of April, 1834, at the request of Governor Stokes, as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, (a copy of whose letter to that effect is annexed to the petition, and is sworn to,) he purchased for the use of the Seneca and Shawnee Indians four hundred and eighty-seven and a half bushels of seed corn, for which he paid out of his private funds one dollar per bushel, making $487 50, which sum he asks to have reimbursed. To sustain this the petitioner produces the copy of Governor Stokes's order for the purchase of the corn, sworn to as a copy; the receipt of John Brown, of whom he bought the corn, for the money, and attested by George T. Horron, Indian interpreter, and the certificate of five of the chiefs and headmen of the nation, that the corn was received by them, and duly attested by W. J. Morrow, their agent."

"It is further stated that between the years 1833 and 1838 he was employed by contract as blacksmith for the Seneca tribe of Indians alone; that the mixed tribe of Senecas and Shawnees were also entitled to a smith but had none; that one agent attended to both, and that agent (Vaisson) verbally ordered him to put up a shop among the Senecas and Shawnees, and procure hands and run it; that he did so, and that he was paid for the service except for one year. He supposed he was being paid on his contract for the Senecas, but upon examination of the vouchers at the Department he found that he had been paid for all his work for the mixed tribe, and that there was one year of service for the Senecas that he had not been paid for, and still remains unpaid. He now asks Congress to order the payment of the $800 due to him on that contract."

There is another part of the report which refers to another item of the claim which has not been embraced in this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYN, Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 315) for the relief of the inhabitants of towns and villages in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona; and

A bill (H. R. No. 747) to consolidate the land offices in the several States therein named.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (S. No. 125) granting aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867.

LEAGUE ISLAND.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up House bill No. 452, which is the bill authorizing the Navy Department to accept from the city of Philadelphia League Island for the purposes of a navy-yard. The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs a couple of weeks since.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read at the desk.

The SECRETARY. "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, and to dispense with and dispose of the site of the existing yard at Philadelphia."

Mr. HENDRICKS. Upon a suggestion that has been made to me, I will move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until tomorrow.

Mr. GRIMES. It is not up yet.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let it be taken up and postponed until tomorrow.

Mr. CLARK. That will leave it just where it is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will it?

Mr. CLARK. Just exactly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I withdraw the motion.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up House bill No. 508.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 508) to amend the organic acts of the Territories of Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. BUCKALEW, to strike out section [nine] three in the following words:

SEC. [9] 3. And be it further enacted, That within the Territories aforesaid there shall be no denial of the elective franchise to citizens of the United States because of race or color, and all persons shall be equal before the law. And all acts or parts of acts, either of Congress or of the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby declared null and void.

Mr. WADE. I said all I desired to say on this question when the bill was up before. This is the section that gives to the people of the Territories universal franchise without distinction of race or color. I hope it will not be stricken out. Every Senator has his mind made up; I do not wish to argue it. Nothing could be added now to the question by way of argument.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have but a few words to say upon the question now before the Senate. As I understand, the motion is to strike out that section of the bill which provides for universal suffrage in all the Territories named in the bill. In other words, that section is a proposition to give to all persons, without distinction of race or color, within the Territories of the United States, the right of suffrage. It is a proposition to admit to the exercise of this great right, a right the proper exercise of which is so essential to the preservation of a pure republican government, the negro race.

What has occurred, Mr. President, in the history of this country or in the history of that race, since the organization of the Territories named in the bill, that now demands that they be admitted to the right of suffrage in these Territories? Does any great public necessity exist in any of those Territories that the comparatively few negroes who inhabit them shall be admitted to the right of suffrage? Has any public grievance been experienced in those Territories, has any great public calamity overtaken the people of those Territories, that it becomes essential to their welfare and essential to the welfare of the white race that the negroes there shall now be admitted to participate in the government of those Territories? If so it is due to the Senate, it is due to the country, that the evils experienced from withholding this right of suffrage from the negro race should be made known to the Senate and the country.

I know, sir, that the attempt has been made to justify such an enactment as this, upon the ground that a faithful observance of the principles of the Declaration of Independence requires that all persons, negroes included, shall be admitted to a participation in the Government, to a voice in the management of public affairs. That assertion has been so often met and so successfully met that it is not necessary now for me to enter into any elaborate discussion to prove what was meant by the declaration "that all men are created equal." Is it possible that the American people can at this day be induced to believe that George Washington, a slaveholder, James Madison, a slaveholder, and most of the framers of the Declaration of Independence, slaveholders, ever meant to say by that Declaration that the negro race were to be admitted to participation in the affairs of Government; and that they contemplated by that Declaration that they would be understood as saying that the negro race were equal to themselves? The proposition that those founders of the Government meant such a thing as that is derogatory to their high characters; for if they meant by that Declaration so to be understood, how is the fact that those great men lived and died slaveholders to be reconciled with such an opinion upon their part? Sir, they only meant to say that the people of every distinct political community had a right to govern themselves and were not to be controlled by another distinct and independent community; and such is the interpretation which, until these modern days when a light has sprung up in the East which attempts now to irradiate the whole land, made its appearance.

But, sir, I will not discuss that feature of this question, because the bare statement of the proposition itself is sufficient to show that the founders of this Government never meant to be understood that the negro race was equal to the white race, or should be admitted to a participation in the affairs of this Government. If they meant it, why did they not set the example of negro suffrage? Why did they not bestow upon every negro in the land a voice in the Government and a right to participate in the management of public affairs? They did no such thing. Sir, the founders of this Government meant to establish a white man's Government, and they lived up to their meaning; and while they lived, and while the generation of great statesmen lived who succeeded them, no man in the Halls of Congress was ever heard to make such a proposition as this. Did not the necessity exist in those days why the negroes of the country should be admitted to share in the right of suffrage? We heard no complaint in those days on account of the withholding of such a right from the negro race. Do you believe that if the negroes in the days of the founders of the Government and of the generation of great men who succeeded them had been admitted to the exercise of this right this Government would have been more wisely administered than it was? Do you believe that the great principles of constitutional and civil liberty would have been more firmly established, more deeply rooted, or more fondly cherished than they were?

If no necessity existed in those days for the bestowment of this privilege or right upon that race, I ask you, sir, what necessity has arisen since, what necessity of a public character exists now why it should be conferred upon that race? Has it come to this, that the noble race to which we belong has become so degenerate, has so lapsed, so fallen from its high character and its high estate, that it is now necessary to supply its weaknesses and defects by admitting to participation in the affairs of Government that formerly servile race? Has the intellect of the white man so degenerated; or has his heart become so corrupt that the superior enlightenment and the higher morality of the negro are necessary to save our institutions or to better our condition? Sir, what greater evidence has that race given in these times of a fitness for participation in public affairs than it gave in the days when your Constitution was founded? Have they ever made any great discovery in art, science, literature, or learning of any description that it now becomes necessary to invoke their superior wisdom to direct and guide the councils of the American people?

Sir, there are but comparatively few negroes, I suppose, in those Territories, but the principle is the same. The American Senate is asked to recognize a right in the negroes to participate in the elective franchise in those Territories, and then the question is to be asked, if they have such a right there, how can you withhold it in the southern States where they are so much more numerous? You are asked to adopt the principle in reference to a few negroes scattered here and there over the Territories; and then the plea of estoppel is to be put at you, "You have recognized the principle, you have recognized the right;" and having recognized the principle and having recognized the right in that race in those Territories, to be consistent you must recognize the principle and the right wherever the negro exists within the boundaries of the United States. I attribute no personal motives to any man, but I say that is to be the legal, logical argument with which you are to be met when the proposition shall come up to establish it, throughout the southern States, where millions of the race exist. If you recognize the principle here as contemplated by this bill, to be consistent with yourselves and to be logical in your own reasoning you must say that they ought to be clothed with this franchise wherever the race exists.

Now, Mr. President, in most of the northern States represented here by gentlemen of the Republican party, this very right is withheld from the negro race. You have not set the example to the American people of allowing this race to vote in a majority of your own States; and yet you attempt to say that in the Territories of the United States they shall have this right. Where is the consistency of it? In the State of New York they have a qualified negro suffrage; if a negro happens to be worth $250, he is allowed to vote. Even in the State which the present occupant of the chair so ably and faithfully represents on this floor, [Mr. HARRIS in the chair,] popular sentiment will not tolerate universal negro suffrage. Go home to your constituents, I say to gentlemen from the northern States, adopt the system of universal negro suffrage among yourselves, and then you may consistently (if you have the power) attempt to force it upon the distant Territories of this country; but until you do that you are not consistent with yourselves.

Mr. President, it was said the other day by the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill that it might as well be known now as at any other time by the people of those Territories that unless this privilege was accorded to the negro race they could not expect admission into this Union. Sir, the honorable Senator was speaking for the present, speaking, I suppose, in reference to what he knew to be the sentiments and the opinions of a majority of this body at the present time. But neither he nor any other Senator has a right to speak for any future Senate of the United States. The time may come, the time may be near at hand, and the indications of the times are that the day is not far off when the complexion of both Houses of the American Congress may be changed. May God hasten the auspicious day, not on account of any desire to get rid of such very polite, honorable, and learned gentlemen as compose the present majority, but because the public necessities and the public interests require it.

Mr. President, let me ask gentlemen who favor this proposition one question. Suppose that when you entered upon the prosecution of the late civil war you had proclaimed, as the party just come into power, that your object was the abolition of slavery in the United States, could you have succeeded? No, sir, not even upon that issue. You were too wise as Senators and Representatives, you were too wise as representative men of your party to proclaim in the commencement of the late civil struggle that you were even prosecuting the war for the liberation of the slave from bondage; but you declared that your object was to preserve the Union with all the rights and institutions of the States unimpaired, and that when this was done the war ought to cease.

Well, sir, you went on step by step. A patriotic people, aroused by an attack upon the American flag, at the summons of the President of the United States flocked to the national standard, as they supposed, to preserve the union of the States with all their rights and privileges and dignities unimpaired. The war went on for years before a word was ever uttered in these Halls suggesting that even the abolition of slavery was the object of this war. It was not until Mr. Seward had rung his "little bell"—a member of your party, gentlemen, not of ours; you may talk about him as much as you please, but the Democratic party has no such captains. He rung that "little bell" too often even to be a lieutenant in the great conquering army which is to drive you out of power. It was not until your "divine Stanton" exercised his great military power to take possession of the polls in Democratic States and to keep Democrats away from the polls; not until the voice of the American people was hushed by the clangor of arms; not while there was an open foe, but when all was silence and quietness within the boundaries of your power, that you dared proclaim even that the abolition of slavery was your object in the prosecution of the war. When the people were surrounded by military power, a power which unarmed men could not resist, it was then for the first time we heard an intimation that the object of the struggle was not the preservation of the union of these States, with all the rights and dignities of the States unimpaired, but the abolition of slavery. Then, I say, for the first time that voice like the whispering of the serpent, was heard. Sir, had you announced that as your object in the commencement of the struggle, not half of the volunteers that rushed to arms would have flocked to your standard even to support the American flag when assailed. But, sir, suppose you had then gone further, and had avowed that your object was not only the liberation of the slave from bondage but to confer upon him equal civil rights, and not merely equal civil rights but the right to go side by side with the white citizen to the polls, and to cast his ballot at the very same poll; your call would have been scouted by the great mass of the American people, and you would not have had an army large enough to meet a single regiment of soldiers.

"Squat, like a toad, close at the ear of Eve,"

The American people in the enthusiasm of the moment, relying upon your promise and your declaration of the objects of the war, never dreamed that you meant to go further and confer the right of voting upon this race. You did not avow it yourselves. If it had been charged upon you then, the denial would have been heard from one end of the country to the other. And yet now, sir, with the representatives of eleven States of this Union not in these Halls, denied seats upon this floor and in the other House of Congress, you having an accidental majority in this body—because in my judgment you do not represent a majority of the American people, even in the non-seceded States, not to take into consideration the seceded States—undertake to incorporate into the legislation of this country principles which the founders of the Government never asserted, which you yourselves never asserted until, perhaps, you think it becomes necessary to the perpetuation of political power in yourselves. Mr. President, is it possible that gentlemen of the majority upon this floor are more familiar with the negro race, their capacity, their fitness for participation in civil government, than those of us who have lived among them all our lives, who have been familiar with them? Where did you get your education, where did you go to school to get superior wisdom upon this subject? What were your text-books? You had no personal knowledge, because you were not in the midst of the race. You might have seen one here and one there, not enough to make mile-stones along your public roads, mere curiosities which when seen by the children attracted their attention and caused their wonder. If such were your opportunities and your only opportunities by way of observation of judging of the capacities of this race, you must have acquired your superior wisdom from some other source. What was your text-book? Was it Uncle Tom's Cabin, so pathetically written by—I say it without any disparagement of the lady—a strong-minded woman? Was it in her book which was written to draw tears from weak-minded men and feeble-minded women that you learned all about the negro-race? What were her opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of the capacities of the negro? Was it from the northern press that you learned your wisdom? How many of their editors ever were in the midst of this race that they could judge of their qualifications for participation in public affairs? Sir, they staid at home, and if a John Brown raid was to be got up they were not the men to go, but men of firmer nerve and men made of sterner stuff.

Mr. President, in some of the States of this Union a majority of the population are of that class. I refer to those States, not because this bill proposes to force negro suffrage upon them, but because this bill is a recognition of the principle. Every one who has traveled in those States knows full well that you might as well admit to the polls the mules and the cows, for all practical wise purposes of legislation, as a majority of such a race. How do you know, sir, that the negro race in the Territories of the United States are better fitted for the purposes of participation in public affairs than they are in those States? Have you ever been there to see? Do you know anything about it? You do not propose to select such of them as are qualified; you propose no terms or conditions upon this class as a qualification for the exercise of this high governmental privilege; but you say that every one of them, whether he has qualifications or not, shall participate in this privilege, and you ask the intelligent white adventurer who has gone to make his fortune in a western home, the man of high purpose and firm resolve, who has left the home of his fathers to seek a better condition far off, to be governed, so far as the negro race can govern him, by the votes of negroes in the Territories of the United States.

Sir, honorable Senators who advocate this proposition may suppose that it will be popular, that the idea of the equality of all men will be so popular that it will sweep as a hurricane the political field, and continue for an indefinite term in power those who so disinterestedly and patriotically advocate it. Mr. President, there never was a greater humbug preached upon earth as from the Almighty than the equality of races. The great God, in the human as well as in other animal races, has formed a great chain; and that chain is composed of links; in other words, there is the highest step, the next higher step, the next higher step until you come to the very lowest step in animal and in human existence, and to preach that the race which occupies this lower step in the great gradation of life is equal to that race which occupies the highest is contradictory to the observation of man and is in contravention of the workings of the Almighty. It is not true in inanimate nature that equality is the law of God and of nature; it is not so in human existence; it is not so in other animal existence; it is not so in the great works of nature spread out before our view. I ask you to go with me into the majestic forest and view with me the great trees found upon your Pacific slope; go with me into the great forests of your country and tell me, if equality be the law of nature and race, why it is that you see the majestic oak spreading his branches far and wide, upon whose thousand boughs the birds of heaven chirp and sing sweetly, and then why beside it do you see the little sapling that is unworthy of notice?

No, sir, equality is not the law of God or nature; but inequality, diversity is the great law. Man in his wisdom, legislators with their superior knowledge, may say that all these things are wrong and ought to be different. The Almighty could have made the mole which burrows in the ground equal to the lion which majestically roams the forest. Is the one equal to the other? If so, why did not the Almighty make them so? He could have done it. Take the other great animals which roam in your forests and the more obscure and less distinguished animals which you deem not worthy either of your curiosity or regard. If equality be the law of nature and nature's God, tell me why He did not make these animals alike, why did not He make the trees and the bushes and the shrubbery of the forest all the same! Your humble scrubby pines might have equaled those of Lebanon if He had chosen so to do. The fact that He did not choose to do so shows the truth of my proposition, that equality is not in the works of nature or in animal existence His law; and if it be not His law in the works of nature and in other animal existence, where is the evidence that we have of its being His law in the existence of the human race? Observation does not teach it; history disproves it.

Sir, the proud and noble race to which we belong has had its moments of darkness and ignorance, even when its members made their homes in the caves of the earth; but there was a Heaven-inspired power, a something placed within that race by the determined will of the Almighty, which caused it to develop itself and become the great guiding race of the world. Why do you not find that race now in its original ignorance and barbarism? It is because the Almighty God, when He breathed into our ancestors the breath of life, made it as a distinguishing race, the crowning work of His almighty power on earth. But take the race which you now propose to admit to a participation in public affairs; go to his native home where for century after century he has dwelt, and show the developments and improvements which he has made. You find him in his original ignorance, in his original barbarism, not making one single step in the onward path to enlightenment and to civilization. What is the reason? I believe it to be because the eternal God for His own wise purposes made distinctions between the different races which He made; and dost thou, oh man, say that this is all wrong? Shall the clay accuse the potter? He who made all the trees of the forest, the animals of the field, and the men who inhabit the earth, of all gradations and all conditions, had the right to establish inequality. His power was omnipotent; His will all controlling; and what He made the creature has no right to question.

Sir, that is not only sound reasoning, derived from the observation of His works wherever we find them, but it is the teaching and the inspiration of that Book of books, from which, in childhood at our mother's knee, we learned those lessons which if properly observed would guide us to brighter and happier climes. Sir, even in that better world, if we believe the language of inspiration, you are not to have equality, but as one star differeth from another star in glory, so, also, shall they be in the future world. Inspiration adds its voice to the manifestation of God Almighty's works on earth and attests the absurdity; ay, sir, the infidelity of this doctrine of equality of races or the equality of man.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of going into this view of the subject, but to say a few words by way of protest against the incorporation into the organic act organizing these Territories of this obnoxious provision. I cannot see how the legislation of these Territories, how the public peace, how the rights of the community, civil and political, are to be elevated or advanced by the recognition of such a principle as this in those organic acts. Unless gentleman can show that there is some wrong to be remedied, practically, not theoretically; unless they can show that there is some wrong that should be remedied, and which can only be remedied by such a provision as this, and by the recognition of such a right as this, then, sir, I obtest before this Senate that your legislation is unwise, and you are treading upon hallowed ground because you are not guided by any light from the past. There is nothing in the past to show you that the condition of the people of these Territories would be bettered by conferring this privilege upon the negro race. Therefore, finding nothing in the experience of the past demonstrating that the condition of the people in these Territories would be bettered by such legislation, I ask you, is it not rash legislation to make the attempt now?

It is only for the good of the people of the Territories and for the good of my country that I have felt it an imperative duty to protest against this sort of legislation. Were I to speak only as a partisan; were I to look only to the success of the political organization to which I belong, I should hail every measure of this kind that you passed as a means to restore to power that noble party to which it is my pride and my boast that from childhood to the present hour, amidst all the mutations of party, I have ever belonged; and with all the experience of the past I would not change it for any party that ever existed in this country. As a mere party man I should hail your legislation as a means of your own defeat, because I cannot believe that when these questions are fairly and fully presented to the American people, and when in the quietude of home, in the stillness of the midnight hour, they shall reflect upon this species of legislation, they will not meet it with an overpowering and overwhelming condemnation. If it is the continuance of party power that you aim at, go on, gentlemen, in your madness and infatuation. I have not so read the character—I have not so read the sentiments of the race to which I belong, as to believe that now, when reason has resumed its throne and judgment has taken its place, they will ever approve such legislation. I repeat, sir, that if I spoke to-day as a mere partisan, I should hail your legislation as a great political boon; but I do not so speak.

Mr. President, it is time we had ceased speaking theoretically; it is time we had quit shedding crocodile tears over the wrongs of the poor negro race. As legislators we should look at the questions presented in the legislation proposed as practical men and as practical statesmen. What, even now, let me ask, has the great boon of freedom which you say you have given to the negro race profited them? If we are to believe the accounts we read hundreds and thousands of those who thought you meant to do them good are returning to their old homes in the South, and hundreds and thousands more who stay away are left to languish and to die; and in some of the States, a distinguished gentleman from Mississippi told me, if I mistaken not, that one fourth or one third of the whole negro race as it existed previous to the liberation which you gave them, have ceased to exist, have died. Under the nurturing care of their masters and former owners they were happy, they were contented. They sought not this boon which you proffered them. You came promising them a blessing and you have brought to them starvation and death. I speak from no unkindness to this race. I think that I know them as well as, in fact better than, some Senators who have never been among them. I was raised, to be sure, in comparatively a small slaveholding State, but amidst slaves. I had them to nurture me when an infant, to lead me when a child. I never felt any unkindness toward them; I wish them well; and now when I meet one that I knew in my boyhood there is no anger in my heart, but thanks and kindness; and that is the universal feeling among those who have known them and been associated with them. There are monsters in human flesh everywhere. There are men in the North who whip their own children to death, even, sir, in the enlightened State that you so ably represent. There are men in the North who kill their own mothers, even in the State which is so honorably represented by the Presiding Officer of this body. There are monsters in the northwestern States who murder their own children. There may be monsters found in the southern States who cruelly treat their slaves; but the cases in one section as in the other are exceptions to the general rule.

Mr. President, having made these remarks, much more extended than I anticipated when I arose, for when I came into the Chamber to-day I did not know that the subject would be brought up for consideration, I will detain the Senate no longer.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I was struck with some of the remarks made by the Senator from Delaware, and particularly by his statement that if the northern people had known that slavery would be abolished as the result of the war, they would not have engaged in the war, would not have enlisted in our armies. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware whether he believes that if Jeff. Davis & Company had known that they would be whipped, they would have engaged in this rebellion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure. He is just as familiar with the opinions and sentiments of Jeff. Davis as I am, and I have no doubt he is just as intimately acquainted with him. I served awhile with Mr. Davis, on this floor, but I never was so intimate with him as to know his opinions upon any subject. He may be one of those heroes, who, believing himself right, would have vindicated what he believed to be the right, though he saw that defeat was inevitable, as the honorable Senator, although he might get the worst in a public struggle, if he thought himself insulted might still go into the conflict.

Mr. STEWART. I believe that the people of the loyal States who have succeeded in abolishing slavery are quite as well satisfied with the result of the issue as those who fought to maintain it, who fought to build it up as the controlling and ruling institution of the country. I think that with the past the Union party have as good reason to be satisfied with themselves, and the results of their policy, as the Democratic party. I think that the Union party is quite as well satisfied with itself for having fought to defend the Union, to save the Union, to preserve the Union, as the Democratic leaders can be with the fact that they destroyed this Government and declared that there was no power under the Constitution to save the country. If you talk about satisfaction with past records let them be compared. As to the present policy, the Senator appears to be very much alarmed for fear the Union party will not be satisfied with it, and he has attempted here now, as on various other occasions, to prove that negro suffrage is wrong because men are not equal. That is the only argument that I hear against it. If that be true all suffrage is wrong, because no two men are equal. There is a difference between men; there is every gradation, from the highest to the lowest, in all communities. Equality has nothing to do with the right of suffrage. We do not mean that men must be equal physically, that they must be equal intellectually, that they must be equal morally. We do not expect that; we do not say any such thing; but we do say that all men are equally entitled to the pursuit of happiness and to the protection of the law, and that the weak need the protection of the law more than the strong; and we do say that now that the negro in the South is manumitted, and that cannot be helped, (although the Democratic party would reverse the verdict if they could, and reenslave him,) he must be protected, and if you do not allow him to protect himself with the ballot you must protect him with the sword. The race is emancipated and must be governed. It must either have self-government or despotic government. I think it is better for the whites and blacks that all now shall have a chance to govern themselves. The time for governing the blacks as slaves has passed. The "divine right" of slavery is repudiated by the sword. This same appeal to the Bible for the divine right to govern other men is the old song of kings. It is divine to make men unequal; it is divine to control and govern them, provided you let me govern them. Let me be king, and then it is divinely right.

You be slave and I be king, and then it is a divine right.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Allow me to put a question to the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator refers to the Bible. I did not. I ask him what these words in the Bible, "naubad. naubadam," mean.

Mr. STEWART. Is that in the Bible?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is in the Bible.

Mr. STEWART. That is rather a settler.

[Laughter.] I do not believe the Senator knows much more about that than I do, but if he does, I should like him to translate it, and then I may give him the meaning of it. The Senator says he did not appeal to the Bible. I thought he said that it was the teaching of that good Book that there was a difference in man. Why, sir, that is the same good Book to which every king and every despot has appealed. That, however, is not the interpretation that Christian nations are now putting upon it. It is not in accordance with the spirit of the age, not in accordance with justice or humanity.

The simple question before the Senate is, whether the colored men who emigrate to the Territories shall have the right to exercise the elective franchise for their own protection? I have resided in Territories and in new countries, and I know that the poor and the weak there can be better protected if they have a vote. It will be for their advantage; it will be much more secure. To give them a vote will do nobody any harm, but will do good to themselves. Others will treat them more respectfully and more kindly. That has been the result in all cases with the weak. I can point out other classes besides the negro who would have a very difficult time to live in the Territories, or live anywhere in new communities, if you took the ballot from them—other classes that are courted and favored now, that none will speak ill of, because they have votes. On account of race or religion or for other reasons, there are prejudices against some which can only be wiped away by the power of the ballot. If the Senator from Delaware is not too solicitous for the success of the Union party, I hope he will let us try this experiment, as we tried the experiment of emancipation, and I do not believe when it is over we shall be any more sorry for it than he.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the honorable Senator has been so kind as to appeal to me. Allow me to say that he reminds me very much of all young converts. Sir, did you ever attend a Methodist meeting, especially a Methodist class meeting? I speak in no disparagement of the Methodists, because I believe them to be among the best people on earth; but in a class meeting you find that after the old grey-headed fathers and mothers have told their experience some of the young converts get up and begin to tell what great things have been done for them; and the old fathers and mothers in Israel look upon the young converts very approvingly. They obey the scriptural injunction, "He shall gather the lambs with his arm and carry them in his bosom." Now, the old political members of the Republican party, I have no doubt, have been very much amused at our young convert from the Breckinridge Democracy. If I understand his political record aright—I do not say it offensively, but I say it as a matter of history—the Democratic party with which he finds so much fault to-day was to him a glorious, magnificent, patriotic party even when its standard was borne aloft by John C. Breckinridge. And yet the honorable Senator rises here to-day as though he were one of the fathers in your political Israel, and he descants upon the errors, the folly, and the want of patriotism of the Democrats. A stranger might have supposed that he was one of the fathers in the Republican camp. I think the honorable Senator is growing in political grace very fast, and he reminds me very much of the experience of the man that I once heard of, given in class meeting, and I have no doubt that after awhile he will become equal to some of your older men in the Republican party who can say now what that member of the church said, and he is trying to get people to see the same thing. He said that when he was first converted and joined the church he could not do any little thing that was wrong that conscience did not prick him for it, but now, thank his God! he had so grown in grace that he could do anything whatever and conscience never troubled him at all about it. [Laughter.] I think the Senator has arrived almost to that state of perfection.

Mr. STEWART. As the Senator from Delaware has been kind enough to pay a little attention to me, I simply rise to say to that Senator that I had patriotism enough when the Democratic party attempted to destroy the Government to repudiate it. There was then a great revival in the country. There were a great many convinced of the fact that Buchanan & Co. were surrendering to the enemy; that Jeff. Davis & Co. were attempting to destroy this Government; and there was a revival of patriotism throughout the country. It was only those who loved treason more than liberty, slavery more than freedom, that failed to feel any of that inspiration of truth and justice and love of union that brought forth this great Union party, that inspired it from ocean to ocean, that spoke into existence the loyal hosts of the country that sustained the flag. Of course I felt more indignant, and I had a right to feel more indignant, than an old Whig, because the party to which I belonged, and which I trusted, and which I thought was really Democratic, through its leaders attempted to strike down this Government. Democrats, of course, have a double reason to complain of it. Our leaders not only betrayed the country, but betrayed us. Those who did not get political religion then, so as to be opposed to Jeff. Davis & Co., are past redemption. I fear they have committed the unpardonable sin. They are sunk so low that the political hand of resurrection will never reinstate "the glorious Democratic party" of which the Senator talks. It must go down among the things that were, as a monument of the sins of a conspiracy to destroy this Government. The Democratic party is linked with treason and with corruption, and it must go down. The man who still glories in it and its leaders, who still extols slavery, who still feels happy over those things, I say never can be converted. He is joined to his idols. Let him remain.

Mr. SAULSBURY. One word in reply to the honorable Senator. When does the honorable Senator say that this great revival took place? He said it was when the Democratic hosts—

Mr. STEWART. When treason struck at the flag of the country the Union party was formed, and that Union party will last until that treason is blotted out, until traitors are odious, and until every man in this broad land, black or white, is allowed to enjoy the privileges of a free man. That is the mission of the party, which we are going to carry out, and which false Democracy can never overthrow.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The young convert will get happy after awhile in class meeting. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. President, when did the honorable Senator say, in the remarks he made when he was up before, that this great revival took place? He said that hundreds of thousands of patriotic men throughout the country believed that Buchanan & Co. were leagued with Jeff. Davis for the destruction of the country; and yet, sir, notwithstanding that, the honorable gentleman, with all his patriotism, did not rush with his patriotic hosts to the rescue, against the combined forces of Buchanan and Davis, but cast his vote for John C. Breckinridge for President of the United States at a subsequent period to that, although he was Vice President on the same ticket with Mr. Buchanan, and although I presume the honorable Senator supposed their views were identical! "O consistency, thou art a jewel!" [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. I will state the fact with regard to that. The fact is this: I was then in the Territory of Nevada. There were two parties formed. I declined to join either the Republican or the Douglas party. The Douglas party was not the regular organization. I declined to take any part in the canvass.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Whom did you vote for?

Mr. STEWART. I did vote for Breckinridge, and he was not the first traitor who enjoyed the confidence of honest men before his fall. Arnold was once a brave soldier. I did not know he was about to betray his country, but I told my friends that I believed the Democratic party was gone, was ruined, but I did not suppose it would commit treason. I was living then in a remote Territory and I did not know that they had as yet betrayed the country. I stated to my friends that I was not going to change until an organization was formed that was for the country. Like other Union Democrats, I stayed with the party until it was betrayed. That was in 1860. I took no part in the canvass. During the fall of that year secession commenced, and I believe I was among the first to declare in favor of the Union and in favor of the war, even before those who had been Republicans and Douglas men, and long before the firing on Fort Sumter.

I tell the Senator that the Republican Union party was born when every man was convinced that the country was in peril, when the proof was positive that Buchanan had betrayed the country. It was born in the winter of 1860-61 when Mr. Buchanan declared here that he had no power to sustain this Government; that there was no power to coerce a State. The Democratic party did not, until after the election of President Lincoln, disclose that their intention was to destroy this Government. When that became certain, then, sir, there was a revival throughout the land, and those who loved their country, those who had a spark of patriotism in them, left the fortunes of Jeff. Davis and Company and stood by the Union. Did the Senator from Delaware do that?

Mr. SAULSBURY. My record will speak for itself.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir, his record will speak for itself. Did he vote supplies for our armies? Did he vote for sustaining the flag of his country? I think his record does speak for itself, and it tells us in language not to be misunderstood that he was giving that negative aid to the enemy which declines to feed the Union soldiers by voting supplies to our armies. I think his record speaks in that language; and the man whose record speaks in that language may well talk of converts, for he never can be converted. A man who loves the record of the Democratic party, who loves the record of the party that betrayed every lover of his country may well speak of converts, because his case is hopeless. He may well boast of his consistency in evil—and the Democrat who honestly loved his country need not blush for that inconsistency that made him repudiate traitors and stand by the Union. But let him blush who, when betrayed by traitors, would become a traitor for consistency.

Mr. CONNESS. It is evident that no conclusion can be arrived at to-day on the pending bill. I will therefore ask the chairman of the Committee on Territories to allow it to be postponed for the present.

Mr. WADE. Has the Senator a measure that has already passed the House which he desires to take up?

Mr. CONNESS. I have not. I desire to call up a Senate resolution.

Mr. WADE. What is it?

Mr. CONNESS. It is a resolution relating to the China mail line, upon which I desire to have the action of the Senate.

Mr. WADE. It seems to me we are about ready to take a vote on this subject.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senate are ready to vote upon it, of course I shall not ask for its postponement, but if we are to continue to discuss it I should like very much to get the action of the Senate upon the matter to which I have referred.

Mr. WADE. This measure has passed the House of Representatives and been debated here nearly as much as it will be debated, and therefore I am not so pertinacious about pressing it now, because there will be ample time to pass it.

Mr. CONNESS. Then, with the Senator's permission, I move that the present and all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 98) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we have arrived at that period in the session when we should dispose of a measure when we take it up. If we expect to adjourn at any reasonable day, it is necessary that we should consider and act upon bills as they come before us. I hope we shall not be kept here very much longer in the summer months; and I shall object to postponing any bill, when there is no special reason for it, to take up some other bill and discuss it a little while. If it is the purpose of the Senator from Ohio to pass this bill it is just as well to complete its discussion to-day, vote upon it, and let it be a law, if it is to be a law, as to postpone it to some future day. If the Senator does not expect to put the bill upon its passage, then I think it is due to us who desire an early adjournment that he should not occupy the attention of the Senate by calling it up. I have a very few words to say in regard to the bill, not perhaps to exceed five minutes, and as it is yet before the Senate, I will say what I have got to say now.

Mr. President, this is not proposed as a measure of practical necessary legislation, because it is known to all Senators that there are but very few colored people in the Territories which will be reached by the provisions of this bill, and it can be intended only as an expression of the views of Congress in regard to the right of the colored people to exercise the privilege of voting. I am not ready to say that in the northern States this privilege ought to be extended to the colored people. I am not prepared in the State of Indiana to vote to extend this right to the colored people. If I thought it right to give to the colored people in Indiana the privilege of voting, it is probable that I would support this measure, because I have no constitutional difficulties upon the matter, for I presume it is not questioned that Congress may extend or limit the right of voting in the Territories.

How does the measure now stand? By the acts organizing these Territories the power of controlling the franchise in the Territories is given to the Territorial Legislatures. This bill proposes to take that power away from the Territorial Legislatures, to take it away from the people of the Territories, and to exercise the power by Congress, to declare by Congress that the right of voting shall be extended to all the colored people. It presents the square, naked question, whether the right of suffrage shall be given to all the colored people of the country. The vote of each Senator, I presume, will be given according to his views upon that question. If a Senator is in favor of extending the right of suffrage in every State, everywhere where a colored man is found, extending the right to him, he will vote for this bill; but if a Senator believes that in his own State it ought not to be extended to the colored man, of course he will not vote to force it upon the people of the Territories, who are as competent, I presume, to regulate a question of this sort as the people of the States. I believe in the doctrine that the people of the Territories ought to regulate their domestic affairs. I have voted upon that principle, and upon this particular bill I shall give my vote according to that principle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from California, to postpone the bill under consideration and all prior orders and to take up the joint resolution mentioned by him.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES BREWER AND COMPANY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from California, before taking up his resolution, to allow me to pass a little bill which I called up this morning and which will not take a moment. I now have the papers in the case before me, and they can be read, if it is desired by any Senator.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator's bill will take no time, I am willing that my resolution be laid aside informally.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move, then, to take up House bill No. 555.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 555) for the relief of Charles Brewer & Company.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Secretary to read the communication from the Department of State which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, March 14, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from Messrs. Charles Brewer & Co., of Boston, inclosing to this Department an account of the Hawaiian bark Kamehameha V, for the passage of destitute American seamen from the Ascension islands to Honolulu. These seamen, numbering sixty-eight, belonging to American vessels which were burned by the pirate Shenandoah, were landed in the Ascension islands without any provision being made for their support. They were found in a destitute condition by the master of the bark Kamehameha V and taken to Honolulu. It seems but just and proper that this claim should be paid. As, however, there is no fund at the disposal of this Department with which to meet it, the claim is respectfully referred to Congress, with the recommendation that an appropriation be made sufficient to cover it.

I am, sir, your obedient servant.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. S. CHANDLER, Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have here also the consular certificate indorsing this, and likewise the appointment of Charles Brewer & Co. for the collection of this claim.

Mr. CLARK. The communication from the Department of State refers to a letter from Brewer & Co., which I desire to have read.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the Secretary read the consul's certificate and all the papers.

The Secretary read as follows:

Boston, March 3, 1866.

SIR: Inclosed we beg to hand you the original bill of Hawaiian bark Kamehameha V, and owners, for service in carrying to Honolulu, H. I., from the island of Ascension, the officers and crew of three United States whalers burned at that island by the pirate S. S. Shenandoah, (Sea King,) amounting to $3,530, payable in United States gold coin, which bill is properly attested by the United States consul at Honolulu, and indorsed payable to our order by the owner of the bark Kamehameha V.

If the said bill or account is found correct, please remit the amount of same to

Your obedient servants,

CHARLES BREWER & CO.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State for the United States, Washington, D. C.

HONOLULU, December 11, 1865.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE.
HONOLULU, December 26, 1865.

I, the undersigned consul of the United States at the port of Honolulu, do hereby certify that the foregoing specified sixty-eight seamen had their several vessels burned by the pirate Shenandoah at Ascension island on the 1st day of April last; and said seamen turned on shore at said island, (which is a savage island,) where they remained without means of getting away until the 28th day of September last, when they were rescued and brought therefrom and brought to this port on the 18th of November last, and thrown upon my hands for relief in a state of great destitution by the Hawaiian bark Kamachamaha V of Honolulu, of which bark T. R. Foster is sole owner. I further certify that I consider the sums charged above for the passages of said seamen from said island of Ascension to this port a very reasonable charge, being at the same rate per man paid by the Hawaiian Government to said owner of said bark for bringing from said island the crew of the Hawaiian ship Harvest, which was also burned at said time and place by said pirate. For the full particulars of all which reference is hereby made to my dispatch No. 21 to the State Department, dated November 20, 1865.

Given under my hand and consular seal the day and year aforesaid.

ALFRED CALDWELL,
United States Consul.

HONOLULU, December 26, 1865.

Please pay Charles Brewer & Co. or order the amount of the above claim.

J. R. FOSTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce to insert after the word "Boston" the words "in coin."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I move to strike out the names of the parties, "Messrs. Charles Brewer & Co., of Boston," and to insert "the owners of the Hawaiian bark Kamakamaha V;" so that it shall appear that this money is paid to foreigners.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then you would simply have to send it to Honolulu to get an indorsement instead of sending it to Boston.

Mr. CLARK. There will be no necessity of sending it away. I wish it to be stated in the bill that this payment in coin is to foreigners.

Mr. CHANDLER. This claim has been pending for more than a year, and I want to have it paid at once. It is a disgrace to the Government that it should be so long delayed.

Mr. CLARK. There ought to be some recognition in the bill of this claim. It does not appear in the bill for what the money is paid, and it should be amended so as to show that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I simply ask to have a vote on the bill. I hope it will not be amended.

Mr. CONNESS. I suggest that this language be used, "the owners of the Hawaiian bark Kamakamaha V or their agents."

Mr. CLARK. That is the amendment I desire to have made.

Mr. HOWE. Would it not meet the idea of the Senator from New Hampshire better to say, "pay Charles Brewer & Co., of Boston, for the use of the owners," &c.?

Mr. CLARK. I do not care how it is done. That would be the same thing.

Mr. CHANDLER. Put it in that shape. That will do.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are they the agents?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; they are the agents for the authorities there.

Mr. JOHNSON. You had better say that it be paid to them as the agents for the bark.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CLARK. I will agree to anything that will show what it is paid for.

Mr. HOWE. I think the best form in which we can get it is to say, "Charles Brewer & Co., of Boston, for the use of the owners of the Hawaiian bark Kamakamaha V."

Mr. JOHNSON. To be paid them "as the agents." That will answer the purpose.

Mr. CLARK. I modify my amendment in accordance with those suggestions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: A bill for the relief of the owners of the Hawaiian bark Kamakamaha V.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Whereas the financial condition of the United States demands the exercise of a rigid economy, in all Departments of the Government, in order to sustain the credit of the nation and to relieve the people at the earliest possible day from the burden of excessive taxation; and whereas there is reason to believe that in many Departments of the civil service abuses have for a long time existed and still exist, in the perpetuation of useless offices and sinecures, in extravagant salaries and allowances, and in other unnecessary and wasteful expenditures: Therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint select committee be appointed, to consist of two members of the Senate and three members of the House, to be styled the joint select committee on retrenchment; that said committee be instructed to inquire into the expenditures in all the branches of the civil service of the United States, and to report whether any and what offices ought to be abolished, whether any and what salaries or allowances ought to be reduced, and generally how and to what extent the expenses of the civil service of the country may and ought to be curtailed. That said committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to report by bill or otherwise. And that said committee may appoint a clerk for the term of six months and no more.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 56) granting a pension to Mary C. Hamilton;

A bill (S. No. 215) concerning certain lands granted to the State of Nevada;

A bill (S. No. 299) granting a pension to Jane E. Miles;

A bill (S. No. 314) for the relief of Sarah J. Purcell; and

A bill (S. No. 368) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret A. Farran.

MAIL SERVICE TO CHINA.

Mr. CONNESS. I now call up the joint resolution which was laid aside informally to enable the Senator from Michigan to pass his bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 98) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved, February 17, 1865. It proposes to repeal so much of the first section of an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865, as requires that the steamships engaged in carrying the mails between the United States and China shall touch at Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands; but this is not to be construed to alter the amount fixed by that act, or the contract made by the Postmaster General in pursuance thereof, as a compensation for carrying the mails between the United States and China.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, the resolution under consideration proposes to release the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, who are the contractors with the Postmaster General for carrying the United States mails between San Francisco and Japan and China by way of Honolulu, from the obligation to touch at Honolulu. The act under which that contract was made was passed in 1865. The first proposition to pass such an act, I believe, came from some parties in Boston. It was proposed to carry the mails, by the form of bill that they presented to Congress, in vessels that should not be less than two thousand tons measurement. After a considerable length of time, those parties abandoned the project, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company took it up. It will be remembered that they are the parties who are engaged in carrying the United States mails and transporting merchandise and passengers between New York and Aspinwall, and Panama and San Francisco.

Under the act that was passed, competition was invited for the performance of the service from San Francisco to China; and it was provided that a subsidy should be granted by the Government, not to exceed $500,000 annually, but that the Postmaster General should advertise for bids for the service, and give the contract to the lowest responsible bidder. In process of time, those advertisements were made, but no bid was received except from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. The act, however, providing for it had been amended so as to require the construction of steamships, in which to carry the mails and to perform this service, of not less than three thousand tons measurement. The increase of one thousand tons was made to the ships proposed originally by the act as it passed in 1865. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company felt their ability to undertake this work; but with their wide experience in the management of sea-going steamers, they entered upon calculations before they made their bid, taking into account the distance of ocean to be traversed, the capacity of the ships for coaling themselves or carrying a sufficient supply of coal, and the capacity of the ships for the transportation of merchandise and passengers. It may very well be assumed that they would not enter upon building larger vessels, owing to the great cost of constructing them, than the actual necessities of this great commercial project demanded with a view of assuring its entire success; but the calculations that they made were of such a character as to convince them that success in the great and new project of grasping the trade of the East Indies, and connecting it in the most direct manner with our own country could not be successfully made or had in vessels of a less capacity than four thousand tons.

In that condition of affairs they consulted various parties, their friends in and out of Congress, as to whether they would be held, if they made the contract, to make the stopping required in the act as passed at Honolulu. The general answers and replies that they received were, that if it could be shown at any time that the success of this great commercial project would be in any manner compromised by the stoppage at Honolulu, Congress would readily release them from that part of the service. With that assurance, and determined to make the project a great success for the character of the nation and for their own character as men entering upon a great and new service, they engaged in building ships of the greater capacity. Two of those ships are being constructed, one by the celebrated builder, Mr. Webb, at New York, and another by Steers. They are to cost $1,000,000 each. It is intended to put four such ships on the line, but at the end of the war it was found impossible to collect material for such a character of ships, of seasoned condition and quality, and therefore only two of the ships have been contracted for; the other two are to follow those. In the mean time the company have prepared for service vessels exceeding three thousand tons in burden from the newest vessels in possession of the company. The steamships Colorado and Golden Gate, recently plying between San Francisco and Panama, are being taken into dock—one of them now—double planked and fitted for the new service throughout; so that they may be able to begin the service as required by the contract, on the 1st day of January, 1867.

Upon making this application for release from stopping at the Sandwich Islands, various gentlemen of this country, particularly residents at Boston, in Massachusetts, have felt, considering the interests that they have in that country, that it would not be entirely just to American interests at the Sandwich Islands to grant this release. They have presented the case to many persons, and among others, to myself. I wish to say here that the whole question involved was very carefully considered by the committee before we undertook this measure. The question of the maintenance of American interests, political, commercial, and social, at the Sandwich Islands, I concede freely to be one of great consequence. No person, perhaps, feels a greater interest in it than I do. The people of no State in the Union can feel a greater interest in it than the people I in part represent here—the people of California. We are in close and almost immediate neighborhood with the Sandwich Islands. Our trade is large with the Sandwich Islands. But, sir, the maintenance of American influence at the Sandwich Islands does not in any manner depend upon forcing this company or continuing to require them to make the stoppage required in the contract at those islands. On the contrary, the maintenance of that influence is already, by other steps taken, fully assured.

Until within the past year there was in the whole Pacific ocean, to take care of American commercial interests, including the Sandwich Islands, from the north to the south, but five vessels-of-war, and those, in the main, of the most indifferent class; two of them being sailing sloops-of-war. Within a year, and since the release of our blockading squadrons, that entire matter has been changed, and the Pacific squadron to-day is one of the largest squadrons belonging to the Government. It embraces one of our first-class double-turreted monitors, another single-turreted monitor, the steamship Vanderbilt, and like ships of the highest capacity for war uses. In addition to that, by a special order, in compliance with a request made by the State Department, I will say here, at my own instance, four months ago, the Secretary of the Navy has designated one of our men-of-war to be stationed permanently hereafter at the Sandwich Islands, and the officer to take command of that ship is now on his way to the Pacific. Thus, sir, so far as the maintenance of American political power and influence at the Sandwich Islands is concerned, the matter is assured beyond peradventure.

The only question remaining is the importance of immediate steam communication between San Francisco and Honolulu. I have already said that no people feel perhaps so great an interest in that question as the people of California; but we also feel that it is vital to us, as it is to the entire commercial interests of the whole country, that nothing shall be done to mar the prospects of the mighty project of intercommunication and commercial control by Americans in the East Indies, which has been so well begun.

Now, sir, shall we not release this company from stopping at the Sandwich Islands? If we do not, the round trip from San Francisco to China will be lengthened from eight to ten days; and thus we shall lose in the great international race in which we are now engaged with the other commercial nations of the world. In addition to that, if we shall refuse to release them, there is another difficulty in the case, and I will state it briefly. It was found to be necessary for the complete success of this great commercial enterprise to build vessels of the class that I have described. They cannot, as was subsequently found, enter the harbor of Honolulu. They cannot go over the bar before that town. I have been asked, in reply, why did they build such ships? As I have said, the project and the scheme that we have undertaken required the establishment of just such a line as they have begun, and the fact that they have begun upon the scale that they have is the very highest compliment to the gentlemen engaged in it. The four ships that they are to build, in place of costing, as they might have cost, half a million dollars each, are to cost $4,000,000. But if we should refuse to release them from stopping at the Sandwich Islands, they would now, at this time, be compelled to turn the two great ships that they have built off from that trade, and to order the building of two of a less capacity. This I do not state as a fact to be questioned, but as a fact that will certainly follow. The service to China must be performed as required by the act, in vessels of not less than three thousand tons burden, but they will not be to any considerable amount in excess of that tonnage. To reduce, then, the capacity of the great ships that are to do this work, that is to revolutionize this mighty trade, that is to give America preëminence in the new markets of the world, or, if you please, the old markets of the world, but new markets to us, would, it seems to me, be a very narrow policy.

I regret very much that the gentlemen to whom I have referred have seen fit to persist in their opposition to this measure. I have allowed it to remain here from day to day since the committee have reported it, expecting that they would see that the true interest of the Sandwich Islands consists in developing the great empire of trade that the East India ocean furnishes to us; that commercial communication with them, rapid steam communication, would follow as a matter of course; and that they should not urge this incidental matter of interest in the way of so great and mighty a project.

When the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads took this subject up for consideration it was referred to the Postmaster General for his views on the subject. Those views have been presented. They are before us in an elaborate report from the committee. I will not take up the time and attention of the Senate by reading from it; but it is shown, as stated by the Postmaster General, that when he recommended, in his annual report of 1864, that a subsidy be granted to a company to carry the mails between San Francisco and China, the question of stopping at the Sandwich Islands never entered into his consideration; that his idea was to patronize American steamships by authorizing them to carry the mails, and thus secure a new empire of trade for his country. Therefore, that being the great object for which the line was established, should you release them from stopping at the Sandwich Islands, you do not thereby cheapen their service; but, on the contrary, we should not refuse, in my judgment, the passage of this act and the release asked for.

The question of the voyages between San Francisco and China; the question of the ocean, its currents, the winds to be encountered, and the passages to be taken, were comparatively unknown by us. Further and most thorough examination into those questions and considerations which are of the first importance have been made, and the result is spread before Senators in the report of the Post Office Committee of this body. It shows clearly that to make this line what we should all wish it to be, a great success, the most rapid passages must be made; and this rapidity should be secured from the start of the line. Nothing should occur from the beginning to destroy the prestige of its success. Indeed, if we release them from this stoppage from the very first trips that the ships shall make they will beat the time that is now made on the other route from China to London. The shortest time now between London and Hong Kong by the European routes is fifty-five days; that is, by way of Gibraltar and Suez; by way of Marseilles it is forty-seven days. But by this means we shall make the connection between China and New York in forty-three or forty-four days, and perhaps in forty-one days.

I do not wish, unless it should become necessary, and there shall be further discussion on the subject, to occupy the time of the Senate longer. I wish to say simply, in conclusion of the remarks that I submit now, that no commercial project of equal magnitude with this has ever yet been undertaken by the Government of the Republic; and I hope that nothing will be refused to this company who have engaged in its performance upon so grand and magnificent a scale. As to the question of securing communication between the Sandwich Islands and California, as I have said, that will follow as a matter of course; and should we be compelled to grant a small subsidy in addition for the performance of that service hereafter, the money of the Treasury can be engaged in no better office than that.

Gentlemen have suggested, in conversation with me, that the subsidy now provided for this company should be reduced if they are to be released from stopping at the Sandwich Islands; but it will be remembered that that cannot be done with any propriety. Releasing the company from stopping at the Sandwich Islands is simply to make their trips more rapid, to make speed an object; so that the highest rate of speed will then be attempted; the most costly ships will then be put upon the line. The company never would have made a bid for the service at less than the amount stipulated by the act of Congress. The fact that they were the only bidders shows that clearly and conclusively, and the magnitude upon which and experience with which they have entered upon this great service conclusively shows that they are prepared in the most liberal manner to meet the exigencies of the case. I hope, therefore, that there will be no opposition to the passage of this resolution.

Mr. GRIMES. I rise to oppose the passage of this resolution; and I will say to the Senator from California that I am impelled to do it, in a measure, by the remonstrances of the very officer of whom he has spoken, who has been ordered to command the Lackawanna, to be stationed at the Sandwich Islands, in conjunction with various other naval officers stationed or who expect to be stationed in the Pacific ocean.

A year ago and upward we passed a bill authorizing the subsidizing of a line of steamers between San Francisco and the Sandwich Islands, Japan, and China. The Postmaster General issued his proposals. One great company, as the Senator has told us—an immense company, a company that has thus far been able to frown down all opposition, the great Pacific Mail Steamship line, a company of immense wealth—made its bids for this contract. Other parties, doubtless, who were aware that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was about to bid, declined to enter into competition with them. The result was that this great company succeeded in securing the contract. And now, without having built a single ship, without having put a single vessel upon the line, without having done anything except to contract, as we have been told by the Senator, for two large ships, they come before us and ask us to release them from a part of their contract; to release them from that part of it which, I undertake to say, is of most importance to the commercial interests of the United States; to release them from that part of it in which I feel infinitely more deeply interested than in any other part of it—that part of it which compels them to touch at Honolulu, to keep our continent in close connection with the American interests at the Sandwich Islands, and thus be able to restore in some degree the American influence which, during the last eight or ten years, has been greatly supplanted by the British influence there.

What are the arguments that are urged in favor of this proposition? First, that these large steamships are not able to enter the harbor of Honolulu. Was there a seaman connected with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company that did not know that they could not do it in the first instance? Does not the Senator from California know that half the whalers from New Bedford—vessels with a tonnage of from nine hundred to a thousand tons—lie outside the bar and transfer their oil and bone from the islands by lighters to the ships? If the Senator does not know it, as he shakes his head at that suggestion, I can produce gentlemen who have lived for years in the Sandwich Islands, doubtless now within the sound of my voice; I can bring him the charts and the records from the Navy Department that will convince him of that fact. There is not a very great depth of water over the bar at Honolulu, and all large vessels lie outside of the bar.

MR. CONNESS. Will the Senator state the depth?

MR. GRIMES. I do not remember the precise depth. Will the Senator state it?

MR. CONNESS. Fifteen feet.

MR. GRIMES. Fifteen feet is not a very great depth of water. We regard twenty-three feet as an ordinary depth of water for a large vessel to come in. Fifteen feet is a little less than the depth of water across the bar at Charleston, South Carolina, where we had a great deal of difficulty in getting large vessels across. We can carry in seventeen feet, as the Senator from New Hampshire [MR. CLARK] reminds me, at Charleston; and that we consider a very shallow harbor. Is it possible that the men who control the Pacific Mail Steamship Company did not know what was the depth of water across the bar at Honolulu when they undertook to make this contract? Why, sir, as I said before, one half of all the whalers from Massachusetts and Connecticut that frequent the northern Pacific ocean are in the habit of lying outside the bar and having the whalebone and oil that have been accumulated in Honolulu transferred to them by lighters; and it can well be done there, for the climate is so mild and the sea is so exceedingly pacific, that it is not once in two or three years, I am told by naval officers, that there is a very heavy storm there.

The other reason assigned for the passage of this resolution is, that a great saving of time will be made if they are allowed to go to and from the China seas without touching at Honolulu. I do not get my information from any agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; but I am told by the naval officers who have been stationed there, and among them is Captain Reynolds, of the Lackawanna, from whom I have a letter to-day, that in the passage from San Francisco to Japan and China, no vessel ever goes without passing in sight of the harbor of Honolulu. The Senator from California shakes his head. I suppose he does not doubt but what I am so told by Captain Reynolds.

MR. CONNESS. Not at all.

MR. GRIMES. He has lived there five or six years. On the way back from the China seas to this country the currents and the wind take them considerably to the north of the Sandwich Islands, and, in some conditions of weather, it would require probably from three to four days longer to make the homeward passage if they were compelled to touch at Honolulu than if they did not touch there; but on the outward bound passage there would be no detention required, except just so long as they chose to lie at the bar to connect with the tug that might come down from the harbor.

The Senator, I think, told us that at the time this company bid upon this contract last year they were not very well informed as to the currents and channels and winds in the Pacific ocean. I do not think that is very creditable, either to the company or to the knowledge of seamanship and navigation that is possessed by the people of this country. I think that the currents and the prevailing winds across the Pacific are tolerably well understood among nautical men. If the Pacific Mail Steamship Company did not know all about them at the time they made their bid it was their own fault, for they had the means of informing themselves. Nearly the whole distance across there has been surveyed, and surveyed by our own officers, by Commodore Ringgold and Captain John Rodgers, and the dangers have been pointed out upon the maps, and we know exactly the courses of the currents and the prevailing winds at particular seasons of the year. If this Pacific Mail Steamship Company, at the time they made their bid to carry this mail for a specific sum, did not know these things, whose fault was it? It was not ours.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads have appended to their report a letter of the Postmaster General; and it will be observed that great stress has been laid by the Senator from California, in his argument, upon the idea that it is necessary to release the Pacific Mail Steamship Company from this part of their contract because we want to have a line that will make a quicker passage than the British line is able to make across the Isthmus of Suez to the East Indies, and if the Pacific railroad was completed we would be able to make a quicker passage.

MR. CONNESS. We will be able to make it without that.

MR. GRIMES. Let us see what the Postmaster General says:

"In determining the question when the company's steamers shall be relieved, if at all, from calling at the Sandwich Islands on their voyages in either direction, it should be borne in mind that, until the completion of the Pacific railroad, the general interests of commerce will not be materially advanced by permitting the steamers to take the direct route either way, as, prior to that time, the line between China and Europe, via San Francisco and New York, will not be an equal competition, in point of expedition, with the existing lines between Europe and China via Suez."

Now, what becomes of all that branch of the argument? The Postmaster General tells us that until the Pacific railroad is completed the interests of commerce are not going to be materially advanced or affected in any way by releasing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company from their obligation to touch at Honolulu, either one way or the other.

MR. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me to say a word right there?

MR. GRIMES. Yes, sir.

MR. CONNESS. The Postmaster General, on the point the Senator is now making, is considering the question of whether the shortest voyage could be made now from Hong Kong by this line to London or by the Isthmus of Suez, not whether the shortest passage could be made from Hong Kong to New York. If we release this line from the consumption and waste of eight or ten days of time, we shall at once, by the line from San Francisco, beat the London time a great many days, and we shall by that means get the teas that we now receive from London by our own line, and in a shorter time.

MR. GRIMES. I can only tell what the Postmaster General meant by what he said. This is a paragraph that is entirely disconnected with any other branch of this subject. The preceding paragraph is in these words:

"I have been furnished by the Department of State with a summary of arrivals and departures of American vessels at the port of Honolulu during 1865, also of inward and outward bound cargoes for the same year, which is appended hereto, and from which it will be seen that we have a profitable trade with the Sandwich Islands, susceptible of increase by means of direct steamship communication."

They propose to take off that direct steamship communication.

"In determining the question when the company's steamers shall be relieved, if at all, from calling at the Sandwich Islands on their voyages in either direction, it should be borne in mind that, until the completion of the Pacific railroad, the general interests of commerce will not be materially advanced by permitting the steamers to take the direct route either way, as, prior to that time, the line between China and Europe, via San Francisco and New York, will not be an equal competition, in point of expedition, with the existing lines between Europe and China, via Suez."

Now, Mr. President, will it not be well to let this thing rest and let these contractors fulfill the terms of their contract for a little while until we shall be a little nearer to completing the Pacific railroad than we are at present?

One word, sir, as to the general American interests at the Sandwich Islands. I suppose I am not as well qualified to speak upon that subject as some other gentlemen are; but it has so happened within the last three or four years that I have every day almost been brought in contact with persons who have been stationed more or less of their time at the Sandwich Islands, and I can only give such information to the members of this body, in a sort of second-hand way, as I have been able to receive from them; and they are mostly officers of the naval profession. A very large proportion of the property in the Sandwich Islands is owned by citizens of the United States, and, until within the last eight or ten years, American interests have been vastly in the preponderance there. A few years ago the present King overturned the Government, overturned the constitution, and established a new Government, and this new Government has been in the interests of Great Britain. He is childless. The next in authority under him was the Princess Victoria, of whose death we were notified a few days ago. Next in authority, or whom the British authorities will seek to place on the throne, but who is not really the heir apparent or entitled to the throne, is the Dowager Queen Emma, now in the custody of Great Britain.

MR. SUMNER. Traveling in Europe.

MR. GRIMES. In the custody of Great Britain, traveling in Europe. Now, the question is whether or not, just at this particular juncture, we ought to relax any of our efforts to keep up a close and immediate communication between this continent and the Sandwich Islands. I say there are political interests of the highest consideration that should restrain us at all hazards, no matter what it may cost, from allowing a single tie to be severed that can possibly bind us to the Sandwich Islands. As I said at the outset, about the only thing that was in connection with the whole bill when it passed originally, that gave me any sort of consideration for it, was the fact that these steamships would be compelled to touch at Honolulu, and by bringing us in immediate contact and connection with our friends there, it would serve to maintain them in their position, and in some manner overthrow the British interest that is so much antagonized to us.

As I said, I have spoken in this matter more at the instance of persons whose employment requires them to be in the Pacific ocean, and spoken in a sort of second-hand way, so far as the facts that I have been able to state are concerned, because I know nothing of the country myself. I have never been in the Pacific; but I know that with one universal accord the whole naval profession is in favor of keeping up the closest possible connection with the Sandwich Islands, and that every one of them with whom I have spoken has urged me to prevent, if possible, the passage of this bill.

MR. CONNESS. The Senator told us at the close of his remarks that the only possible consideration which permitted him to look with any favor upon the establishment of this line in 1865 was the stoppage at the Sandwich Islands. Then the argument that the Senator has made was certainly to have been expected. The fact that all the nations of the world that have been from time to time enabled to control the trade of the East Indies have enriched themselves in proportion to that control, had escaped the honorable Senator's attention; and the attempt in modern times to grasp that and control it for American commerce had not secured the honorable Senator's attention. I am very sorry that is the case, and to hear him tell us that it is so.

It is too often the case that those of us who live near the sea and go down to it in big ships are left without the protecting care and aid of gentlemen situated like the honorable Senator. But the honorable Senator has much contact with the sea in the high position that he occupies in this body as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that brings him in contact with the commanders of our ships; and with one voice, he tells us, they are opposed to this release. I do not wish to question what the honorable Senator has said; but I do not think that many of them have spoken. A very eminent member of that profession has spoken; I mean Rear Admiral Davis, who occupies a very high position indeed in that connection; and he tells us the very contrary of what the honorable Senator has told us that he has obtained from commanders of naval vessels. Here is what he says on the subject of routes and on the subject of stopping at the Sandwich Islands, the question being referred to him. He says the idea of stopping on the return voyage is out of the question, meaning the return voyage from China and Japan to San Francisco; that what is called the great circle route must be taken; and I have here a map that will explain it fully, if gentlemen see fit to examine it; that the northern or great circle route must be taken; that on the outward trip from San Francisco what is known as the rhumb line must be taken; and that to go to the Sandwich Islands is to diverge largely from the best and shortest route. The Postmaster General, in his communication to the committee, says:

"As to the second proposition, that relating to the outward voyages, I again quote from the communication of Admiral Davis, as follows:

"The question whether the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's vessels can, with a proper regard to their business and to the economy of time and means, make the Sandwich Islands an intermediate stopping place, is really definitely settled by what has already been said."

Mr. GRIMES. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. CONNESS. I am reading from the letter of the Postmaster General accompanying the report by the committee to this body.

Mr. GRIMES. What page?

Mr. CONNESS. Page 5:

"It appears, however, from the very careful investigation of all the facts that enter into the question, that it is not desirable that the company's ships should touch at the Sandwich Islands, even on the western voyage."

On the voyage out. Why?

"The return on the great circle route is obviously out of the question. It is necessary, therefore, to pursue what mariners call the "rhumb line," which is the course by compass taken from day to day as often as the ship's position is determined, whether astronomically or by computation.

"Now, it is apparent on looking on the chart that a vessel bound to Yeddo or Shanghai deviates sixteen and a half degrees from the rhumb line by going to Honolulu."

Here is a very wide divergence between the say-so of a naval officer who has had little experience in the Pacific ocean—

Mr. GRIMES. The naval officer whose name I gave to the Senator was Captain Reynolds, in command now of the Lackawanna, who was stationed, I think, either five or six years at the town of Honolulu in the Sandwich Islands. It was his statement that a vessel going from San Francisco to Japan always or almost invariably went within sight of the harbor of Honolulu.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator will look at this map, I think he will conclude that there is some mistake about this matter.

Mr. GRIMES. I know a great deal about how maps are made, and I know a great deal of how letters are obtained where there is a great interest like that of the Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will cast no aspersions upon either Admiral Davis or upon my humble self in my advocacy of this measure.

Mr. GRIMES. Was this letter of Admiral Davis to the Senator?

Mr. CONNESS. His letter was addressed to the Postmaster General. The Senator said when he was up before that he knew facts were easily obtained for companies or something of that thing. I think it is as well to pass that mode of discussion by.

Now, Mr. President, I proceed:

"The physical geography of this part of the ocean ought to present some counter-advantages to balance this manifest disadvantage, and to a certain extent it does. After passing the parallel of thirty degrees, the ship enters into the region of the northeast trade-winds and derives the same benefit from them in going to the westward as she does from the prevailing westerly winds on her eastern voyage. And if she will descend some six degrees further in latitude—that is, in all twenty-two and a half degrees, or thirteen hundred and fifty miles below the line of her direct course—she will fall into the northern branch of the great equatorial current of the Pacific ocean and profit by its aid."

That is, if she goes still further south. I am quite aware and willing to concede that the honorable Senator has stated according to his information, but he will remember that Captain Reynolds in sailing his ship sails it by the charts that go out from the office of Admiral Davis, from the data furnished from that office, and the charts furnished by him; and therefore I take it that this must be considered as the great source of authority.

Mr. President, I am as much the friend of the maintenance of American interests in the Sandwich Islands as the Senator can be. He will, perhaps, concede that without question the people I represent here are directly interested. They have spoken with a unanimous voice for this release; and yet they are connected directly with trade, day by day, via the Sandwich Islands.

Mr. GRIMES. Permit me to ask a question.

Mr. CONNESS. Certainly.

Mr. GRIMES. If they spoke with a unanimous voice in favor of this release, I ask if they did not couple with it a condition that Congress should grant a subsidy to another line between San Francisco and Honolulu, and if that was not the purport of the petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator will do me the credit to concede that I stated that in my opening remarks.

Mr. GRIMES. I did not hear it.

Mr. CONNESS. I thought the Senator had not heard me. The Senator will find that I have been entirely candid in this matter, because I then submitted that even if it should cost us $50,000 or $60,000 per annum—it will not exceed that sum to encourage a line of small ships hereafter to the Sandwich Islands—we should not at the beginning change the form and the size of these great vessels that are to enter into a competition with the commercial nations of the world for supremacy in these new regions. I ask the Senator himself whether that is a consideration that should govern him in the case. I am pretty sure that the Senator would not refuse such a subsidy if it were deemed important to ask for it or of special consequence to ask for it. But not the Chamber of Commerce alone, but the commercial press of San Francisco, directly connected, directly interested, have all spoken in favor of this release.

Mr. President, is it not a matter of consequence that the raw silks, baled silks of Japan, shall be laid down in the city of New York, or such of them as are necessary there, in less time than they can be laid down in London by the Isthmus of Suez? Is it not of consequence that to-day we are absolutely importing tea via London, from the London market, and paying London merchants their profits upon that article, to be taxed again to our people? Is it possible that my friend, who takes charge of and represents on this floor the great naval interests of this country, does not extend his view far enough to wish to see this line a grand national success?

Mr. President, let not the Senator or any other Senator believe that I speak in behalf of the company's interests. The Senate will bear me witness that, contrary to the wishes of these companies, since I have been on this floor I have favored the passage of the most restrictive legislation in connection with their business, and by that means not always secured their approbation, but the contrary. But this is a matter we are interested in, and these companies concern us no more than to the extent that they are able and willing to engage in the great project upon a scale of munificence corresponding with its value to us as a nation. In that connection the company is of considerable consequence. No company but a great company could ever have entered upon this service; and had a company of inconsiderable means entered upon it, it would become a failure upon their hands; and there would then be an end of the question of subsidizing American lines thereafter. Our experience in subsidizing American lines has not, I concede, been encouraging; but it was our pride to make this a success, to make it a success that would challenge the admiration of the whole country. In the Pacific ocean particularly our Government has been most remiss. Let me call the attention of the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee to a statement I made here not long ago, strictly true and demonstrated to be true by statistical information, that notwithstanding the great amount of commerce that the American States now pass and re-pass over the Panama railroad, all we do over that railroad is but one tenth of the whole business that railroad does. Nine tenths of it is in European hands—nine tenths of the commerce of the Pacific ocean—simply because we have slept while England and France have occupied those great channels of trade. Sir, there never was a time so fitting to lift up a burden from a company that are engaging in this enterprise, not as niggards, not as stingy men measuring their expenditures, but lavishly and largely upon the most magnificent scale.

Mr. President, the Senator tells us that this line can stop at the Sandwich Islands, and that they can receive the freights and discharge the freights that they may have there by lighters. Will you keep your great ships of three or four thousand tons burden there wasting and consuming their time with this mode of connecting with the land? I hope not.

Mr. GRIMES. I inquire how they are going to load at the other end. They must go to Hong Kong.

Mr. CONNESS. There is no question about the depth of water there.

Mr. GRIMES. Can they load there without the aid of lighters?

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator smiles. This company have latterly sent an agent to Hong Kong to arrange their entire business there, with authority to make expenditures, to construct wharves, and to do anything that may be necessary to facilitate this line. But they have another plan and project that ought to be interesting to the Senator to know, and I will state what it is. It is well that it should be known. Hong Kong and the city of Shanghai, in China, are eight hundred miles apart. Shanghai, as will be seen by the map before me, is eight hundred miles nearer, giving us that advantage if we are able to make our commercial connection with that city, Hong Kong being eight hundred miles further off and consequently nearer to Europe. The intention of this company is to fix their headquarters at Shanghai, which has already become an American city, I may say, to some extent, and to bring the trade of China to their great ships there, and thus gain eight hundred miles at one leap in this great race. I am very happy to be able to say that everything that could possibly be wished for by the American commercial mind is contemplated and intended to be carried forth by this company; and to require them to continue here for fear we should be called upon, as suggested by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, for fifty or sixty thousand dollars annually hereafter to maintain a direct communication with the Sandwich Islands, appears to me to be the shallowest and narrowest policy imaginable. I hope that the Senate of the United States will not adopt that line of policy.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not rise to enter into this debate, but to state my recollection on this matter so as to see whether I am right. I think the proposition to subsidize a line of steamships between San Francisco and Hong Kong was originally brought forward by a late Senator from California, Mr. Latham. I do not remember whether I was in favor of it or not, but I recollect the debate upon that measure and the circumstances connected with it. I was not aware of the bill that was passed last winter, which was somewhat a modification of the original proposition to which I have alluded, principally with reference to the size of the vessels, I believe, until this debate sprang up to-day. I remember that in the debate to which I have referred the effecting of a rapid communication with the Sandwich Islands was dwelt upon as a great part of the plan, as important to this country, as important to our citizens there and to our country generally, and especially to the Pacific coast. Was it not so?

Mr. CONNESS. It has always been taken into the account.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Always, largely, as a matter of very great consequence.

Mr. CONNESS. We are very much interested in it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was one of the arguments urged, and urged strongly, why we should subsidize this line. It was not only to secure to us communication with China, but constant and speedy communication with the Sandwich Islands. Now, it seems that the contract having been made with this company, and they having undertaken for the whole amount of this subsidy, half a million a year, to do these two things for the benefit of the country, to-wit, communicate regularly with the Sandwich Islands and also with China, a proposition is made to release them entirely from one important part of the contract, and at the same time pay them the whole amount of the subsidy. That I understand to be the object of this joint resolution. Now, sir, if these gentlemen went to work in relation to this matter as business men ordinarily do, they calculated these two elements: one was what would be the cost of direct communication with China, and the other what would be the additional cost of that communication touching at the Sandwich Islands on the way.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say to the Senator from Maine that so far from it being a gain to the company to be released from stopping at the Sandwich Islands, the contrary will be the effect. It will be simply a gain in the great enterprise, and not of money to them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the opinion of the honorable Senator. If this is not to be a gain to them, I ask what their objection is to doing the two things, both of which are of importance to this country. Why do they want to be released from one?

Mr. CONNESS. I have answered, because the trip will be so extended as to defeat the great enterprise according to the scale they have measured that they think it can only be made a success upon.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not exactly understand that. These parties have made a contract; they are not the only persons to judge of the commercial interests of the country; I suppose in reality this proposition came from this company, or those connected with it, in the first place. They held out this double inducement to the whole country, that we should be accomplishing these two great objects at one and the same time, both of very great consequence to the country. Now they come forward and say that they desire to make this change, and they urge this change on account of what they conceive to be the great commercial interests of the country and the honor of the country in making a quicker trip. I do not see how this is going to make the trip much shorter in point of time, as it is said that it will do, without at the same time saving a considerable expense to the company.

Mr. CONNESS. I can answer the Senator. Released from this condition, speed becomes an object at once, and it will be necessary for them to maintain their steamers at such a rate of speed as to secure that object, which increases in an immense proportion the cost of running steamships.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see how that has anything to do with it. What security have we that they will increase their rate of speed at such an additional cost? If they have got this much further distance to go, of course it is important to them to have an increase of speed in order to accomplish the purpose, if they design to accomplish it in good faith. Then they mean to tell us, "Unless you will let us off from so much of the contract, and pay us the same price, we will not try to increase our rate of speed in such a way as to accomplish the great object." I do not like that kind of argument.

Mr. CONNESS. That is not what they say.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Put into plain English, it seems to me that is the inference to be drawn. If they came forward and said to Congress, "On account of the commercial interests of the country, or on account of our desire to make a short trip, we propose to run an independent line to Honolulu; we can accomplish that object in that way; we will not disappoint the country in the two objects which we held out as important to be accomplished; we will accomplish both; but instead of obliging us to touch at the Sandwich Islands we ask you to allow us to establish an independent line from California to the Sandwich Islands," that would be another matter; or if they proposed that we should take from their gross price the amount needed to pay for such an independent service I could perceive some reason in it; but they propose that the Government shall surrender one of the great objects which were to be accomplished, and that at the same time they shall retain the full amount of money for which they stipulated to perform both services. Notwithstanding the energy with which my honorable friend from California has urged it, upon general principles it really strikes me that the proposition itself is a very strange one; and I must require more of argument and illustration and more of facts before, having made a contract by which two things were to be accomplished for the benefit of the country, I agree to give up one of them and yet pay the same price that I originally contracted to pay for both.

Mr. WILSON. I voted, Mr. President, most cheerfully for the establishment of this line originally to accomplish the object set forth on the face of the proposition which was then presented to us. That object included the touching of these steamers at the Sandwich Islands where in a special manner the people of my State are interested. It sometimes happens that a hundred sail of whaling vessels are at the Sandwich Islands at the same time, and we are very much interested in having a communication with those islands. Now, I am willing to release these parties from the obligation of touching at the islands by making such a deduction from the sum agreed upon as shall be sufficient to put on a separate monthly line from San Francisco to the Sandwich Islands, or to allow them to do it. For that purpose I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out all after the word "that," in the third line, and inserting these words:

The Pacific Steamship Company is hereby authorized to establish a monthly steamship line between San Francisco and the Sandwich Islands, instead of touching at Honolulu as required by law with their steamships carrying the mails between the United States and China.

This is a simple proposition, which authorizes the company to fulfill the contract already made, or to so change it as to allow their steamships to go directly to Asia, they putting on a separate monthly line to the Sandwich Islands, which will accomplish the same purpose as though the main line stopped there. I think the sum given is large enough to accomplish both objects, and I believe it to be for the interests of the whole country that both should be accomplished. My amendment leaves it with the company either to touch at the islands or to put on a separate monthly line at their will.

Mr. NYE. I hope that this substitute will not be adopted. A few years ago Congress gave quite a large subsidy to establish the Collins line of steamers between New York and Liverpool, a subsidy that was worthy of the body that granted it, and not more than worthy of the object intended to be accomplished. That lasted a few years. The struggle for trade between other countries and our own was great. Just at the time when the Collins line of steamers was getting along upon a basis where it could stand, the Government withdrew the subsidy, and the result is to-day, I believe, that our own mails are carried in British bottoms to England by the way of Liverpool. In the same way in nearly all our struggles for the mastery in commerce, we have been beaten in consequence of what I regard as ill-timed penuriousness. If that subsidy had been continued a little while longer the result would have been that the Collins line, which was the best line of steamers this country ever had, would have been established upon a firm basis, and to-day we should have at least a fair share, if not the control, of the trade with Liverpool. The result of that policy is seen in the fact that we are now employing British ships to carry our mails to England.

I voted for this measure at the last session of Congress for the reason that I regarded it as one of the most important steps in a new effort to seize the commercial advantages that are presented by the trade of the great Pacific.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to make an explanation here?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I find, on looking at the act passed last year, that the contract was very definite. It was for a monthly line of steamships of a certain description, capable of making twelve round trips in a year. It was for a line from San Francisco to a port in China, "touching at Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands, and one or more ports in Japan, by means of first-class American sea-going steamships, to be of not less than three thousand tons burden each, and of sufficient number to perform twelve round trips per annum between said ports." That was the contract which was made, and now the contractors ask to be relieved from an important part of the contract. The time they were to occupy, what they were to do, what should be the description of vessels used, is all matter of contract.

Mr. NYE. There can be no disagreement in regard to what the contract is, and the truth is that they ask to be relieved from a portion of it, and the question submitted to the Senate now is whether they shall be so relieved.

I remarked that I regarded the provision for the establishment of this line as a great step in what I hope will be a successful effort on our part to enter into the contest with other nations for the commercial mastery of that great ocean. I know that at the time one of the considerations was that these steamers should touch at Honolulu. I regard it as important now that we should have a line of steamers to Honolulu; but of much greater importance do I regard it that we should have this line of steamers established for the great prime cause for which it was intended to be established, to control the trade of China and Japan. We are not to achieve that without a great struggle. Already the British Government have a line of steamers running to Panama; already have millions of dollars been expended by the French Government on a beautiful line of ships from Panama, to contest with us for the mastery of that trade. It is not further from Panama to China, and I think not quite so far, as it is from San Francisco to China, by the usual routes of sailing. If in the contest for that great trade we are to lose five days on our outward and five days on our inward passage, of course the contest is already settled; other Governments become the masters of that trade, and like our other efforts to grasp for commercial equality, this will be a failure.

I agree perfectly with the Senator from Maine that this was the contract they made. But they have done a little more, thus far, than merely to carry out their contract. Instead of making their ships of three thousand tons, they are making them of four thousand tons, which is equal, in other measurements, to about five thousand tons capacity. The object in that was to have, in the first place, a class of ships that would defy the ships of other nations to compete with them.

Mr. CONNESS. That could not be beaten.

Mr. NYE. In the first place, for the nation, for one of these contracting parties, the company add a thousand tons to their ships so as to bid defiance at least in their ships to those of other Governments. There they have given us a thousand tons on each ship more than they agreed to do. I say for this manly effort on their part to make it a success they are entitled at least to a fair consideration upon the other thing that they ask, to be released from touching at Honolulu.

Sir, it is true, undoubtedly, that we as a people have not paid that kind, nursing care and attention to the interests of the Sandwich Islands that we should. Other nations, more careful, more vigilant, more Argus-eyed in looking at its advantages, have been doing it. But, sir, the trade and the commercial importance of the Sandwich Islands sink into insignificance in comparison with the great trade for which we are reaching. A Senator upon this floor, who is now dead, uttered a great truth when he said that for two hundred years the nations of the earth had been seeking for the natural outlet of Asiatic production; and, situated just as we are, in the center of the commercial world, everything has got to go over or go around us; and this nation, with a due sense to its own interest, in a time of war, when the country was in great commotion, exhibited great sagacity in stretching forth its power and resources to construct a railroad across the continent that would complete this great work of determining what was the natural outlet of Asiatic production. I regarded this measure, when we adopted it last year, as the beginning of the end of an effort that would be successful. Already we see, on both sides of this continent, on both ends of the great Pacific road, unparalleled exertions to complete the work that will solve this great problem of the natural outlet. This line of steamers to China and Japan is the ferry from the end of that railroad to the boundless riches and commercial wealth of the Indies, of China, and Japan. The great depot of American commerce will be beyond the Pacific. There will be congregated the productions of that rich country, increasing with the facilities for outlet till no human being can compute the magnitude and importance of this great work.

I understand the amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts to be to deduct $50,000 from this subsidy, and then release them from this portion of their contract. Mr. President, as a matter of sound economy I submit to Senators on this floor whether that would not be practicing and reenacting the old saying "Penny wise and pound foolish." If the trade of the Sandwich Islands is valuable, as it is, the paltry consideration of $50,000, I submit; with great respect to the judgment of the Senators who have addressed the Senate on this question, is not at all to be regarded for a moment. The subsidy that this direct line has got is none too much for the magnitude of the labor they are to perform—long voyages, full of peril, in boisterous seas, under inclement skies—the most dangerous navigation of the world, where any day one of those proud ships that look so defiant at the wharf may be made to dance like a cockleshell before the power of the tornado. The company is liable any day to lose one half its investment. I submit that if the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Iowa were partners in this great company they would not think the subsidy too much. Sir, I would let this subsidy stand.

The Senator from Maine says it is the contract. Yes, sir, so it is. This company, I think, meet that question in a manly spirit when they come up to the other contracting party and say "We have contracted for more than we can do; we can do a portion, the large portion, the main portion of this great work; but we find it impracticable to execute some of the details." Under such circumstances what is the part of wisdom for this Government? Is it to abandon the whole project and let go this rich prize which is already reaching out to us? By no means. I would hold on to the promising treasure that is so clearly seen; I would hold the main point if I had to let some of the minor points go. Sir, it would be a little matter to this Government in view of what I conceive most honestly to be the present and future interests of this country to subsidize another line to control the rich productions of the Sandwich Islands. That is comparatively a short trip, and the subsidy would be much less; a different character of ships better adapted to that service could be put on with a small subsidy, and that would insure a growing harvest from both fields.

Mr. President, I did not believe when this measure was passed that we had done with the great commercial interests of the Pacific ocean or the countries lying beyond it. By no means. We were just entering then upon the pathway of future commercial greatness. It was the first step, and our flag was to be seen for the first time in those distant seas in an organized commercial line that was calculated hereafter to control that great trade. I hope that the Senator from Maine, notwithstanding the contract is as he states, will, with his wide scope and clear vision that watches so carefully the interests of this country, both present and prospective, when he comes to contemplate it, see that it would be unwise to cut down this subsidy, and unwise to compel the company to perform the contract so as to lose these great commercial advantages. It is a fact as clear as the sunbeam at noon that that line which goes the quickest will control; time is everything in these commercial transactions; and ten days lost to the commercial world would ruin this enterprise. Trade will take the line that goes the quickest and is the most direct. The great question is now submitted to the Congress of this nation whether we shall compete in point of time and adopt other measures to secure the great commercial advantages of an intimate connection with the East. I think the Senator from Maine will see that it will be far better to give a subsidy to a smaller class of vessels making quicker commercial trips and have a more intimate connection with the Sandwich Islands, than it would be to cut down this subsidy or to compel these contractors to perform that labor, the performance of which destroys the great prime object of this subsidy, to wit, the control of the trade of the Indies. I trust that Senators will look at this question as a question of great commercial interest; and if this contract can be so varied, so altered, so changed as to be both a benefit to the contractors and a benefit to us as a nation, that measure will be adopted.

Sir, it is a great work, and I hope to see, indeed I believe I shall see the day, if the Government acts in that spirit of liberality which is due to the importance of this measure commercially, when our own steamers and our own cars will take the productions of China and Japan and put them down in our own bottoms at the different ports of the world upon the eastern continent. It is no stretch of fancy when I say that I expect to see it. From our position we should be the commercial masters of the sea, and all that is requisite to put that control, so full of importance, into our hands, is to act in a spirit of generous, manly liberality, with a generosity commensurate with the importance of the object to be attained. If we do, we shall realize the brightest hopes and fondlest anticipations of our future commercial greatness.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall not attempt to follow or reply to my honorable friend from Nevada, [Mr. NYE.] I cannot use the fine language that he does, and I have not the imagination that he has. It is, though of course superior in quality, of the same kind with very much that I have heard for a great while; in fact ever since I have been here. Whenever anything of this sort was proposed to be undertaken, it was always said to be a matter of great enterprise and great sacrifice and great public spirit on the part of those that were subsidized. They never have their own interests view; they only seek to enlarge and increase the grandeur of the Republic! That is the case here undoubtedly. But let us look a little to see whether they are not sharp bargainers like ourselves—a little of the Yankee about them. Take this contract as it is in the law, and what is it? That they shall establish a monthly line and perform twelve round trips per year in a certain direction and touching at certain ports. Now, the Senator says, rapidity is everything, and they want to be released from the contract to touch at Honolulu because they can go quicker; but where is the contract to have more than a monthly line and more than twelve round trips a year? That is all conveniently left out, so that in fact when we pass this measure we have simply released them from their obligation to touch at Honolulu, and they then stand upon their original contract for the twelve round trips and nothing more, and are not bound to go a particle faster or arrive any quicker or do anything more.

Mr. CONNESS. My friend will allow me to suggest that there was no contract requiring the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to carry the mails oftener than semi-monthly between New York and Aspinwall, Panama and San Francisco, but the company put on an additional number of ships there without any requirement by contract to do so, and now carry the mails tri-monthly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is because it pays them to do so, and there are rival lines competing with them. Now this question is whether this trade will pay. We do not know. This proposition is simply that we shall surrender a part of the contract and get nothing in return. The Senators talk largely and liberally about what these contractors want to do. They say the company will increase their speed, that time is everything. But what is time to them in comparison with their own particular interests, unless there is the competition of some rival line, or something of that sort? Sir, it is nothing but the modest proposition that we shall give up a large and important part of our contract and not ask them in return to do anything more than they contracted to do before, so that if it is perfectly convenient and profitable for them to go quicker they will do so; not otherwise.

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator; but I desire to suggest that they have a stronger inducement than might be at first supposed to make the time. They have no trade now, and unless they make quicker time than the English and French they never will get any.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The English and French do not go from this side.

Mr. STEWART. They go from the Isthmus.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They do not go from this side and will not be likely to go by steamship.

Mr. STEWART. That does not alter the case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am talking to sensible men as I trust and know. Gentlemen speak about "inducements." The amount of it is you give up the money and give up the bargain and rely upon "inducements." If they can do it and will do it, put it in the bond, and do not talk about inducements.

Mr. CONNESS. They have more than put it in the bond.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How?

Mr. CONNESS. By building greater ships and more costly ones than were required.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Who asked them to build greater ships? They do it simply because they think they can make more money by it, because they will carry more goods. Our contract is that they shall build ships equal to a certain amount of power. If they build larger ones it is because they think they can make more money by so doing; it is for their own benefit. But now they come in here and ask us to give up a large portion, an important portion of the contract on our side, when they do not promise or pledge themselves or intimate in any shape or form that they will do the service one hour quicker, but we leave it to them to do it or not, according to their own interests; and the honorable Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] talks to me about the inducements they will have to do it. Let us have the inducements of the contract; that is what I want to rely upon. If it is so that they will do it quicker, do it better, put that in the contract, and let us not, like unwise men, when we have agreed to give a half million dollars a year to perform a certain service, give up half the service on the representation to us that then, when we have given up half the service and give them all the money, they will be under "inducements" to go quicker. The inducement will depend on whether they can make money by it. I have yet to see the first company in this country or any other country that put the honor of their country in relation to trade ahead of the money that went into their own pockets. If there is such a company I should like to have any Senator name it. If they can succeed and do credit to the country and at the same time make it profitable, very well; but if they cannot make it profitable, if it is a losing game, they cannot afford to uphold the honor and commercial interests of the country out of their own pockets, and will not attempt to do it. If the argument of the honorable Senator from California is well founded, let it be put into this bill which he proposes to pass that they may have the privilege of not touching at Honolulu, provided they will make a certain time, and then we shall have some security; but not give it up on the ground simply that thereby we furnish them an inducement to make certain time because the inducement will depend upon circumstances that we cannot foresee.

Mr. STEWART. Upon this question of inducement I just want to say a word. In the first place, the inducement on the part of the Government of the United States to pay this subsidy was in order to start a trade with China. That was the principal inducement to us. The company, in order to carry out the plan, have built larger ships than were anticipated or required by the contract. The subsidy does very little toward paying for those ships or paying for running them. The subsidy is a very small matter compared with the whole expense of the company. Their remuneration for the most part must come from the trade that they are to build up. If they can build up a trade it will be a good speculation; otherwise your subsidy will be of very little account, and the whole thing will be a failure; it will be a great loss of money. Your $500,000 in currency will go very little toward running these enormous ships on the Pacific ocean. Their reward consists in their success. To secure that success we make the appropriation. If the trade can be built up, and the line can be a success for ten years, we then have the trade established and they need no further subsidy. The question with them, whether they will make or lose money, is a question of success or failure. They have gone to work like men in order to induce success. They have built larger ships than the contract required so that they can carry more coal. Doing this heavy business from China to our coast is an experiment to some extent. The gentlemen who have made this contract have met the question in a very liberal spirit. If they make it a success they will pay back more than tenfold the bounty we give them. If it shall be a failure, we lose our subsidy. If they make it a success, they will be enriched by it and the Government will be benefited. If it be a failure, they will lose money by it and the Government will not be benefited.

They having gone to work in this admirable spirit, and their success depending upon speed, as they have to compete with other lines, it seems to me but just that we should meet them in the same spirit. Their interest and ours being identical, their reward and our reward depending upon the success of the enterprise, and the success of the enterprise depending upon the speed with which they can carry the goods, it seems to me we have a sufficient guarantee. Gentlemen speak of twelve round trips. Twelve round trips may be sufficient. They may make twelve round trips; but if they can make them in a less number of days you get goods here quicker, and they certainly will make them in a less number of days if they are not sent out of their course so as to consume eight or ten days additional time. You do not want any more trips; twelve trips are enough. The only thing is to carry the goods more rapidly than they can be carried in other steamships, either English or French. That is what we are making this expenditure for, and that is the way the investment is to benefit the country, and that is the way this enterprise is to benefit them. As the interest of the Government and the interest of the contractors is identical, why cannot we leave this matter to them? Of all the companies that have tried to navigate the ocean, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company is the best. It has been the most honest monopoly, if it has been a monopoly. While Vanderbilt upon this side was slaughtering his hundreds by starvation and privations and overcrowded ships, they had large floating palaces, where they were much more costly, and the people of California are much attached to them and feel very much obliged to them. You gave a medal to Vanderbilt. I wish I had been in the Senate at the time to protest against it. While he on this side was carrying on his monopoly to prey upon mankind, this company in the far Pacific was having its floating palaces and looking to the comfort of every man. If it is a monopoly, it is a generous, noble monopoly, that the people love. It has undertaken this work in its usual enterprising spirit, and if we meet it half way it will always respond. It has got a history of fifteen years that is a noble history. This company can be trusted; and trusting to the generosity of Congress, it went to work and built ships larger than were required by a thousand tons burden, expecting that this generosity and enterprise would be met in a liberal spirit.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator must adjourn the Senate, I hope there will be a short executive session; but I would very much prefer that the Senator should not take this course on this measure, but let us come to a vote.

Mr. HENDRICKS, and others. Finish this resolution.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not know what the Senator from California alludes to by saying "the Senator should take this course." I do not want to avoid a vote on this bill, but it is now half past four o'clock, and it is the ordinary time for the Senate to adjourn—past that time—and I make the motion for that reason. I am ready to vote on the bill to-night.

Mr. CONNESS. What I meant when I said "take this course" and "adjourn the Senate," was to adjourn action on this measure. I presumed that was his object; but I shall not object so much to going into executive session as to adjourning.

Mr. GRIMES. I am willing. I move, then, that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 2, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions on leave for reference to appropriate committees, not to be brought back into the House by motions to reconsider, beginning with the State of Maine.

PUNISHMENT OF BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION.

Mr. LYNCH introduced a bill to protect the public credit and prevent bribery and corruption; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GUARDIAN SOCIETY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Guardian Society and provide for reforming juvenile offenders in the District of Columbia;" also, an act entitled "An act granting certain privileges to the Guardian Society, District of Columbia;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CANAL IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BIDWELL introduced a bill to aid in the construction of a canal in the counties of Tehama, Colusa, Yola, and Solano, State of California; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LIEUTENANT HENRY C. PEARSON.

Mr. COFFROTH introduced a bill for the relief of Lieutenant Henry C. Pearson; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SAMUEL S. GREENE.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill for the relief of Samuel S. Greene, late lieutenant of the third Pennsylvania volunteer cavalry; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions having been concluded, the next business in order during the morning hour is the call of States and Territories for resolutions.

PROTECTION OF UNIONISTS SOUTH.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the call for the previous question upon a preamble and resolution submitted on last Monday by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PERHAM,] action upon which was suspended by the close of the morning hour.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas Captain John E. Bryant, recently of the county of Oxford, in the State of Maine, was, a few weeks since, brutally assaulted and his life greatly endangered in the streets of Augusta, Georgia, by a citizen of that State, because, as is reported, of the efforts the said Bryant had made for the elevation of the colored people of that State and the part he bore in a movement to decorate with flowers the graves of the soldiers who fell in the defense of the Union cause; and whereas it is reported that Captain C. C. Richardson, of the same county of Oxford, was, on the 12th instant, attacked at Thomasville, Georgia, by a man named Lightfoot, by whom he had been ordered to leave the town, and shot through the neck and hand; and whereas both of these gentlemen served the country with distinguished ability and bravery during the war, and are now entitled to the protection due to American citizens in the State of Georgia, which they assisted in saving to the country by their valor, and in which they are attempting to establish themselves in the practice of their profession and make their future homes; and whereas similar cases to those recited above are understood to be of frequent occurrence in the States lately in rebellion, thus rendering it extremely hazardous for northern men to attempt to settle there; and whereas the Richmond Examiner, a paper published in Richmond, Virginia, and receiving the patronage of the Administration, being one of the papers designated to publish the laws of Congress, in its issue of May 4, 1866, used the following language:

"THE SHRIEK OF COWARDS.—No better proof of the dastardly nature of the 'loyalists' could be found than their evident trepidation when left without protecting bayonets. We hear a cry of alarm at Staunton. The Union men are afraid of their own shadows if a Federal soldier is not at hand to reassure them. They have guilty consciences that oppress them heavily, and they will not find peace and quiet until they confess and repent. We assure the authorities at Washington that secessionists are not such asses as to expose themselves to further hardships by their own acts, and the shriek of cowards at Staunton is more a call for greater oppression of the true Virginians than for a protection of the lion-hearted Unionists. The fact is, that when the blue uniforms are withdrawn the 'loyalists' have nobody to keep them in countenance, nobody to associate with, and they feel very like they had got into the wrong pew. Let them seek congenial society elsewhere if they do not like the contempt of the honest and respectable throughout the South. We are not likely to pay them any respect if they live among us a thousand years."

And whereas the spirit of the foregoing extract appears to predominate in the States referred to, and the citizens of those States who continued loyal to the Government during the war, and especially those who served in the Union Army, are insultingly proscribed and excluded from social and political privileges: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this House whether the personal rights of citizens of the United States are at present sufficiently protected in said States, and whether any further legislation is necessary to clothe him with sufficient authority to protect all the loyal citizens of the States recently in rebellion in the enjoyment of their constitutional rights.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise to a question of order. My point of order is that the resolution relates to what is called in this House "reconstruction," and is intended to prevent a restoration of the Union, and that it should therefore go to the committee on that subject.

The SPEAKER. The rule in regard to the reference of papers to the committee on reconstruction provides that—

"All papers which may be offered relative to the representation of the late so-called confederate States of America or either of them shall be referred to the joint committee of fifteen without debate."

The Chair does not see that the resolution comes within the terms of this rule, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. FINCK. I raise another point of order. I understand that this is a resolution calling for executive information.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FINCK. Then I object to its consideration, until it has lain over one day under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has lain over one week. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LE BLOND. When the resolution was presented last Monday, the morning hour expired before it had even been read.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. LE BLOND. And it passed over by reason of that fact.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I think the point of my colleague [Mr. FINCK] is well taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the rule read, which will show that the decision of the Chair is correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Such resolutions as call for information from the President or heads of Departments are required by Rule 53 to lie on the table one day."

The SPEAKER. This resolution has lain on the table one week.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Was the resolution introduced?

The SPEAKER. The resolution was introduced. At the time the gentleman from Maine rose and presented the resolution his right to offer it accrued.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Was not the resolution offered subject to objection, and did not the morning hour expire before the resolution was actually received by the House?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour expired before the reading of the resolution was concluded; but it was entered in full upon the Journal, it having been offered, although not fully read.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. But was not the right to object at that time reserved? Was the resolution, in fact, introduced?

The SPEAKER. The right to object, when reserved, is reserved under Rule 53, which provides that unanimous consent shall be necessary for the consideration of a resolution calling for executive information on the day on which it is offered. The object of this rule is that such a resolution shall not be suddenly precipitated upon the House for action without an opportunity being allowed to consider the propriety of making the call for information. A week has elapsed since this resolution was offered. It has been printed in the "Order of Business," was entered on the Journal, and read as part of the Journal on last Tuesday, and was also printed in full in the Globe. Hence the object of the rule has been attained.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I see that I do not make myself understood in the point which I desire to raise. It is this: that the resolution was offered to the House conditionally, not for the purpose of lying over under the rule, but for the purpose of being acted on at the time, subject to objection reserved. The morning hour having expired before the reading of the resolution was concluded, the resolution, as I hold, was not received.

The SPEAKER. The State of Maine having been regularly called for resolutions, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PERHAM] had the right to offer a resolution. This resolution was offered by him; and while it was being read the morning hour expired. The resolution has lain over one week, while the rule only requires that it shall lie over one day. The object of the rule has been fully accomplished. The Chair rules, therefore, that the resolution cannot be required to lay over again.

Mr. FINCK. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine to make his resolution a little more extensive and include in it an inquiry whether a few days ago, in the State of New York, a brutal assault was not made by a father upon his child, resulting in the death of the child.

Mr. PERHAM. I suppose the resolution might have been made more extensive. I hold in my hand a statement of wrongs and outrages committed on Union men, which would make a man whose face was made of copper blush with shame.

Mr. HALE. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HALE. Is the question divisible?

The SPEAKER. It is; and the question will first be on the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 20; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. PERHAM and Mr. ELDRIDGE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes seventy, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered to be put.

The preamble and resolution were then adopted.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble and resolution were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OFFICIAL STENOGRAPHER FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the Speaker be authorized to appoint, until otherwise ordered, a competent stenographer as assistant official reporter to the committees of the House, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, commencing 1st of May, 1866, the same compensation paid to such official reporter, and who may also be assigned by the Speaker to report other proceedings of the House.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, is not this resolution in clear violation of that clause of the Constitution which prohibits legislation impairing the validity of contracts? There was a contract over which there was some talk early in the present session, and this resolution is in the very teeth of that contract.

The SPEAKER. Questions arising out of constitutional obligations must be decided by the House.

Mr. HALE. I hope the gentleman from Maine will not press the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Let me explain for a moment. There is no question about the justice of this resolution. To be sure this reporter was appointed at a salary of $3,600 per annum, but in consequence of the number of committees making investigations, requiring stenographers, he has already been compelled to employ and pay assistants, doing work which, under the old rates, would amount to more than $12,000. This reporter has been away at Memphis with one of the committees of the House, and has been compelled to appoint several stenographers to take minutes before the committees sitting in this city. This assistant is needed, and I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his opposition.

Mr. HALE. Send this to the Committee of Accounts and let them report on it, and I have no objection. I have a page of the Congressional Globe containing the discussion here in January last on this subject, showing that a formal contract was entered into.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I send to the Clerk's desk a statement which I ask to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The reporting of committee proceedings has grown and is growing to large proportions. The work done this session by the official reporter and by assistants employed by him would amount, at the usual rates, to about twelve thousand dollars. During the time he was necessarily absent at Memphis, by order of the House, the business of the committees was assigned to a gentleman who had to employ as many as six assistants at a time. This resolution goes back for two months in order to give compensation to one of those reporters for that time. There have been no less than sixteen committees requiring the services of the stenographer this session. Some of them will take testimony during the recess, and several months will be occupied by the reporters in indexing and supervising the publication of the immense amount of testimony taken by committees this session."

Mr. WARD. What is the compensation this reporter now gets?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Three thousand six hundred and fifty dollars per annum.

Mr. WARD. The question arose before the Committee of Accounts whether they would recommend that this office be abolished. That gentleman appeared before the committee and assured us there was necessity for such reporters, and agreed if we would allow him to continue, and would not make such a recommendation as we proposed, he would do all the reporting for the committees and ask for no other pay or assistance.

Mr. ROLLINS. For how long a time is this assistant authorized?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. The time is not limited.

Mr. ROLLINS. It provides for an additional reporter for an indefinite length of time. Now, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this reporter was paid from March 4, 1865, to the first Monday of the following December at the rate of $3,650 a year for which he did no labor; and so it will be from the 4th of next March till the meeting of the subsequent Congress.

In voting upon this resolution, if the House decide to adopt it, I only desire that they shall take these facts into consideration and make such limitations upon this resolution as they may deem proper. I think there has been a large amount of labor performed, and I remember when this matter was up for consideration I assured the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] that this would be the last of the matter. I have been examining the amount of labor performed, and it is larger than I anticipated, and I am not quite certain but what some relief should be granted. I do not feel clear upon this subject. I have not sufficiently examined into the matter. If it is as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] represents, perhaps some additional relief should be granted. But I do think this subject should be thoroughly inquired into before this resolution is passed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. ROLLINS. I would like to ventilate this subject further.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to say a word.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I will yield.

Mr. CONKLING. I have been referred to by the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] and I would like to bear one word of testimony on this subject. When the resolution providing for a stenographer was proposed originally I doubted very seriously the propriety of passing it, and I suggested then the probability that the business of the reporter would far exceed the limits contemplated by the resolution, and that additional appropriations or additional provisions would be necessary. Now, sir, that contingency has arisen sooner than I expected it would, and to an extent far greater than I supposed. It may be, as the gentleman from New Hampshire suggests, that the resolution needs to be guarded somewhat as to time. If so it can be modified.

But I want to say, what I am enabled to say, as a matter of fact from the observation I have given to this subject. It has been my fortune, whether good or bad, to be compelled to be absent from the House for some weeks, much of the time attending the sessions of one of the committees, and the difficulty of providing a stenographer for that and for other committees which have been in session has led me to observe somewhat the condition of the business of reporting for the House, and I have no hesitation in saying that an amount of work has been required already of the official reporter exceeding altogether the amount of his pay, inasmuch that nothing could be more inequitable than to require him to do the extraordinary amount of labor which he is compelled to do for the compensation provided in the original resolution. I have no doubt that treble, if not four times, the amount of labor contemplated by that resolution has already been thrown upon him, just as I supposed, only much sooner than I anticipated; and the time has come when, upon the principles of fair dealing, we ought either to release him from his contract or pass some such resolution as is now proposed. But if this is not guarded as to time let us guard it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear, the noise is so great.

Mr. CONKLING. I am aware of that; I can hardly hear myself. I was about to say that I am entirely clear that some provision by way of relief ought to be made, and my impression is that as we have already made this contract the easiest and most suitable way to correct the difficulty is to make some additional allowance, and if the resolution is amended so as to properly limit the time, I for one shall vote for it. As from the first I believed that some relief would be necessary, so now I am confirmed in that belief.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to refer this resolution to the Committee of Accounts?

The SPEAKER. Not while the call for the previous question is pending.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Will it be in order to move to lay it on the table?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. RADFORD. I rise to a point of order, that this question is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. WARD. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would inquire of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] if it is intended to provide now for a stenographer for the vacation.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I will say to the gentleman that there is no doubt that there will be several committees authorized to take testimony during the recess. I will state further, for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JOHNSON,] that the passage of this resolution for this additional compensation will, for the present session, save the Government $5,000—yes, nearly twice $5,000—of the amount which would be required under the old system of contracts.

Mr. JOHNSON. But the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] has not answered my question.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, except by unanimous consent, pending the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Then I object to debate.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 68, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Benjamin, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Cobb, Cullom, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hayes, Johnson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, McCullough, McKee, Moorhead, Phelps, Radford, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, and Whaley—58.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Barker, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Conkling, Cook, Davis, Dixon, Donnelly, Briggs, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketchum, Ladin, Longyear, Lynch, McClurg, Mercer, Mercur, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Robert T. Van Horn, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—68.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Culver, Darling, Dawes, DeForest, Delano, Farnsworth, Goodyear, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Jenekes, Jones, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McIndoe, Morris, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, Sawyer, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Taylor, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Winfield, and Wright—56.

So the resolution was not laid on the table.

The question recurred upon the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] to yield to me to move an amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I cannot yield for any such purpose.

Mr. WARD. I desire to inquire of the Chair if the adoption of this resolution would not re-instate that man as a reporter of the Globe.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate.

Mr. ANCONA. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] will modify the resolution so as to leave out the last clause I will not object to it so much.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to refer this resolution to the Committee of Accounts.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order pending the call for the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the call for the previous question; and upon a division, there were—yeas 42, noes 58.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. RICE, of Maine, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICE, of Maine, and Mr. ANCONA, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 42, noes 59.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend the resolution by striking out these words at the close:

"and who may also be assigned by the Speaker to report other proceedings of the House."

And upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. WARD. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ANCONA] withdraw the call for the previous question for a moment?

Mr. ANCONA. I will withdraw the call for a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. WARD. Then I make that motion. I think all these subjects should be referred to that committee for investigation, in order that we may fully understand what we are called to vote upon.

Mr. ANCONA. I call the previous question on the motion to refer.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the next business in order the consideration of resolutions on which debate had arisen, and which had lain over under the rule.

TRANSPORTATION FROM THE WEST.

The first resolution was the following, offered on the 2d of April by Mr. RAYMOND:

Resolved, by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a commission of five persons be appointed by the President of the United States to consider and report to Congress at its next session upon the necessity of some more speedy, cheap, and reliable means of transportation between the western States and the Atlantic sea-board; and to submit some plan, whether by law or treaty, whereby the national Government can aid in providing for said necessity if it shall be found to exist: Provided, That said commissioners shall receive no compensation for their services, and no payment of any kind except for such traveling expenses as they may actually incur in discharging the duties imposed upon them by this resolution.

Mr. RAYMOND. If the House is ready to act upon this resolution at the present time, I have no objection to its being acted upon. But if it is to give rise to debate I prefer that it should lie over.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. RAYMOND. I will suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] that if there is serious objection to the resolution I prefer that it should lie over. I have no special interest in the matter. I supposed that the resolution would be adopted without any objection.

Mr. LE BLOND. I prefer that the resolution should lie over.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the resolution will lie over informally.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to inquire who is expected to maintain and support the officers provided for in the resolution if they are to receive no compensation for their services. Are outsiders to support them, or are they to support themselves?

Mr. RAYMOND. I will suggest to the gentleman a fact of which, perhaps, he is not aware, that there are in the United States gentlemen who are willing to render public service and pay their own expenses.

Mr. JOHNSON. Such gentlemen, I suppose, as we often see around the lobbies here.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The resolution is not before the House, having been laid over by unanimous consent.

RECOGNITION OF FENIAN BELLIGERENCY.

The next resolution lying over under the rule was the following, offered on the 4th of June by Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio:

Resolved, That whereas the recent successes which have attended the demonstrations of the Fenian organization, with the avowed purpose of liberating Ireland from the oppressive rule of Great Britain, according to the laws of nations as interpreted by British authorities, entitles said Fenian organization to be regarded with respect and as entitled to the rights of belligerents, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be requested to inquire into the propriety of recommending such action as may be proper to secure that object.

The resolution was not agreed to so.

DAMAGES BY REBELS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The next resolution lying over under the rule was the following, offered on the 11th of June by Mr. COFFROTH:

Whereas during the late civil war the sixteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania was invaded by the entire rebel army under General Lee, and which remained in said district about three weeks, and to repel and drive out the rebel forces the Army of the United States under the victorious General Meade was marched into said district, encamped and remained there during the great battle of Gettysburg, and the pursuit of the rebel army from the State of Pennsylvania; and whereas said district was once before thus invaded by General Stuart's rebel army, and once afterward by General McCausland's rebel army; that during these invasions the personal property of the citizens of said district was taken and carried away, and their houses burned and other property destroyed; Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee of Claims be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of appointing commissioners, with such restrictions as the committee deem proper, to ascertain what damages the citizens of said district have suffered, with a view to enforce legislation for the payment of the damages sustained.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that this resolution be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The resolution contemplates a reference to that committee. It provides that the committee be "instructed to inquire into the expediency," &c.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire that the resolution shall be referred without instructions.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to state to the House that the Legislature of Pennsylvania has already appropriated $500,000 for the relief of the people of the district referred to in the resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. A reference of this resolution to the Committee of Claims, without its adoption by the House, will carry the whole subject before the committee. I do not wish to have the House committed to anything contained in the resolution by adopting it. I am willing that the subject shall go to the committee for investigation. I demand the previous question.

Mr. McKEE. I want to oppose the motion to refer to the Committee of Claims and to move that it be laid upon the table. That committee has already had that subject under consideration, claims coming from the sixteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania, and we have voted uniformly against allowing claims growing out of the ravages of war.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. McKEE. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS OF WAR OF 1812.

The SPEAKER stated the next business was the following preamble and resolution, submitted by Mr. MILLER June 18:

Whereas on the 22d of January last a bill entitled "A bill to grant pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812 with Great Britain" was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, on which no report has yet been made; and whereas the bill provides for giving pensions only to those who are in indigent circumstances, and as many of these old soldiers are now in abject poverty, and inasmuch as it is due to them as well as to the credit of the country that speedy action should be taken thereon: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and is hereby, requested to report said bill with an affirmative recommendation with as little delay as possible.

The subject having already been acted on the preamble and resolution were laid upon the table.

The morning hour expiring, the Speaker next proceeded to call the States for resolutions.

INCREASE OF SALARIES.

Mr. ROLLINS submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That all motions and resolutions for the increase of pay of officers and employees of the House be referred to the Committee of Accounts without debate.

FEMALE COLLEGES.

Mr. DEMING presented joint resolutions of the State of Connecticut, asking an appropriation of public lands for the establishment of female colleges in the several States; which were laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent to record my vote upon one of the important measures of the session. On the 15th day of June the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States came back to the House with Senate amendments. The question was taken and the House concurred in the Senate amendments. I desire to vote "ay" on the question of concurring.

There was no objection, and Mr. LAWRENCE'S vote was recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. JOHNSON, by unanimous consent, was allowed to record his vote in the negative, and Mr. BENJAMIN to record his vote in the affirmative on the same question.

REORGANIZATION OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, reported back Senate bill No. 283, to reorganize the clerical force of the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, with a substitute; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

FIRST REGIMENT MICHIGAN CAVALRY.

Mr. UPSON submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas it is represented in a recent communication from the Governor of the State of Michigan to the Secretary of War, that the officers and enlisted men of the first regiment Michigan cavalry, lately mustered out of the United States service in Utah, were wrongfully held in service for over six months, and in their payment on discharge only received commutation of mileage and subsistence, which gave them each only about one hundred and fifteen dollars to bear their expenses from Utah to their homes, while the necessary expenses of each man were over three hundred dollars; and that under all the circumstances attending their said detention in the service and discharge in Utah as aforesaid they have been subjected to unreasonable hardship and pecuniary loss of over two hundred dollars each, necessarily expended by them for transportation that should have been furnished by the Government: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into all the facts and circumstances relating to the alleged detention in the service of the officers and enlisted men of the said first regiment Michigan cavalry, and relating to their muster out and payment in Utah as aforesaid, and to report what allowance, if any should be made, to be paid to said officers and men as commutation of transportation from Utah to Michigan as aforesaid, or what compensation further should be allowed and paid them in any other manner.

ELLEN SANDERSON.

Mr. MORRILL obtained the floor.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. MORRILL. I do yield on condition the gentleman's proposition does not give rise to debate.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I ask unanimous consent to report back House bill No. 275, for the relief of Ellen Sanderson, widow of Colonel John P. Sanderson, the provost marshal general of Missouri.

Mr. BENJAMIN objected.

Mr. ROUSSEAU moved to suspend the rules for the purpose indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was received and read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Ellen Sanderson, widow of the late Colonel John P. Sanderson, late provost marshal general of the department of Missouri, $10,000 as compensation for special labor and services in detecting and exposing organized conspiracies in the loyal States against the Government of the United States.

Mr. ROUSSEAU demanded the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS asked that the report of the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill No. 275, entitled "A bill for the relief of Ellen Sanderson, widow of John P. Sanderson, the provost marshal general of Missouri," have had that subject under consideration, and have directed me to return the same to the House, and recommend its passage in the following report:

Colonel J. P. Sanderson, thirteenth United States infantry, was assigned to duty as provost marshal department of Missouri, on the 4th of March, 1864. Soon thereafter he obtained information from various sources of the existence of a secret organization in the State of Missouri, which had been instituted by the rebel General Price, the object being to supply his army with the necessary munitions of war. About the same time he was also informed that this secret organization not only existed in Missouri but in nearly all of the western States. It was called the "Order of American Knights," and its true object was to so embarrass, by every possible means, the Government in its attempt to suppress the rebellion, that they might succeed in establishing a northwestern confederacy and thereby also secure to the southern States their independence. The importance of a thorough investigation and exposure was apparent, and, with the approval of the commanding general, a number of detectives were employed by Colonel Sanderson to ferret it out.

These detectives were at first set to operate in the city of St. Louis, and the information already received was more than confirmed by their statements. They reported that the order had been established in nearly every county in the western States, and that its object was really the formation of a northwestern confederacy; that the membership thereof exceeded in number half a million men, and nearly two thirds of whom were armed; that the order had its grand commander, State commanders, and other subordinate officers; that the members were sworn to obey the orders of their superior officers, no matter what the nature of the order might be; and that the membership was daily increasing, and arms were being furnished as rapidly as possible for the use of those without them.

Desiring to be still further informed and to know whether the representations made by the members in St. Louis were correct, several detectives were in May, 1864, sent by Colonel Sanderson on tours of inspection; one through Missouri, another through Illinois, and another through the States of Ohio and Indiana, a sufficient number of the detectives remaining on duty in St. Louis.

Daily reports were received from these detectives, giving in full the result of their observations; and though at different points from each other, their reports corroborated each other and verified the previous representations. They reported that the order existed in each of those States. The membership in Missouri was thirty thousand men; in Illinois one hundred and twenty-five thousand men; in Indiana one hundred thousand men; in Ohio the same; in Kentucky about twenty-five thousand men; and about thirty thousand men in the balance of the western States. After awhile they reported that the name of the order had been changed from that of "American Knights" to the "Sons of Liberty"; that most of the members were armed; and that unless prompt and decisive action was taken on the part of the Government by exposing both the order and its principles, their success in building up a northwestern confederacy could not be prevented.

All the information which had been received by Colonel Sanderson relative to this order was carefully compiled and transmitted by him, with a report thereon, to the commanding general about the middle of June, 1864. This report was forwarded by the latter to President Lincoln for his action. In the early part of July, 1864, an abstract of that report and its accompanying documents was made by Colonel Sanderson and furnished to the press, which, with the exposure made at Indianapolis about the same time, completely destroyed the effectiveness of the order. For several weeks after the completion of his first report, a large amount of additional information had accumulated, which was also forwarded with a report to the commanding general. This, together with the first report, covered over a ream of foolscap paper, besides embracing considerable printed matter. Knowing that strict secrecy was essential to the success of this investigation, he took upon himself, in addition to his regular duties as provost marshal general, the superintending of the investigation. To prevent suspicion against his detectives, who were generally supposed to be rebels, their reports were made either late at night or very early in the morning, so that they could not be seen entering the provost marshal general's office. From the middle of March until July there were constantly several detectives on duty in St. Louis, and it was generally midnight before their reports were made and written out by Colonel Sanderson. Their reports were then taken by him the same evening for the inspection of the commanding general, and after a consultation for one, two, and even three hours, and the plans for the next day agreed upon, he returned to his office to rest, obtaining very seldom over four hours' sleep. About the time that his first report was finished his health gradually began to fail, and he was advised by his physician and his associate officers to accept of a proffered leave of absence, or, if he would not do that, to give up the night work which he was performing. He would not accept the leave, and remained at his post, still continuing his evening labors, though constantly remonstrated with for doing so.

His evenings, after the finishing of his report, were devoted to collecting and arranging that portion of the testimony which could be used against those persons who had been arrested in Missouri at their trial before a military commission.

By the 1st of September, 1864, he had collected such testimony as was necessary, and had commenced preparing the charges against these parties, when he was taken so ill as to prevent him continuing his work, and he was carried from his office to his residence, at which place he had remained but one night since his investigation of the conspiracy. What little medical skill could then do was promptly done, yet it was apparent to all that the continuous night labor performed by him in addition to his daily duties, from the beginning of March till September, had so shattered his constitution that not even medical assistance could be of any avail. He gradually became weaker and weaker from that time until the middle of October, 1864, when his system yielded to the heavy burden, and he died.

No one doubted that he lost his life in this great effort to save his Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to allow me three minutes on this question.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I will yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to say that I knew John P. Sanderson for many years. When this proposition came before the House asking, as it did, for an appropriation for his widow, I was not disposed to object. But since it has taken a course which is evidently for political and partisan purposes, I protest against the abuse of the courtesy of this side of the House that has been taken advantage of here in this debate, and I now say that which I would not otherwise have said since the death of Colonel Sanderson, but which I feel due to myself and to others to say, that whatever he may have done in Missouri, he was a man of bad character in Pennsylvania, and I have no faith in the batch of statements made by him. The records at Harrisburg relative to the election of United States Senator in 1855, show that he was there as an outsider, a borer, and was corruptly employed by different parties for the same office, and robbed one man of $3,000. That was his character then, and when his statements are lugged in here after his death by his friends, apparently to accomplish a political purpose, although I who knew him well would be willing that his ashes should rest in peace, I will not allow such injustice as this to be perpetrated upon an organization throughout the country to which I belong. I want that, sir, to go upon the record.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me a moment?

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENS. I merely wish to say that I believe all that has been said by my colleague, and I would move to lay the bill on the table, but I do not wish to take advantage of the courtesy of the gentleman.

Mr. McKEE. I would like to inquire whether while Colonel Sanderson was provost marshal general of the State of Missouri he did not receive his regular pay as an officer of the Army, and whether his widow is not now allowed a pension by law.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I suppose he received his pay. But I wish to say to my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JOHNSON,] who says that this report is made for political purposes, that I wrote the report myself, and I got the data from the report of Colonel Sanderson in the case to which reference is made. But nothing was further from my mind than that this should have any political effect, and I do hope that no man on this side of the House will claim any affinity with the infamous order referred to. I cannot see how it is possible that any gentleman on this or the other side should take exception to this reference. The report refers to the order of the Sons of Liberty, an infamous order that I believe no man on this floor ever thought of having any connection with. As to the question of my colleague, [Mr. McKEE,] I suppose Colonel Sanderson received his regular pay, but this is for extraordinary services, such as were never rendered in this country by any man before.

Mr. JOHNSON. One single word. I want to say that I know nothing of the particular organization called the Golden Circle or the Sons of Liberty, but I know that the Democratic party, to which I belong, was charged, in a general way, with being controlled by that organization; therefore, I take it that this is a fling at that party, after the old style, gotten up under pretense of appropriating a sum of money to a woman and a widow.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I sometimes vote with the Democratic party, and I hope no man who has any sort of respect for that party will take any offense at anything said in this report.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Kentucky must be aware that I did not yield for debate, but only on the condition that the matter should give rise to no debate. I therefore hope he will not press the passage at this time.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I demand the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. Does not the widow get a pension?

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I think not; I am not certain.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

Mr. STEVENS. I prefer not to do so.

Mr. HALE. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 72, not voting 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Baxter, Benjamin, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Dawson, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hulburd, Humphrey, Johnson, Kerr, Latham, William Lawrence, Le Blond, McCullough, McKee, Morrill, Niblack, Perham, Pike, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Washburne, Williams, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—52.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 79, not voting 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Banks, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Eekley, Eggleston, Garfield, Griswold, Hart, Hayes, Asahel W. Washburne, Welker, Windom, and Wright—46.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SELECT JOINT COMMITTEE ON RETRENCHMENT.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following preamble and resolution for consideration at this time:

Whereas the financial condition of the United States demands the exercise of a rigid economy in all departments of the Government in order to sustain the credit of the United States, and to relieve the people at the earliest possible day from the burden of existing taxation; and whereas there is reason to believe that in many departments of the Government civil abuses have for a long time existed and still exist, in the perpetuation of useless offices and sinecures, in extravagant salaries and allowances, and in other unnecessary and wasteful expenditures:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint select committee be appointed, to consist of two members of the Senate and three members of the House, to be styled the joint select committee on retrenchment; that said committee be instructed to inquire into the expenditures in all the branches of the civil service of the United States, and report whether any and what offices ought to be abolished, whether any and what salaries or allowances ought to be reduced, and generally how and to what extent the expenses of the civil service of the country may and ought to be curtailed; that said committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, and to report by bill or otherwise; and that said committee may appoint a clerk for the term of six months and no more.

Mr. ANCONA objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. JOHNSON renewed the objection, but subsequently withdrew it.

The resolution was then agreed to.

ASSESSING POST OFFICE CLERKS.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to inform the House by virtue of what order or provision of law the postmaster at Philadelphia has assessed upon each of his employes a tax equal to one and one half per cent. on the annual salary of each of said employes, and is proceeding to collect the same.

Mr. ROSS. I object, unless the resolution is referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

RAILROAD TO PORTLAND, OREGON.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Public Lands Senate bill No. 123, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad in California to Portland, in Oregon," with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and moved that the bill and amendment be ordered to be printed and be recommitted to the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. PAINE. I desire to give notice that tomorrow, after the morning hour, I will call up the report of the Committee of Elections upon the contested election of Fuller vs. Dawson.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD, EASTERN DIVISION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill explanatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864.

Mr. STEVENS. Does the gentleman from Iowa propose to introduce this bill for action at the present time?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman is willing to introduce the bill and allow it to lie over and be printed, so that we may offer any amendments which may be necessary and fix any day, I do not care how early, for its consideration, I shall not object; otherwise I must.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I propose to introduce a bill which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] promised that he and his friends would support. I desire that the bill may be taken up now and acted on.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know that this is such a bill as the gentleman states. I only want to have an opportunity to examine it and see what it is. I do not desire that a bill, the effect of which we do not know, shall be passed in this way.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would not allow any time the other day for the examination of his bill.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman insists on the consideration of the bill at this time, I object to its introduction.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to suspend the rules to allow me to introduce the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays. I again say that I have no objection to the introduction of the bill if the gentleman will let it lie over for one day.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the bill be received, I am willing that it should go over till to-morrow, if we can have an agreement by which it shall be considered as a special order.

Mr. STEVENS. That will suit me. The SPEAKER. If the bill be postponed until to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal, it will take precedence of the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That will suit me. The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be introduced, ordered to be printed, and postponed until to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, in which it was announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate bills of the following titles:

An act (S. No. 221) relating to the lands granted to the State of Minnesota to aid in constructing railroads;

An act (S. No. 156) making an additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota in alternate sections to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State;

An act (S. No. 58) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Corvallis to the Aquina bay; and

An act (S. No. 99) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Albany, Oregon, to the western boundary of said State.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867; and an act (H. R. No. 613) to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

It further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 93) for the appointment of a commission to examine and report on certain claims of the State of Iowa;

An act (S. No. 81) for the relief of Jas. Pool;

An act (S. No. 352) granting to A. Sutro the right of way and granting other privileges to aid in the construction of a draining and exploring tunnel to Comstock lode, in the State of Nevada; and

An act (S. No. 402) to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clark and Samuel Ward Clark to certain lands in the State of Florida, claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government.

It further announced the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, the first without and the others with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 725) to provide for the payments of the sixth, eighth, and eleventh regiments of Ohio volunteer militia of Cincinnati, Bard's company of cavalry, and Paulsen's battery, during the time they were in the service of the United States in 1862;

An act (H. R. No. 557) to quiet the title to certain lands within the corporate limits of the city of Benicia; and

An act (H. R. No. 448) to authorize the construction of a railroad through certain lands of the United States in Kansas.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SCOFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, to strike out on page 24, in line two hundred and twenty-five, the words "on copper ore, fifteen per cent. ad valorem," on which Mr. BEAMAN was entitled to the floor.
